An extremely important first step would be a ban on nuclear tests for both peaceful and non-peaceful purposes -- something that the whole world is demanding and that the Soviet Union has been practicing since August last year.

DAGENS NYHETER: You say that in the short term we cannot do without nuclear power. Are you prepared to completely abolish nuclear power as a source of energy in the GDR?

Erich Honecker: As I said, nuclear power accounts for only 3 percent of our energy consumption. We are now investing in an expansion of it. But we are waiting for the detailed report from Chernobyl. We will study it and discuss the matter. I, myself, do not consider that nuclear power is the last word. But for countries which rely on nuclear power for 40 to 60 percent of their energy, it is, of course, something that is difficult to renounce.

But I can tell you that solar energy is not on the agenda for the GDR.

DAGENS NYHETER: Will the GDR suffer any economic harm as a result of the export losses after Chernobyl?

Erich Honecker: No. Our exports are not being affected.

We have been running checks here around the clock to measure the risks, but there appear to be no risks. We have been able to sell our vegetables and salad products. Salad and vegetables are washed. After all, at home there were six of us children, and Mother always rinsed the salad.

I heard Mikhail Gorbachev, when we met recently at the Warsaw Pact meeting, describe what tragedies were enacted when people understood that they could not return to their homes. From this -- what can happen when you cannot keep peaceful nuclear power under control -- one gets an idea of what could happen in a nuclear war.

DAGENS NYHETER: Does Sweden's democracy have any advantages over the GDR's political system?

Erich Honecker: As far as the relationship between our two countries is concerned, this question is of no importance. We are, as you know, in favor of close cooperation, regardless of the different types of social system. This is the basic prerequisite for successful cooperation between our countries and peoples.

I do not intend to try to convince you of the advantages of our political system.

In our political system, democracy is understood in its original meaning of the rule of the people, and it is being realized more and more. In the GDR the most important social task in politics is to motivate every citizen to take part in working, planning, and governing. The 8 June election results have again clearly shown what a great success this has been.

DAGENS NYHETER: How have the GDR's policies been influenced by the 27th CPSU Congress?

Erich Honecker: The 27th CPSU Congress was an event of international scope and influence. It has of course given considerable stimulus to the policies of our own party.

Let me mention just one example: The comprehensive program approved by the delegates to rid the world of all nuclear arms by the year 2000 and create a system for international security produced a positive echo throughout the world.

This accords fully with our ideal of creating a world without weapons, and we will work actively to achieve this.

Together with the Soviet Union we will get to grips with major plans for the future as formulated in the long-term program for cooperation in the field of science, technology, and production through the year 2000. That is why we need peace above all else.

DAGENS NYHETER: During the Soviet and Czechoslovak party congresses there was much talk about inefficiency and the need for reforms. However, in your speech to the party congress in Berlin, you said that few countries have had such a positive trend for such a long time as the GDR. Does this mean that the GDR is in a better economic situation than the other socialist countries?

Erich Honecker: At the party congress, Mikhail Gorbachev and I discussed the problems we have in our respective countries. He stated clearly that, as in the past, the GDR currently finds itself in the thick of intensive economic development. It is not that we are cleverer than other poeople. The GDR is a small country with small resources, which is why we moved up to a greater intensity at an earlier stage, and that in turn has led to greater efficiency. If you compare us, not only with the socialist countries but with everyone, in the last few years we have had a 4 to 5 percent increase in national income.

DAGENS NYHETER: But has West Germany not played some part in this trend? It would be interesting to hear your comments.

Erich Honecker: I do not think so. You could also put it another way: Does the Federal Republic not benefit from its trade with the GDR? Some 70 percent of our trade is with the socialist countries, but the Federal Republic accounts for a large part of the remainder; our trade with it is now worth M15 or M16 billion.

We are now trying to push what we are good at: technical apparatus, such as Zeiss/Jena, chemical products, shipbuilding... coal mining and coal-processing. That is where we have the most modern methods in the world. We have now converted all our industries from oil to coal. Coal processing is our invention.

DAGENS NYHETER: But does the use of coal not bring with it greater environmental problems?

Erich Honecker: Environmental problems? Yes, they are of course greater than with nuclear energy. But we are happy that we opted for coal and not nuclear energy.

DAGENS NYHETER: You have long been planning to visit West Germany, but so far this visit has not happened. As recently as April the summer seemed to be a reasonable time for it. When will the visit take place?

Erich Honecker: My visit will take place when both sides have agreed on a suitable date -- suitable for talks on both international and bilateral questions.

DAGENS NYHETER: What circumstances would make normal relations possible between the GDR and West Germany? How would you describe normal relations?

Erich Honecker: In GDR-West German relations, the overshadowing question is guaranteeing peace. Some of this has already been achieved. I would describe normal relations as those that are based on the principles of international law, that are mutually beneficial, and that above all ensure peace.

In this connection I am thinking of the Basic Treaty and many other international legal agreements between the GDR and the Federal Republic. However, there is much work still to be done before such conditions are created and war can never again emanate from German soil -- only peace. The GDR is ready for this.

The 12 March 1985 joint declaration issued by myself and Federal Chancellor Helmut Kohl on the inviolability of existing borders and on respect for the integrity and sovereignty of all European states within their present borders is a step in the right direction.

DAGENS NYHETER: We cannot return to Sweden without asking the question: On what terms could you demolish the Berlin Wall?

Erich Honecker: I have an old answer: When the circumstances which led to its being built no longer exist. There is a German proverb. The best man cannot live in peace if his nieghbor does not want it.

I do not mean to say anything bad about the West Berliners by this. They are well disposed toward us. But I am talking about politics.

I would like to stress expressly that in the last 15 years a great change has taken place. Some 2 million GDR citizens annually are allowed to travel to the West and 4 to 5 million people come to us from the West.

It is very clear that the traffic has increased and will continue to increase. This is detente, not confrontation, and it brings us closer together.

DAGENS NYHETER: The GDR sees itself as the bearer of the German socialist tradition. But now you are about to celebrate the 200th anniversary of Frederick the Great, and a few years ago you celebrated the memory of Luther. Do Prussia and Luther then form part of the GDR's historical inheritance?

Erich Honecker: Everything progressive in German history is part of the GDR's historical inheritance. We have now begun to view history in a new way. We were long opposed to the monarchy, which blocked the road to democratic developments. But once a republic has been declared, progressive features inevitably emerge in history. We have not forgotten that Frederick the Great maintained lively contacts with French Enlightenment figures.

As far as Luther is concerned, during the Reformation we were allied to the Swedes, although we have to regret that this happened during a war.

DAGENS NYHETER: In the current World Cup soccer competition, we have been told by East Germans that if the GDR is not taking part in matches they support West Germany. Do you do so too, Mr Honecker? Should we take this as a demonstration of German unity?

Erich Honecker: I do not think so. If you are a real soccer fan, you support the best team. I am unwilling to see this as a political demonstration. We are a people interested in sport, and we also show this at the Olympic Games. We are among those who have even been able to beat the U.S. superpower.

As far as soccer is concerned, you have to be very careful because there are many different views. My minister for state security particularly supports his team, which is called Dynamo (the police and military team in East Berlin).

DAGENS NYHETER: Mr Honecker, you have often stressed that the GDR is a peace-loving country working for international detente. What concrete results have you achieved so far?

Erich Honecker: The GDR has always worked for the reinforcement of those parts of European politics on which rests peaceful cooperation between states. Let me mention the system of European agreements, the agreements from Moscow, Warsaw, Prague, the four-power agreement on West Berlin, the Basic Treaty between the GDR and the Federal Republic, and the whole CSCE process.

With a realistic policy for reconciliation and mutual advantage, the GDR did everything in its power to work for the creation of these two latter agreements.

Similarly, we considered and consider it necessary to avoid everything which could create or increase tension, put a strain on relations between states, or even threaten security and in this way undermine peace.

We are in favor of businesslike dialogue. How would one otherwise, particularly in difficult times, be able to create mutual trust and help the policy of reason and realism to make a breakthrough?

Thus Palme's well-known proposal for the establishment of a zone in Europe free of battlefield nuclear weapons has an important place in the East-West dialogue. As in the past, the GDR supports this proposal and is prepared to make its territory available for its implementation. It is part of the comprehensive program for nuclear and conventional disarmament which the Warsaw Pact put forward in Budapest recently.

In their appeal to the NATO members, to all European countries for the reduction of fighting forces and conventional arms in Europe, as in the communique from the meeting of the Political Consultative Committee, our countries are pointing to the possibility of solving the important problems facing all mankind through practical disarmament measures under effective control.

We see these as an acceptable foundation for new results to benefit detente and peace.

DAGENS NYHETER: Mr Honecker, you are now 73 and have for many years occupied the highest offices in your country -- and that means hard work. It is said that you take part in sports to keep fit. May we ask how a typical working day of yours looks?

Erich Honecker: I get up at 0600, have breakfast, travel in to Berlin at 0745, and after that my calendar determines everything. Recently we have been busy with preparations for the party congress, and then we prepared the elections in the GDR. It is exhausting, but you also have to meet the people. Such a program keeps one young.

Recently I made a trip to Erfurt and Soemmerda, visited a farm, and went to Jena. Then I spent 2 days in Karl-Marx-Stadt (Honecker's own constituency). When I got home the work had been piling up, and we had meetings and the Politburo. I accredited new ambassadors. We also had talks with our allied parties here in the GDR and with the mass organizations.

DAGENS NYHETER: What is the nicest thing to do when you are not working?

Erich Honecker: The most pleasant thing -- to go out into the forest to relax and prepare for new tasks.

DAGENS NYHETER: You come from the Saarland in the west and now you rule the GDR. How do you imagine things look today in your birthplace of Neunkirchen?

Erich Honecker: Everyone thinks about the place where they were born. But you must remember that I lived there for one very short part of my life -- a mere 3 years. During the Hitler era, 1933-35, I was in many places in the so-called Third Reich; then I was 10 years in the "sanatorium," as you know. Of course I feel a sense of affinity with my birthplace, but there are other places where I have worked: the Ruhr, Wuerttemberg-Baden, Hessen, and Berlin. I now view myself as a Berliner!

DAGENS NYHETER: During your long life, in which you have witnessed many major changes, when were you most pessimistic and when did you feel most hope?

Erich Honecker: Pessimism is not in my nature. When I was arrested I did of course become a little despondent about the future. At the time I could not predict how things would go and what other forces would emerge. But I have to say that I have stood up to things. Worst, of course, were the bombings over Berlin. At that time I was in a death squad working as roofers. We were lucky enough not to be hit.

No, my basic outlook is optimistic, otherwise you just could not stand things. Everyone has serious thoughts, but I would not described them as pessimism.

'AUTHORITIES' DENY SOLDIER KILLED DURING ESCAPE

LD262033 East Berlin ADN International Service in German 1629 GMT 26 Jun 86

[Text] Berlin, 26 Jun (ADN) — It has been stated by the relevant authorities that the AP report about an alleged escape attempt by a soldier of the GDR border troops in the evening hours of 25 June is devoid of any foundation. It is confirmed by a reliable source that the border soldier, Juergen Zoeller, suddenly felt unwell and wanted to summon assistance by sending off signal shots. Doctors determined that he had suffered from a heat stroke.

Those West Berlin circles who make use of every opportunity to spread lies in the world are urgently advised to behave in a more responsible and serious way.

BRIEFS

POST, TELECOMMUNICATIONS LINKS WITH AUSTRIA — The GDR and Austria on Wednesday agreed to deepen scientific and technological cooperation in post and telecommunications in a working plan for 1986-87. The document was signed in Vienna by Dr Heinz Aull, GDR deputy minister for post and telecommunications, and Dr Josef Sindelka, director general of the Austrian post and telegraph authority. The working plan envisages in particular the preparation and use of digital exchanges technology, the development of beam wave guide technology, the forming of data networks, and automation and mechanization in the postal system. Both sides stressed the positive results of cooperation to date. [Excerpt] [East Berlin ADN International Service in German 1848 GMT 11 Jun 86 LD]

SWEDISH CULTURAL TIES -- Berlin, 11 Jun (ADN) — An agreement on cooperation in the fields of culture, education, and science for the years 1986-88 was signed by the GDR and Sweden in Berlin on Wednesday. The agreement includes, among other things, measures to promote direct cooperation among institutions from both states in the fields of science, research, higher and vocational education, national education, and professional training. In addition, it was agreed to exchange cultural and artistic exhibitions, as well as artists and scientists for study and research visits. NATIONAL ASSEMBLY SESSION CONVENES IN BUDAPEST

Sarlos Opens Session

LD261017 Budapest MTI in English 0925 GMT 26 Jun 86

[Text] Budapest, June 26 (MTI) -- The summer session of the Hungarian National Assembly opened in Budapest on Thursday. Those present included Pal Losonczi, president of the Presidential Council, Janos Kadar, general secretary of the Hungarian Socialist Workers' Party, Gyorgy Lazar, chairman of the Council of Ministers, other members of the HSWP Political Committee, the secretaries of the Central Committee and members of the Presidential Council and the government. Heads and members of several diplomatic missions in Budapest also attended the opening session.

The session was opened by Istvan Sarlos, president of the National Assembly. After accepting the agenda, Istvan Hetenyi, minister of finance gave a report on the draft bill on the implementation of the 1985 state budget of the Hungarian People's Republic and the 1981-85 financial plans of councils.

Proceedings Reported

[Geza Foldvari report from Parliament buildup]

[Excerpt] At the moment the ministers' chairs and benches are empty because there is a break in today's parliamentary meeting, which was opened at 1000 by Istvan Sarlos, president of the National Assembly. He submitted the proposal of the Patriotic People's Front's national council according to which Dr Rezso Bognar should be relieved of the position of chairman of the Cultural Committee as he has been elected member of the Presidential Council. The deputies accepted the proposal, and elected Dr Peter Horn as chairman of the Cultural Committee.

The draft law on the implementation of the budget for the year 1985, and the councils' financial plan related to the past 5 years was submitted by Dr Istvan Hetenyi, minister of finance. He said that expenditures had developed in accordance with plans; however, revenues had fallen short of what had been approved.

Finance Minister Views Economy

LD261601 Budapest MTI in English 1223 GMT 26 Jun 86

[Text] Budapest, June 26 (MTI) -- On Thursday, at the summer session of parliament Istvan Hetenyi, minister of finance, put forward a bill on the implementation of the 1985 state budget and the budget of local councils for the period 1981-1985.

In compliance with the country's economic policy, the great efforts aimed at maintaining solvency and safeguarding the living standards were also reflected by the budgetary processes, Istvan Hetenyi said.

In 1985 the expenditures of the state budget amounted to 610,000 million forints as planned. Revenues lagged behind the target and accounted for 594,000 million forints. The state budget showed a deficit of 15,700 million forints as against the planned 2,500 million.

Higher deficit can be financed from payments by companies and individuals, and from foreign resources that are larger than expected. The minister of finance asked Parliament to give its consent to the Council of Ministers covering extra deficit from bank loans. He added that insufficient revenues were mainly due to a halt in economic development, and an unfavourable trend in the net incomes of national economy.

Last year, in spite of several favourable partial results in the national economy, the national income decreased, and the proportion of production and distribution was less favourable than planned. Output and income increased only in some branches to an acceptable extent, while several branches showed a decrease. In certain branches, for instance in agriculture, it can be considered a temporary trend but in other branches it indicates acute structural problems. It is to be appreciated, however, that the country could halt the years-long trend of decreasing investments and real wage. Hungary achieved a foreign trade surplus which was considerable even if it lagged behind the 1984 figure. The country preserved its solvency but foreign debts increased as against the plan.

It is encouraging that despite the difficult circumstances several economic organizations achieved steadily good and, in some cases, even improving results. On the other hand, low efficiency led to an accumulation of problems at other companies. It laid a great burden on the state budget as the loss-making companies caused an additional expenditure of 3,000 million forints.

In 1985 the taxation system became more reasonable. The regulation of earnings-level expanded the companies' scope of action. Further modifications were not made in the regulation system last year.

Despite strict regulations companies increased profits by an average 9 per cent. There were considerable differences between the companies. On one hand there were some highly profitable companies, on the other hand 23 companies had a deficit over 100 million forints (altogether 6,400 million forints). At present there are 30, mainly large companies, with the problems of which the government has to deal with. In some cases a rehabilitation process has started but the majority of companies have to get straight through own effort. This process will be encouraged by a new decree which will make it possible to liquidate insolvent companies provided that their solvency is not restored with the involvement of creditors within a short time.

The taxes, fees and social insurance rates paid by individuals increased by 30 per cent last year and accounted for 9 per cent of revenues. In 1985 the output of small partnerships went up by 30 per cent and their tax and social insurance payments by 64 per cent. The independent small partnerships and small cooperatives engaged in full-time activities have been integrated in the economic system. The economic working communities operating at well-organized workplaces help reduce costs and expand assortment. At the same time they pose a challenge, mainly at workplaces where full-time work is organized inadequately and capacities utilized insufficiently.

We do not strive either for granting preferences to them or limiting their activities. The organizations working normally, under social and financial control should operate where it is required and reasonable from the economic point of view. Better organization of full-time work, incentive wages, and the strengthening of the self-accounting system of brigades and groups will surely make a part of small organizations unnecessary.

338,000 million forints, 55 per cent of expenditures, were spent on the running and maintenance of institutions financed by the state budget. In the past five years these expenditures went up by an annual 8.4 per cent in nominal value and 2 per cent in real value.

Last year 131,000 million forints were spent on social insurance, 9.5 per cent more than the previous year. 92,000 million forints of the sum was spent on pensions.

Support of organizations financed by the state budget went up by 9 per cent, and that of organizations financed by local councils by 11 per cent. Support increased by 1,600 million forints more than planned. Finances required for the work of the institutions, were granted last year.

For the 6th 5-Year Plan, Parliament allocated a central support of 249,000 million forints to local councils. As a consequence of intrim price, wage and social-welfare policy measures, Parliament, on adopting the annual budgets, increased support to 279,000 million forints. The surplus enabled local councils to increase expenditure. With the help of central support, revenues from other organizations or generated through active organizative work, local councils improved living conditions of the population and realized the most important development targets. The new management system of local councils introduced this year further encourages initiatives and organizing skills at councils. Transition to the new system of management was essentially smooth.

In the first five months of 1986 economic growth lagged behind the level that appropriately supported targets, the minister said. Imports increased more rapidly than exports, and incomes in foreign currency were diminished by price losses. As compared to inadequate growth, wages and salaries increased relatively rapidly. The deficit in the budget shows a trend of increase.

Consequently, the government is to take measures to accelerate structural transformation which would improve efficiency and balance. Both the existing capacities and the additional investment projects will be more concentrated on stepping up exports to hard-currency markets. Development is also served by the talks with the CMEA countries, first of all with the Soviet Union, that are aimed at a greater expansion of economic relations than planned. We must undertake radical measures if they serve an upswing and reasonable austerity as a further deterioration in the budget seems unavoidable even if such measures are taken.

The 7th Five-Year Plan is based upon the transformation of the production pattern. The budget and the credit sphere are to be more taxed this year to retrieve losses caused by inefficient production and help the branches and companies meeting such difficulties. The government has decided that companies in deficit will not be given financial assistance unless they can show possible recovery plans.

The main purpose of the governmental measures of the government is to secure the surplus balance of foreign trade required for preserving solvency and the stabilization of real wages, on the basis of higher performances and with more moderate price increases than previously, the minister of finance said in conclusion.

Marjai Addresses Economic Issues

LD262049 Budapest MTI in English 1614 GMT 26 Jun 86

[Text] Budapest, June 26 (MTI) -- Jozsef Marjai, deputy minister of the Council of Ministers, contributed to the debate over the first point of the agenda. He pointed out, that our economic policy tasks and aims, are defined by the resolution of the 13th Congress of the Hungarian Socialist Workers' Party, the government programme and the 7th Five-Year Plan. We have no reason to diverge from this line and there is no other realistic way.

Many-sided and comprehensive participation in the international division of labor is indispensable for our existence and development. Our place and role in socialist integration continues to be decisive for us. The strategic line of integration -- which was confirmed by the top-level economic conference and our party congresses -- has been extended to the elaboration of far-reaching concrete measures. The ever intensifying work, which is closely associated with internal objectives, covers the updating of our entire cooperation, the increase of its efficiency, and the joint accomplishment of aims in key areas of cooperation. Hungary has a most direct interest in the succesful implementation of this new strategy. Such cooperation with the countries of the socialist community may increasingly help to create extra resources for the development of our national economy and provides more stable positions for mutually advantageous cooperation with other regions of the world economy.

Realization of this process has started mainly in the field of Hungarian-Soviet cooperation. We have a close and substantive work programme on setting up new forms of cooperation, joint companies and direct company contacts.

The government carries out far-reaching active work in international organizations, towards regional integration and in the field of bilateral relations in order to eliminate the artificial market obstacles raised in the way of Hungarian goods, reduce customs disadvantages, particularly in the traditional large markets of Western Europe and the EEC countries, and to ensure better conditions for the work of our companies. Recently we have created frameworks which allow for an increased involvement of active foreign capital in the form of joint companies and ventures.

Persistent and increasing effort by the entire society is indispensable for reaching a higher level of development, and for keeping pace with the rapidly accelerating technical revolution and the related changes in the production pattern. To this end, we should continue to improve our entire social system, including economic and production relations, and have to go ahead with the reform.

Adequate increase in production and national income is one of the most important aims for the years to come, Jozef Marjai pointed out.

The 1986 National Economic Plan is only partly based on last year's economic work, mainly because -- and self-criticism here is justified -- the economic forecasts we adopted in 1985 successively proved overtly optimistic and incorrect in practice. Therefore, only part of the measures which totally complied with the conditions and aims could be included in the plan and regulation. This also played a part in the continuation of last year's unfavourable tendencies at the beginning of 1986, when the government had to adopt a number of supplementary and auxiliary measures.

There can be no plan and regulation always and equally favourable to all. Our programmes are realistic and viable, but they require a strict order of priority for the aims and a clear concentration of means in implementation.

The requirement of higher production should be closely lined to increased efficiency. We should make a more economic use of resources and manpower. There is still much to be done by the government in this respect. We have to be more energetic in regrouping superfluous manpower to other areas, as it is not only a state, but also an important company interest which is to be supported by company management. There must be no further delay in taking measures to consolidate labour discipline. To safeguard the worktime fund, a number of government decisions have been taken to increase opportunities of using services after official work hours, and to extend the office hours of organisations handling the affairs of the population beyond official work time.

Although these measures are put into practice continuously, it has turned out that sufficient changes in the field can only be achieved with a more comprehensive series of measures.

The consequences of lax civic discipline is causing grave harm, directly or indirectly, also to economic work. We have the duty to take firmer action -- also by administrative means if the economic fail -- against incomes gained without work, money-grabbing, corruption and profiteering.

The demand of greater austerity with expenditure equally applies to the budget organizations, institutions and economic units. Cooperation and transport relations among companies have recently showed deterioration in a number of areas. Better internal cooperation ties and more disciplined and honest cooperation among companies are indispensable to achieve the goals of improved efficiency laid down in the plans. This is also a condition for successful work on foreign markets.

On economic regulation, Jozsef Marjai stressed that although it has become more flexible and more reasonable on the whole, mature changes will not be abandoned in the future.

Primarily the price and financial system, including taxation, needs to be improved. The price system required should more realistically reflect the efficiency of company management and better promote the work of efficient companies. There is need for a tax system which meets the standards of social justice and proportionate sharing in public burdens.

Our economic organizations, companies and the various forms of enterprises should be given equal treatment and conditions in a way that their objective specific advantages could prevail in cooperation and competition.

All our assessments and analyses confirm the necessity to increase our efforts, step up action and improve work so that we can close the year 1986 with the best possible result, and could at least approach the aims of the national economic plan in the key areas. Failure to do this would involve serious consequences, as we would not only have to reckon with greater problems in 1986, but the economic development of 1987 and the years to follow would be seriously affected, Jozef Marjai said in conclusion.

Assembly Adopts 1985 Budget Bill

LD262106 Budapest MTI in English 1809 GMT 26 Jun 86

[Text] Budapest, June 26 (MTI) -- Following the reply of Finance Minister Istvan Heteny; to the interpollations; the Hungarian National Assembly unanimously adopted the bill on the 1985 budget of the Hungarian People's Republic and the implementation of the 1981-1985 financial plan of local councils in its entirety and details, according to the original text submitted.

The next point on the agenda was the report of Defence Minister Ferenc Karpati on the implementation of the 1st Defence Act of 1976.

Karpati Summarizes Defense Act

LD262129 Budapest MTI in English 1815 GMT 26 Jun 86

[Text] Budapest, June 26 (MTI) -- In his address to Parliament session on Thursday Colonel General Ferenc Karpati, minister of defence, spoke about the implementation of the Defence Act, passed ten years ago.

"There is no special reason for discussing the issue today. However, it is well known that we have been living in such international situation for long that requires the state to pay special attention to the development and maintenance of the level of defense.

"Considering the experiences of the past decade, we can state with satisfaction that the act serves well the cause of the protection of the homeland and assures the high level and efficiency of defense. The fact that the act had to be modified only once during the decade also indicates that its regulations are lasting and practicable. Otherwise, the sole modification was the reduction of military service from 24 months to 18 months, to everybody's satisfaction. In keeping with regulations of the Defense Act, the defense management system has been established and strengthened, functioning well from government organizations to local councils. In accordance with our national and international interests, the National Assembly confirmed our participation in our joint defense alliance, the Warsaw Treaty, last year.

"Taking realistic demands into consideration, the Council of Ministers steadily takes a stand for the training and development of the Army and assuring defense budget and maintain defense readiness."

On the Warsaw Treaty the minister states: "Our Armed Forces maintain good and cordial cooperation, and coordinated and purposeful division of labour. All this includes development, training and other joint tasks such as the protection of borders, hinterland and civil defense issues, and policy activity, if necessary."

The minister stated that the defense policy of Hungary is based on firm principles and its target is the protection of the country's independence, socialist achievements, and peace. By implementing our foreign and defense policy, we coordinate our tasks with the fraternal socialist countries of the Warsaw Treaty."

"Over the past decade we have continued the modernization and streamlining of the Hungarian People's Army. As a result of a planned and resolute work, modern weapons and military technique have been introduced in our Army," stated the defense minister.

Our People Army also takes part in the implementation of construction targets. Our honourable duty is to educate young people in socialist spirit during their military service. We also pay special attention to the general and professional training of young people. The majority of soldiers, after initial difficulties, fulfil their duty orderly and devotedly.

"Social development has raised further demands in military life and service too. Taking them into consideration, we have to provide more modern accomodation, food, clothes and health service. We have achieved significant and concrete results, although the implementation of our targets is often limited by financial-material means. It is also a significant achievement that conscripts' fee was increased by 100 per cent on January 1, 1986."

Ferenc Karpati stated that general compulsory military service is enforced in accordance with the regulations of the Military Act. Under the act men are obliged to do military service in a regulated way. Women do unarmed military service in certain fields only in case of war. Privates do the general 18-month military service which is enough to obtain military skills.

The minister recalled that ten years ago, when the Military Act was passed, the world lived in a period after the Helsinki Final Act on detente and its development, and hoped that detente would include the military sphere too.

"The socialist world, particularly the countries of the Warsaw Treaty, have made great efforts to reach the target. However, the initiatives of the Soviet Government and the Political Consultative Committee of the Warsaw Treaty, have not met favourable reception and understanding. Instead of seeking for agreement, the responsible circles of the United States of America and NATO concentrate their activity to the establishment of the possibilities of confrontation and increased arms race, which the U.S. Administration tries to extend over the outer space too.

Starting from that there is a possibility for averting the danger of war, the session of the Warsaw Treaty Political Consultative Committee in Budapest on June 11, submitted further initiatives to the United States and the NATO countries. In addition to proposing the stopping of nuclear tests, the reciprocal and full elimination of medium-range missiles in Europe, the halt of space armament, the elimination of chemical weapons and their industrial bases, the Political Consultative Committee also initiated the significant reduction of armed forces and coventional weapons in Europe.

"The interests of the Hungarian People's Republic fully coincide with the efforts of our allies. Our people's opinion is also included in the conception that the socialist countries do not want to achieve military superiority and do not allow anybody to gain it. Therefore, as long as the responsible circles of the United States and NATO do not realize the realities of our age, it is our duty to assure our security.

"The Military Act, passed ten years ago, provides an adequate framework for our further tasks, deriving from the present international situation. In this context we hold it important to maintain the standard of our Armed Forces in compliance with the readiness of our opponents and brothers-in-arms.

"Adequate social judgement on the reason of military activity is indispensable in order to maintain the good general condition of the Army. The social acknowledgement of military service is based on realizing the fact that the most precious value of mankind is peace and the staff of the Armed Forces and soldiers of the Hungarian People's Army have an important role in our present peaceful life," stated Minister of Defence Ferenc Karpati.

Karpati's Report Approved

LD262312 Budapest MTI in English 1900 GMT 26 Jun 86

[Text] Budapest, June 26 (MTI) -- After the reply of Defence Minister Ferenc Karpati to the interpollations, the National Assembly approved the defence minister's report on the implementation of the 1st Defence Act of 1976 and his reply to the interpollations.

Then discussions were held behind closed doors on amendments in the standing order of Parliament.

Standing Orders Text Adopted

LD262314 Budapest MTI in English 1959 GMT 26 Jun 86

[Text] Budapest, June 26 (MTI) -- At its Thursday closed session, the Hungarian National Assembly discussed and adopted the proposal on the amendment and standard text of the standing orders of Parliament.

Social and economic progress, the development of socialist democracy and the expansion of its system of institutions have made it possible and necessary to adjust the working rules of the legislative body to the new requirements. Despite the considerable number of changes, the newly worded orders include several previous provisions, and even the new elements are only adaptations to current practice.

There are a number of fields where previous practices are set as a rule, including election of the government, the filling of vacant m.p. posts on the national list, and the adoption by Parliament of a resolution after the discussion of reports.

A former practice enacted as a rule covers the obligation of competent state authorities to thoroughly consider the proposals of the Parliament's standing committees, and inform the committee concerned on the outcome of their survey. Under a new regulation, the competent committee should take a stand on deputies' proposals before they are discussed by Parliament.

The amended orders consider it reasonable to discuss particularly important economic plans in two rounds. The first round includes a general debate and comments on the draft, and the second decides on the finalized plan.

With regard to interpollations, the new standing orders make a difference between questions to be considered interpollations and simple questions of informative nature.

Interpollations can be made if a deputy wishes to criticize a central measure for being against the law, having no satisfactory effect or being totally ineffective. In such an event, Parliament will decide whether to approve the reply of the competent minister or head of a national authority, to control the implementation of acts. The possibility of interpollations enables the deputies to obtain the required information.

Maintaining the practice of open ballots in general, secret voting has been introduced for the election of Parliamentary officials and the filling of vacant posts on the national list of elections.

FURTHER ON VISIT BY TURKEY'S PRESIDENT EVREN

Received by Kadar

LD251056 Budapest Domestic Service in Hungarian 1000 GMT 25 Jun 86

[Excerpt] Janos Kadar, general secretary of the party, member of the Presidential Council, has received in Parliament building, Kenan Evren, president of the Republic of Turkey. At the discussion, held in a cordial atmosphere, opinions were exchanged on the international situation, on the possibilities for averting the dangers threatening international security, for confidence-building of countries with different social systems, and for developing mutually advantageous cooperation. Reviewing Hungarian-Turkish relations, the mutual intention of developing cooperation was unanimously affirmed.

Participating in the meeting were Pal Losonczi, president of the Presidential Council, and Peter Varkonyi, minister of foreign affairs.

Losonczi Hosts Honorary Dinner

LD252130 Budapest MTI in English 2018 GMT 25 Jun 86

[Text] Budapest, June 25 (MTI) -- On Wednesday Pal Losonczi, president of the Hungarian Presidential Council gave a gala dinner in Budapest's Parliament in honour of Turkish President Kenan Evren, currently on an official visit in Hungary. The two heads of state raised toasts at the dinner.

Pal Losonczi pointed out, "the common relics of our history are being preserved in Hungary and Turkey alike, something which also contributes to strengthening our present-day relations. These ties, which set an example for successful cooperation between states with different social systems, are being developed further on the basis of mutual advantages. The fact that our countries' links are not burdened by unsettled or disputed political issues facilitates the advancement of relations.

"The present visit of Kenan Evren may open new vistas for the development of relations between the two countries. The just signed agreement on cooperation in agriculture and energy industry creates a new opportunity for the expansion of economic cooperation.

"The improvement of Hungarian-Turkish relations serves the good of our peoples, and also contributes to the political settlement of debated international issues and is indispensable for confidence-building, too. Our talks have made it clear that both Hungary and Turkey want to avoid a world war, curb the arms race and advance the process of detente. We also have similar positions on a number of other major questons of the international situation.

"The Hungarian People's Republic strives to help reduce tensions and guarantee equal security on the lowest possible level of armaments To this end, it is ready to engage in dialogue and cooperate with all realistic political forces which feel responsible for the fate of humankind," Pal Losonczi said in his toast.

The delegation met Stojan Mikhajlov, secretary of the Central Committee of the Communist Party of Bulgaria.

U.S. POLICY ON POLAND EXHIBITS 'ARROGANCE'

LD251308 Warsaw PAP in English 1100 GMT 25 Jun 86

[Text] Warsaw, June 25 — The second white book entitled "Polityka Stanow Zjednoczonych Ameryki Wobec Polski w Swietle Faktow I Dokumentow (1984-1985)" (A Policy of the United States of America Towards Poland in the Light of Facts and Documents (1984-1985) appeared here, TRYBUNA LUDU reports.

The purposefulness of publishing it can be substantiated by two reasons: firstly, the Polish Government deems it necessary to tell public opinion about new facts causing the bad state of U.S.-Polish relations and, secondly, to show causes for which the U.S. Administration is to blame, the daily continues.

Most generally speaking, "U.S. policy towards Poland in 1984-1985 is characterized by the continuation of the course of restrictions and interference in the internal affairs of our country and attempts to isolate Poland in the international arena and to give political and material support groupings struggling against Poland's constitutional authorities, and propaganda aggression."

Most broadly speaking, also in the two years discussed above no important changes took place in Washington that could testify to overcoming the period of frustration cause by the breakdown of the earlier hopes to pluck Poland out of the socialist systemic and political frameworks and her international alliances and bonds, TRYBUNA LUDU said.

The U.S. Administration opposes its own great power chauvinism and arrogance to our sovereignty and dignity, which is expressed both in keeping up the most burdensome economic sanctions, linking all, even the so-called small steps of improvement, to conditions entering the area of our internal policy and in carrying out propaganda to divide society.

One should recall that over the past four years Poland's losses in virtue of these restrictions approximated 15 billion dollars.

Economic restrictions, pressure and difficulties are accompanied by Washington's political chicanery that can be seen both in bilateral relations and in the international arena. The best example in this area is the way of approaching the accreditation of the U.S. ambassador here. Poland proposed to link this issue to broad dialogue promoting normalization of political, economic, scientific and cultural relations. In response, we received a demand for accreditation — resembling an ultimatum and bearing a thirty-day deadline — without an answer to any substantial proposal to negotiate. Moreover, over the past two years, the U.S. several times made attempts in the international forum of various organizations and conferences to exploit Polish issues to pursue confrontation and isolate Poland. This happened so at successive sessions of working groups of the CSCE, ILO and other U.N. agencies.

The worst example of interfering in the internal affairs of our country was the setting up of the "foundation of Assistance to Solidarnosc" patronized by a group of the most conservative congressmen led by Jack Kemp.

The published book documents the continuity of our strivings at normalization, as these strivings are the foundation of Poland's foreign policy based on peaceful coexistence and cooperation with all states, TRYBUNA LUDU said.

U.S. FOREIGN POLICY 'USES DIFFERENT YARDSTICKS'

LD270841 Warsaw PAP in English 0030 GMT 27 Jun 86

["Double Measure and Cynicism" -- PAP headline; by Boleslaw Zamczewski]

[Test] Warsaw, June 26/27 -- The U.S. foreign policy is closely watched and assessed by everyone, with particular attention by the Poles. Nearly every day supplies one with material for evaluation of that policy, confirming on and on it is the same arrogant, masterful towards those weaker than oneself, brutal and ruthless to those who are found to be a nuisance or are unsubmissive.

We, the Poles, know it very well from the harm being done to our state through the policy of restrictions and "sanctions" which have just been brought back to attention by publication of a second volume of the white paper on "U.S. Policy on Poland in the Light of Facts and Documents 1984-85," a collection of historical documents showing the vastness of losses inflicted on Poland by the United States. And yet the white paper is not something isolated, being a sort of an indictment and testimony that that is not the way to regulate relations between two sovereign states. One of these, Poland, is prepared to shape mutual contacts along the rules of mutual interest, while the other one, the U.S., refuses to give up the road of dictate, blackmail and pressure.

This happens at a time when world opinion is struck by U.S. refusal to impose economic sanctions against the inhuman racist regime of South Africa, because it would not be in line with U.S. interests.

A lesson of manners that Washington has been teaching the world these days is being constantly refreshed. The world has just witnessed an unheard-of-development: With ostentatious openness and cynicism, the U.S. parliament is pondering the question of abolishing a legitimate government of a sovereign state, which has its embassy in Washington, and what is more -- approves 100-million-dollar aid to support those who are trying, arms in hand, to destroy the constitutional government of another state -- Nicaragua, in no way a threat to the U.S. giant. This surprises and moves everyone who is guided by universal criteria of good and bad.

One could say the recent time has been one of a truth on those matters, a naked truth that is obvious to everyone: the U.S. Administration uses different yardsticks, depending on whether things are in line with the U.S. own, egoistic and imperial goals. But this pessimistic picture has one bright point. It is that such a policy is not fully supported inside the United States. May this trend for reason, adherence to sense of justice, and will to serve the cause of building proper relation with other states, be there stronger and stronger.

CENTRAL COMMITTEE GREETINGS SENT TO LCY CONGRESS

[Text] Warsaw, June 25 -- The PUWP Central Committee has sent its warmest greetings and wishes of fruitful debates to the delegates who gathered for the 13th Congress of the League of Communists of Yugoslavia.

Close cooperation between the two parties and states is of special significance in the present times when the developing modern world brings about new challenges, the message reads.

Our desire is to continue reinforcing our close relations by way of fruitful development in the Polish-Yugoslav cooperation in all fields.

The PUWP, just like the LCY, comes out for peaceful coexistence of all nations and states, liquidation of all threats posed to the nations by forces of imperialism and neocolonialism. A goodwill forces worldwide are necessary to eliminate nuclear and other mass-annihiliation weapons, to create an efficient system for international security.

As for our part we doing and will continue doing our best, together with our allies, the Soviet Union and other socialist community states, to actively stimulate the development of international situation towards the consolidation of peace and international cooperation.

Poland follows with recognition the activities of the Nonaligned States Movement, which Yugoslavia is playing so an active and important role. We positively evaluate the efforts paid by this movement for the cause of reinforcing worldwide peace and solving the problems of contemporary world.

COMMUNIQUE ON MONGOLIAN VISIT PUBLISHED

LD182009 Warsaw PAP in English 1914 GMT 18 Jun 86

["Press Communique" — PAP headline]

[Text] Warsaw, June 18 -- Member of the Mongolian People's Revolution Party (MPRP) CC, Foreign Minister of the Mongolian People's Republic Mangalyn Dugersuren paid an official visit to Poland on June 16-18 at the invitation from PUWP CC Political Bureau alternate member, Foreign Minister Marian Orzechowski. The Mongolian guest was received by PUWP CC First Secretary, President of the Council of State Wojciech Jaruzelski, and Polish Premier Zbigniew Messner. Mangalyn Dugersuren laid a wreath at the Tomb of the Unknown Soldier, and at the mausoleum of Soviet Army soldiers here.

During their talks, the Polish and Mongolian foreign ministers briefed each other on the situation in both states, as well as on the resolutions of the 19th MPRP Congress and preparations for the 10th PUWP Congress. They also reviewed the state of and prospects for developing Polish-Mongolian relations, and exchanged views on current international issues, with particular regard to situation in Europe and Asia.

Both ministers stated with satisfaction that Polish-Mongolian relations were developing favourably in all fields, in the spirit of traditional friendship, on the basis of Marxism-Leninism and socialist internationalism. They stated that meetings of both states' leaders are of especially vital significance for the further tightening of fraternal friendship and cooperation.

The sides stressed the significance of both states' fraternal friendship, alliance, and all-round cooperation with the Soviet Union and other states of the socialist community for the sake of successful socialist building in Poland and Mongolia.

While discussing international situation, Mrian Orzechowski and Mangalyn Durgersuren agreed that dangerous tension is persisting worldwide, mainly due to the confrontation-oriented policy of imperialism. The sides emphasized the necessity to urgently halt the arms race on earth, bar it from spreading into outer space, to struggle for disarmament, and develop international cooperation.

The ministers stressed the importance of tight cooperation and coordination of actions by states of the socialist community in favour of security and development of international situation the world over. The sides voiced support for comprehensive Soviet peace proposals, submitted by Mikhail Gorbachev and developed by the 27th CPSU Congress.

The ministers emphasized the crucial character of proposals submittee by the Poilitical Consultative Committee of states-parties to the Warsaw Treaty, during its debates in Budapest. The proposals offer another chance to halt the arms race, and ease international tension.

The talks between the two ministers passed in a cordial and friendly atmosphere, and revealed a complete concordance of opinions and attitudes to all issues discussed.

Minister Duegersueren thanked the Polish Government for hospitality and warm reception, and invited Minister Orzechowski to pay an official visit to Mongolia. The invitation received with satisfaction.

'SABOTAGE' INVESTIGATED AT BELCHATOW POWER PLANT

LD262039 Warsaw Television Service in Polish 1730 GMT 26 Jun 86

Andrzej Bieganski worked in Belchatow as a boiler maintenance man. In a short period of time, the committed sabotage twice. First, he pulled out the cables from a control panel. Later, he put the emergency switches on the fume and air ventilators out of action. In both cases the result was the same. Two generator sets ceased to function. A further two worked at reduced capacity. The losses suffered on this account exceeded 5 million zlotys. Only the speedy discovery and repair of the breakdowns saved the country's energy system from even more severe consequences. After his arrest, Andrzej Bieganski said:

[Begin Bieganski recording] I wanted the country's economy to suffer losses, since the greater the losses that I would cause the greater would be the manifestation and honoring of the anniversary of Fighting Solidarity [solidarnose walczaca] functioning underground. [end recording]

For a short while, from an exporter of electrical energy Poland became an importer of such energy, paying for it in foreign currency [passage indistinct].

[Begin Baginski recording] I have come to a certain conclusion that young people -- for instance, at such an age as mine, or perhaps a little older -- should rather consider what it is that they do, and the only living example in me, here, now. I don't know, perhaps my conversation with all you will beneficially influence, somehow, those young people who, I do not know, perhaps consider what they are doing, perhaps not. [end recording]

The Army prosecutor of the garrison prosecutor's office agreed to the filming of the suspect and the revelation of his name. We shall return to this matter.

RADOM FOOD RIOTS COMMEMORATED WITH MASS

AU252004 Paris AFP in English 1948 GMT 25 Jun 86

[Excerpts] Radom, Poland, June 25 (AFP) -- A message from Pope John Paul II was read out Wednesday [25 June] evening at an open-air mass at Radom cathedral commemorating the 10th anniversary of the Radom food riots. The message said the Pope was "spiritually united with the people of Radom" whom he "congratulated on their determination to base their lives on justice, love, and respect for one's neighbor."

Another message, from Lech Walesa, leader of the banned Solidarity union, said: "Your tears and your efforts were not in vain. They paved the way for Solidarity."

According to reports from Radom, police Tuesday [24 June] arrested and kept in custody some 30 Solidarity militants preparing to celebrate Wednesday's strike anniversary. Police also called in another 100 persons and warned them not to attend the commemorative mass.

'Scores of People' Detained

AU252040 Paris AFP in English 2031 GMT 25 Jun 86

[Excerpt] Radom, Poland, June 25 (AFP) -- Polish police detained for questioning scores of people here Wednesday at a ceremony commemorating the 10th anniversary of local food riots. The people were picked up after taking part in an open-air mass at Radom Cathedral. They had formed a kind of cortege after the mass, filing silently toward a monument commemorating the strikes. Police moved in after the crowd, having placed flowers on the monument and sung patriotic and religious songs, was breaking up. Among those detained were foreign television crews, including from West Germany and the United States.

WALESA QUESTIONED AGAIN IN BUJAK INVESTIGATION

AU261941 Paris AFP in English 1918 GMT 26 Jun 86

[Text] Warsaw, June 26 (AFP) -- Solidarity leader Lech Walesa and two other Polish opposition figures were questioned Thursday [26 June] by police as part of investigations resulting from the May 31 arrest of Zbigniew Bujak, the underground opposition leader, Solidarity sources said. Mr. Walesa together with Jacek Kuron, the founder of the KOR (Social Self-Defence Committee), and former Solidarity spokesman Janusz Onyskiewicz, were told to report to the police again Saturday [28 June].

Mr. Walesa, who was also questioned Tuesday, refused to answer police at his hometown of Gdansk, but they warned him not to give details of the interrogation, the sources said. He read a declaration to them saying that Polish unionists were determined to continue their fight for the ideas of the banned union, the sources said.

"They can throw us in prison, injure us, kill us, but we will not be beaten," he said.

Mr. Walesa also denied accusations made by the deputy interior minister, General Wladyslaw Pozoga that Western secret services had formed Polish "terrorist" groups and secretly supplied arms to Solidarity underground groups. Police have arrested or detained dozens of trade union and Solidarity militants in the run-up to the Polish Communist Party congress, which begins Sunday and will be attended by Soviet leader Mikhail Gorbachev.

PRESS BRIEF ON PRECONGRESS IDEOLOGICAL WORK

[By Waldemar Janiec and Miroslaw Luniewski]

[Text] Warsaw, June 26 -- In the course of another press conference held at the press centre of the 10th PUWP Congress, Jozef Czyrek, Political Bureau member and PUWP CC secretary, Henryk Bednarski, PUWP CC secretary, and Wladyslaw Loranc, head of the PUWP CC Ideological Department, presented to Polish and foreign journalists the main lines of ideological work within the party between its 9th and 10th Congresses. They also spoke of the basic components of pre-congress debate on party documents drafted for the congress.

While presenting the origin of works on draft PUWP programme, Henryk Bednarski recalled that the need for elaborating such a programme was formulated already at the extraordinary 9th PUWP Congress in July 1981, when delegates made a critical review of the ways in which the party exercised its leading role in society until that moment. The programme in question is also specified by the need to cope with the new requirements of contemporary world and also the need to work out a truly long-range plan of action to reach out into the beginnings of the next century.

"The great nationwide discussion, which started four months back, was a vital factor in the work on the draft programme," Bednarski said. "Members of practically all basic party links spoke their mind in the course of that discussion. Taking part in it were also broad masses of members of the allied political parties, youth organizations, and a great number of non-party people".

While presenting the current lines of the party's ideological work, Bednarski pointed to two fundamental trends of that activity: The first one embraces broadly conceived restoration of the normal pace of life of society, economy, and state. The second trend means materialization of the idea of national agreement viewed as civic integration of all groups and communities around targets specified by the party and pertaining to Poland's fundamental interests.

The speaker went on to say that despite hard conditions accompanying materialization of the current social and economic tasks, the party has managed to step up its ideological activity. It's also managed to strengthen its organizational, ideological, and political cohesion based on the theory of Marxism-Leninism. In this context Bednarski pointed to the period between the two congresses, namely, "Declaration on What We Are Fighting For, Where We Are Heading To" and the draft PUWP programme.

"It was for the first time in the history of our party that such vital documents were discussed on such a mass scale," Bednarski declared.

While speaking of the influence of pre-congress debate on ideological and political stimulation of party ranks, Bednarski stressed to the formidable theoretical ideological output of the PUWP Central Committee's full sessions. In this context he presented a wide range of crucial social, political, and economic issues tackled in the period separating the 9th and 10th PUWP Congresses.

Making reference to hostile propaganda aggression directed against socialist Poland, Bednarski pointed to the limited effect of those actions within Polish society.

While answering numerous questions from newsmen, Bednarski emphasized that remarks on the draft PUWP programme addressed to all party links have been fully employed by a special Central Committee commission in the final version of that draft. As a sign of applying those remarks, the present version of the document significantly differs from the one tabled four months back. Nearly one-third of the text is completely new, while another one-third remaining unchanged. Also, the structure of the document has undergone significant transformations: The original version was composed of eight chapters, whereas the present one contains six, a fact related to an integrated approach to some of the issues, as was the case with economic matters or the leading role of the working class. Also, targets of the country's socio-economic development have been arranged according to their ranks, with special stress being put on a solution to the housing and food problems.

Jozef Czyrek, who was the next to answer questions from the audience, said that in its influence on the ideological and political awareness of its members the party has never resorted to administrative means of shaping human consciousness and will never do so in the future, which is also stressed in the present version of the PUWP programme.

"The starting point for the draft party programme are general valves and principles of scientific socialism, which are common for all parties building socialism. What is typical of Poland is specifying of the conditions for attaining those targets, conditions which are charateristic of Poland and its people. We are not using the term 'a Polish path to socialism', as in the current political strife the term has been used not to specify the essence of our activity but the differences or to oppose the Polish path to socialist transformations in other socialist countries," Czyrek said emphatically.

He rejected a hint that young people in Poland took no interest in party matters. "This is not true," he declared, stressing that vast numbers of young people in this country are interested in the PUWP policy and attach to it ever higher expectations. As evidence of the growing party influence on young Poles, Czyrek quoted the increasing number of young people joining PUWP ranks, with work youth forming the majority of the newly admitted members.

In that context, Czyrek referred to the present position of the party in Polish society, stressing that tengible and clear evidence of increased social confidence in party policy was the outcome of elections to people's councils and parliament. "That confidence is in some measure given for granted, in connection with the party's announced course at socialist renewel and the latter's determined implementation," he stressed.

Answering other questions, Czyrek noted the importance of attainments of the fraternal social parties for the PUWP's draft programme, singling out as particularly significant the resolutions adopted by the 27th Congress of the CPSU. "We consider our policy of socialist renewal to be in the same current of socialist development as approved by the CPSU 27th Congress following the April Plenum," he said.

Referring to the PUWP's guiding role in society, he noted that implementation of that role had in the past been deficient in that there had been excess reliance on command and administrative means of management, which had overwhelmed the political and ideological forms of influence on society.

He rejected a suggestion from one of the reporters implying that preparations for the congress had allegedly coincided with increased anti-American propaganda in Poland.

Czyrek stressed Poland was not interested in maintaining bad relations with the U.S., and noted that all initiatives aiming to worsen these relations had come from the American side.

Asked about possibility of his being proposed for first secretary of the party, Czyrek said he was not planning to stand for the position.

CC Ideological Department head Wladyslaw Loranc discussed the various forms of political, economic, and propaganda aggression against Poland.

"It is not us who want to inflame relations with some of the countries. In our responses, we try to maintain an adequate scale," he said, adding: "We are holding an open dialogue with society so that every Pole can better understand the intentions of authors of aggressive, anti-Polish moves. Our surveys have shown that a vast majority of society, more than 80 percent, have indicated that the U.S. policy was extremely dangerous.

"Today, people have a better understanding of who uses hollow rhetoric and does measurable harm to Poland. Also the rhetoric used by some of the journalists who are now in this room no longer has such an easy reception in Polish society.

DEFENSE MINISTER ADDRESSES PRECONGRESS MEETING

AU261048 Warsaw ZOLNIERZ WOLOSCI in Polish 24 Jun 86 pp 1, 2

[Report on speech by Army General Florian Siwicki, PZPR Politburo candidate member and national defense minister, at the 23 June precongress meeting of the inhabitants of Nowa Deba, Tarnobrzeg Voivodship]

[Text] Speaking at the meeting, F. Siwicki stressed that his profession and official functions make it necessary for him to tackle the issue of strengthening Poland's security, especially in light of the present external dangers. We are living in a divided world, he said, and various disquieting features, including armaments and wars, continue to worry us. Disarmament and general peace are the basic issues of the present times. The issue of our security is closely related to the situation in Europe and the world. Tensions that can produce conflicts and real dangers continue to abound. The "Geneva Spirit" was expected to stimulate political imagination, to blaze the trail for peace initiatives, and to encourage dialogue. Eight months after the Geneva meeting the term "dialogue" is being heard with ever decreasing frequency in political language. Expectations and hopes that a better, more peaceful, and safe world would emerge continue to be acutely frustrated by NATO, especially the United States, all the time.

F. Siwicki also discussed selected problems of the political-military situation in the world and problems of Poland's defense. We know, he said, that defense cost money, but our history tells us that defense is incomparably cheaper than war and its ravages.

Do we use our defense funds exclusively for defense purposes? Not only. Our Armed Forces are part and parcel of the setup of our state, and that is why a part of our defense funds is used for the benefit of our social and economic life. This means that our Armed Forces are not an exclusive consumer of the funds allotted to them by the state. They fulfill their defense functions and continue to make their significant contribution to the country's economic development. The value of every public zloty assigned to our Armed Forces continues to be effectively increased through the effort of all our soldiers.

In other words, a large part of the national defense funds continues to be indirectly used for the benefit of all our people, and a part of these funds continues to be returned to our people in the form of our Armed Forces' activities in favor of our national economy.

The threats to our security compel us to strengthen our defense alliance and potential. This potential is as strong as the strength of the economy. Precisely thanks to this defense potential we have been able to live in peace for the past 40 years. We are doing all we can to preserve peace. F. Siwicki also discussed the country's internal situation on the eve of the 10th party congress.

Referring to the issues discussed by the participants in the meeting, F. Siwicki stressed the role and importance of the coming 10th party congress and said that the deliberations of the delegates to the supreme party forum as well as the congress discussion and resolutions will be of great importance for our social and economic life. Nevertheless, much of our life depends on the initiative, enterprise, and industry of the people in the countryside, he said. Many issues depend on local decisions and on the implementation of these decisions through social militancy.

F. Siwicki thanked the inhabitants of Tarnobrzeg Voivodship and of Nowa Deba for their good management and militancy in social and occupational life, and praised the results of their industrious efforts.

HOUSING COUNCIL MEETING DISCUSSES FUTURE PROSPECTS

LD262301 Warsaw Domestic Service in Polish 1800 GMT 26 Jun 86

[Text] Housing problems and the fulfillment of construction tasks were discussed by the Presidium of the Council for Housing Affairs. The meeting was chaired by Premier Zbigniew Messner. The Presidium acquainted itself with the introductory theses concerning the fundamental principles of housing policy in the next 15-20 years. A great deal of attention was paid to the assumptions of the plan for the current 5-year period, indicating that limited possibilities exist for a sudden growth in apartment building. Members of the council expressed their approval of the assessment of the situation in housing construction contained in the draft PZPR Program. Detailed opinions from the proceedings of the Presidium of the Council for Housing Affairs, as well as some studies by working groups, were given for use to the congress commission and the specially appointed housing construction team.

DEFENSE COMMITTEE LAUDS ARMY ACHIEVEMENTS

LD241630 Warsaw PAP in English 1358 GMT 24 Jun 86

[Text] Warsaw, June 24 -- The Sejm (Polish parliament) National Defence Committee, debating today in Warsaw with deputy Henryk Jablonski presiding, reviewed a report on the completion of the state budget in 1985 and the national socio-economic plan for the years 1983-1985 as concerns the Ministry of National Defence. Following a discussion and additional reports delivered by the deputy minister of national defence and other representatives of the ministry, the Supreme Board of Control and the Government Planning Commission, the committee approved the report and decided to ask that the government be granted a vote of acceptance of account. In an adopted resolution the committee stated that the Ministry of National Defence has achieved further significant accomplishments in the realization of defence and economic tasks in difficult economic conditions. The committee highly assessed the notable contribution of the Army to the development of the national economy in 1985. The committee also reviewed and adopted a report on the activity of the Supreme Board of Control in 1985 in the field of national defence and highly [words indistinct] branches of the board.

ANDREI MEETS WITH VISITING CHINESE DELEGATION

PACT APPEAL SHOWS ROMANIAN 'DETERMINATION'

AU191532 Bucharest AGERPRES in English 1431 GMT 19 Jun 86

["For Detente and Security in Europe and in the World" -- AGERPRES headline]

[Text] Bucharest AGERPRES -- The recent meeting of the Political Consultative Committee of the Warsaw Treaty participating states, held in Budapest, proposed a realistic and concrete set of measures for achieving disarmament and improving the international relations, stressing anew the firm attachment of these socialist states to the ideals of peace and collaboration, the high responsibility which they feel for mankind's destinies, their determination to do everything for this year, proclaimed International Year of Peace, actually to mark a good-omen beginning in the elimination of the threat of a nuclear conflict, a return to detente in international life, in order to secure the uninterrupted progress, in a climate of durable peace, of their own peoples and of all nations alike, writes the Romanian weekly LUMEA in the opening article of its June 19 issue.

The commentary shows inter alia: President Nicolae Ceausescu, led, as is know, this country's delegation to the meeting, where he edifyingly presented Romania's principled, consistent, highly constructive positions established by the RCP's Thirteenth Congress, which fully correspond to the vital interests of the Romanian nation and of all other nations as well.

The fundamental issue of the present time is to check the dangerous course toward nuclear catastrophe to determine the passage to disarmament, first of all to nuclear, which detaches from a mutltitude of phenomena and processes the primordial exigency of our time. [sentence as received] President Nicolae Ceausescu has constantly promoted the imperative of taking united action before it gets too late in order to save mankind from death, to ensure the existence, freedom, independence and life of all peoples. This idea is clearly expressed in the communique of the meeting which, proceeding from the absolute preeminence of peace, from the truth corroborated by life that at present there is no rational alternative to peaceful coexistence, to the dialogue between states with different social systems, lays down the main lines of action with a view to stopping the arms drive on earth and in space, and to embarking on actual disarmament.

The proposals on disarmament and the improvement of international relations made by the meeting contain ideas and measures for the implementation of which Romania has been declaring along the years most constantly and in support of which it has had, as is known, many an initiative. The RCP and Romanian state are steadfastly working for the realization of a complex programme of general disarmament central to which are nuclear armaments and which should comprehend the chemical weapons, all the conventional weapons and troops, so that by the turn of this millennium the existing troops and arsenals should be cut at least by half, maximum limits of them being also established mainly for the great powers.

The practicial measures of arms reduction and of disarmament would permit -- as was stressed at the meeting -- to channel the huge material, financial and human resources for peaceful construction, including for liquidating economic underdevelopment. Romania is acting most firmly for the attainment of such an objective considering that far from affecting the states' security, the substantial reduction of military spending would save immense forces and resources which now are wasted, would supply the means for socio-economic progress in the world, and first of all in the development countries, would help consolidate mutual confidence, diminish strain, and reinforce global peace.

Passage to such perfectly realistic measures would benefit all the states, be they big or small, more or less advanced, because slashed military budgets would give them the possibility of increasing allotments for the implementation of development programmes, for the thriving and improvement of standards of life and of civilization of all peoples.

The weekly then quotes President Nicolae Ceausescu's appreciation of the program endorsed at the meeting on cutting down conventional weapons, in which connection the Romanian head of state said: "We think this program is very important, since the achievement of the 25 per cent cut of arms, effectives and military expenditures by 1990 will allow for a passage to further measures to that, by 2000 an at least 50 per cent cut be made in the conventional weapons and military expenditures. In this way confidence and peaceful collaboration will grow, and huge material, financial and human means will be released, to be used for the socio-economic development and improvement of the general welfare of every nation."

As for the appeal of the states participating in the Warsaw Treaty to all NATO member-states, to all European countries, for a programme of reducing troops and conventional weapons in Europe the review shows that it is a document of great significance, as the programme of measures in this appeal has a very inspiring nature. The reivew highlights that the meeting of the chief delegates of the Warsaw Treaty states also expressed their common determination to strengthen collaboration for economic advance, the wish being also voiced to actively promote the multilateral collaboration with the other socialist states with a view to making headway on the path of building the socialist and communist society. Naturally, the intensification of collaboration between socialist countries must not be regarded as a narrowing of their sphere of action for it implies a broader work-together with all states, irrespective of their socio-political systems LUMEA writes.

The commentary reads in conclusion: The activity carried out by President Nicolae Ceausescu at the meeting of the Political Consultative Committee, to which the party and the entire people are giving a high appreciation, was a new expression of Romania's determination to fully contribute, along with the other socialist states, and with all countries and peoples of the world, in the struggle for disarmament and peace for the free and independent develoopment of each people, for building a better and juster world placed at shelter against the outbreak of an all-destroying conflict. It is the belief of public opinion in Romania, of the entire Romania people that the proposal made by the meeting will be studied carefully by the other states, that they will stimulate even more the broad movement in Europe and in the world in favour of peace, of understanding and collaboration, this being the vital desideratum of all peoples of this planet.

RCP CENTRAL COMMITTEE PLENUM RESOLUTION

["Resolution of the 23-24 June 1986 RCP Central Committee Plenum"]

[Text] RCP Secretary General Comrade Nicolae Ceausescu chaired a plenum of the RCP Central Committee 23-24 June 1986. The plenum highly values the speech made by Party Secretary General Comrade Nicolae Ceausescu at the opening of the plenum proceedings. This speech is a document of outstanding theoretical and practical value which defines, with scientific discernment and in full accordance with existing opportunities, the main guidelines of Romania's socioeconomic development in the 1986-90 5-Year Plan, in keeping with the targets established by the 13th Congress.

In full unanimity, the plenum decides that the theses and orientations included in the party secretary general's brilliant speech -- a mobilizing and inspiring action program for Communists, all working people, and the entire nation -- should lie at the foundation of the entire activity of party bodies and organiaztions and all socioeconomic units so as to exemplarily fulfill the plan tasks for 1986, the provisions of the current 5-year plan, and the bright party program.

On this occasion, the plenum again points out the decisive role played by Comrade Nicolae Ceausescu in resolving the major problems of the intensive development, at a steady pace, of industry, agriculture, and all sectors of activity, continuously raising the people's material and cultural living standard, and formulating and implementing the entire party-style activity for the construction of the comprehensively developed socialist society and Romania's progress toward communism.

With the best sentiments of gratitude, high regard, and profound esteem, the plenum emphasizes Comrade Nicolae Ceausescu's essential contribution to substantiating the documents of nationwide significance submitted for discussion, and the party secretary general's revolutionary and creative concepts concerning the formulation of our socioeconomic development strategy in direct relationship to the goal of Romania's transition to that higher development stage in which the communist principles of work and life will strongly assert themselves in all fields.

The plenum expresses the Communists' and all our people's full endorsement for Socialist Romania's actions and initiatives concerning the attainment of peace, disarmament, detente, security, and international trust and cooperation as well as full endorsement for our party-state foreign policy promoted with unflinching consistency by Comrade Nicolae Ceausescu, prominent personality of the contemporary age, who enjoys great appreciation throughout the world and is recognized everywhere as a great and untiring hero of peace.

1. The RCP Central Committee plenum, after examining and unanimously endorsing the program for the implementation of the goals put forward by the 13th RCP Congress and aimed at the intensive development of the national economy in the 1986-90 period, stresses the particular importance of the programs of measures per branches, ministries, central departments, and enterprises established at the initiative and under the direct leadership of Comrade Nicolae Ceausescu, programs designed to ensure an intensive development and better organization of production and work, the importance of technologies, the maximum utilization of productive capacities, and the commendable fulfillment of the Eighth 5-Year Plan targets.

The plenum considers that these programs -- finalized in the spirit of recommendations made by the party secretary general during their examination in several meetings at the Party-State Council Commission headed by Comrade Elena Ceausescu, member of the RCP Central Committee Political Executive Committee, first deputy prime minister of the government, and chairman of the National Council for Science and Education -- lay the foundation for a resolute transition to an intensive economic development and create the necessary premises for accentuating qualitative aspects in industry, agriculture, and other branches of the national economy. They ensure a stronger mobilization of existing resources, increase the participation of our country in the world exchange of material values, and further raise efficiency in all fields of activity. In accordance with the decision of the party leadership, the efforts to improve the organization and modernization of production processes will take place in stages, the first one in 1986 and the second one in 1988 up to 1990. This is in accordance with the requirements of the new scientific-technical revolution, the new agrarian revolution, and the attainment of a higher quality of work and life for all the people.

The plenum asks the collective management bodies at all levels and party bodies and organizations to firmly act in a spirit of communist and revolutionary responsibility to commendably implement the program of measures to improve the organization of production and work, by fully utilizing existing capacities; raising the technical and qualitative level of production; applying the socialist principle of remuneration in accordance with the quantity, quality, social importance of the work performed; strengthening workers self-management and self-administration as well as order and discipline at each working place; and substantially raising efficiency in the entire national economy.

The plenum decides that the entire activity of working people's collectives should focus on fulfilling and exceeding the itemized planned production, particularly the one earmarked for export; attaining all plan indicators; modernizing technological manufacturing processes by broadly promoting technical progress; raising the quality of products and their competitiveness on foreign markets; reducing material and energy consumption and cutting down on production costs; increasing the efficiency of fixed assets; further raising labor productivity; applying the overall and direct contract system; training and continuously improving the labor force; and better utilizing all material and human resources available to the national economy.

2. Discussing and endorsing the program on perfecting the system of financing and granting of credits for economic activities and on economic-financial norms, the plenum stressed that the implementation of the historic decisions of the 13th Congress requires, as an objective prerequisite, the improvement of the new economic-financial mechanism and the self-financing system.

The plenum points out the important role played by the further development and strengthening of socialist ownership, the sure basis of our national wealth growth, and asks the management bodies and all working people to resolutely work to radically improve the economic financing and credit system and the economic-financial regulations; administer all material, work, and monetary resources with high efficiency and responsibility; accelerate the production and sale processes; and attain results and profits capable of increasing the contribution of productive units to setting up society's general funds and ensuring the necessary means for self-financing. The plenum stresses the fact that, by improving the financing and credit system and economic-financial regulations, one should ensure the full and efficient utilization of existing productive capacities and built-up areas, reduce specific investments, and set strict norms for stocks of raw and other materials and fuel, in strict accordance with the volume and structure of the planned itemized production. One should also aim at further reducing material and energy consumption; intensifying scientific research; strongly raising labor productivity; substantially reducing costs for each product and overall production costs, particularly general and administrative costs, basing the entire productive activity on efficiency criteria; and increasing personal responsibility and the responsibility of collective management bodies.

In light of Comrade Nicolae Ceausescu's recommendations and orientations, the plenum asks the ministries, central departments, enterprises, financial-banking and planning bodies, and bodies in charge of technical-material supply to strictly observe established measures and regulations, eliminate any kind of waste, and do away with the trend of unjustifiably raising prices, so that all enterprises can finance themselves from their own incomes, fully or to a large extent, thus radically reducing the need for credits.

The plenum decides that firm action should be taken to apply the new economic-financial mechanism in all branches and sectors of activity, rationally utilize all material resources and establish a strict system of savings and rigorous financial discipline, and improve and enhance financial-banking control, primarily the preventive one, with a view to increasing the spirit of responsibility of each collective of working people in observing the country's laws, administering the means entrusted to them with the greatest possible efficiency, and ensuring greater profitability.

3. Examining and unanimously endorsing the draft national plan for the socioeconomic development of the SR of Romania in the 1986-90 5-Year Plan, the plenum points out the party secretary general's decisive role in the entire activity of formulating and substantiating the plan orientations and provisions, which ensure the steady development of industry, agriculture, and the entire national economy.

The plenum also highlights Comrade Academician Doctor Engineer Elena Ceausescu's contribution to elaborating the scientific-technological research program, which ensures the faster intensive development of all branches of the national economy.

In stressing the importance of expanding -- in the 1986-90 period -- Romania's own raw material and energy base, of primarily developing key areas in the processing industry, of constantly perfecting the organizational framework and modernizing the production processes, and of utilizing all resources in our country with maximum efficency, the plenum asks the government, the ministries, industrial centers and enterprises, the party bodies and organizations, and mass and civic organizations to take energetic measures to smoothly implement all plan provisions; to more vigorously increase coal, crude oil, iron ore, and electrical energy production; to optimally fulfill export tasks; and to achieve a higher efficiency in all areas of activity.

4. Examining and endorsing the Draft Development Plan on Agriculture and Food Industry for the 1986-90 period, the plenum stresses that its provisions reflect the recommendations and guidelines of the party secretary general on the intensive development and modernization of agriculture, utilizing lands and the material-technical base with greater efficiency, increasing vegetable production and livestock, increasing the utilization rate of raw materials in the food industry and diversifying its yields; on the complex utilization of the hydro-technical potential, reducing material and energy consumption, and on increasing economic efficiency -- priority goals of the new agrarian revolution in our homeland.

In making proposals for the current 5-year plan, account was taken of the goals included in the national program on achieving secure and stable crops, in the program on self-administration and regional self-sufficiency, and in the other programs on increasing grain yields and industrial plants, on developing vegetable growing, wine and fruit growing, livestock and the fodder base, silkworm breeding and beekeeping.

Assessing that the draft plan for the 1986-90 period ensures proper supplies for all our people and meets the other requirements of the national economy, the plenum asks all responsible officials, state and cooperative agricultural units, and party bodies and organizations to act with great determination to increase the productive potential of lands, increasing vegetable production; to ensure the complete and effective utilization of all lands, applying improved technologies, producing better quality varieties, hybrids, and seedlings; to rationally and effectively administer natural and chemical fertilizers, harvesting and sowing crops during optimal periods of time, increasing livestock, and achieving better production in the animal breeding sector; and to implement the national program on land improvement.

5. The plenum examined and endorsed the Report on the Application of Law Provisions on Territorial, Urban, and Rural Planning, stressing that all areas on our country's territory, irrespective of their purpose or who they belong to, are a part of the uniform land stock of the SR of Romania, a national property that must be utilized, protected, and improved in conformity with the interests of our whole nation.

The plenum decides that, in the spirit of the law on systematization, urban and rural localities must be organized better, plots of building land must be utilized fully and efficiently, any form of waste must be eliminated, and the country's agricultural lands must be increased by all means.

The plenum asks the government, all central institutions in charge of this field, and people's councils to take measures to strictly apply the norms on judiciously measuring localities in terms of area, number of inhabitants, and economic role and position.

Stressing the need to take firm action to reduce building areas and to observe approved legal norms in this respect, and to utilize all available lands in urban and rural localities and reclaim them for agriculture, the plenum decided that, beginning with 1987, lands available in cooperativized areas shall become the property of agricultural production cooperatives and be used as secondary plots by these cooperatives who are obligated to achieve all planned yields. In noncooperativized areas these plots of land shall be taken into the records of people's councils and the agricultural yields that have to be achieved shall be established in keeping with crop plans.

The Ministry of Agriculture and the National Union of Agricultural Production Cooperatives shall present -- by 1 October 1986 and in keeping with norms established for each agricultural unit -- a program of measures aimed at reducing building plots within agricultural units that exceed norm provisions and at returning them to the agricultural land stock.

By 1 October 1986, the Council of Ministers will forward for approval a program of measures aimed at reducing -- within established norms -- the areas occupied by industrial units, storages, institutions, and other units.

The plenum decided that following these measures, the State Planning Committee and the Ministry of Agriculture should also include in their annual production plans the plots of land that exceed the maximum norms permitted for localities and for each economic unit and accordingly, establish tasks for itemized production.

The plenum assesses that all these measures play a particularly important role in raising the level of civilization and bringing the work and living conditions in cities and villages closer, so that by the year 2000 the action of urban and rural planning and organization will be concluded in general terms.

6. The plenum highly appreciated the activity of and particular contribution made by Comrade Nicolae Ceausescu to formulating the important documents adopted during the recent meeting of the Political Consultative Committee of the Warsaw Pact and the excellent way in which our party and state leader presented the principle, consistent, and profoundly constructive position of Romania on the problems discussed, a position that is fully in keeping with the guidelines of the 13th Congress, the supreme interest of our whole nation, and the cause of peace, disarmament, understanding, and cooperation throughout the world.

The plenum fully endorsed the assessment by the party secretary general that the meeting of the Political Consultative Committee made important decisions that reflect the desire of the socialist members to do all they can to change the dangerous trend in events and achieve a policy of detente, disarmament, and peace.

The plenum believes that the appeal program, adopted by the meeting, on reducing weapons, troops, and military expenditures by 25 percent by 1990 is of particular importance and, for the first time, opens real prospects for also proceeding -- along with reducing nuclear weapons -- to a substantial cut in conventional weapons. Thus, the possibility is created to achieve a cut of at least 50 percent in weapons, troops, and military expenditures by the year 2000. On this basis huge material, financial, and human means can be economized to be utilized for socioeconomic development purposes and for supporting the efforts by all people aimed at progress, particularly the efforts of the developing countries.

Stressing that the international situation continues to be particularly serious and complex, the plenum assesses that the basic problem of the present-day world is safeguarding peace, halting the arms race, and proceeding to tangible measures for disarmament. More than ever before it is necessary for peoples and progressive forces throughout the world to intensify their efforts and to cooperate closer and closer to eliminate the danger of a world war that would inevitably turn into a nuclear catastrophe, which would destroy the very conditions for the existence of life on our planet.

The plenum reaffirms Romania's consistent position to struggle with determination to halt the arms race, especially the nuclear arms race, and to reduce conventional weapons in order to prevent the threat of a new world war and to achieve a world of peace, cooperation, and understanding among nations.

On this occasion, too, the plenum highly appreciates Comrade Nicolae Ceausescu's untiring activity and initiatives of great international resonance dedicated to peace and disarmament, to the quietude and security of peoples, and to protecting the supreme right of nations and people to life and a free and dignified existence. This has constantly increased Romania's prestige in the world and has won our country numerous friends in all parts of the planet.

All our party and people will do all they can in the future, too, so that in the spirit of actions and guidelines by the party secretary general, Comrade Nicolae Ceausescu, and of the 13th Congress decisions, they will promote with great determination the policy of detente, disarmament, cooperation, and peace in the world in the belief that only thus will they be able to ensure the implementation of the bold plans and programs on our homeland's socioeconomic development.

Greatly inspired by the mobilizing appeals and calls in the extensive speech made by the party secretary general, Comrade Nicolae Ceausescu, the participants in the plenum fervently appeal to the party bodies and organizations, the Communists, all working people, and the whole nation to spare no efforts and to act with great dedication and revolutionary devotion to commendably fulfill the itemized and export plan tasks, the other indicators, and to ensure the fulfillment of the programs on the intensive development and modernization of all branches of the national economy and concluding the grain harvesting campaign as soon as possible in order to raise the overall activity to the highest qualitative and efficient levels.

Let us do all we can to resolutely implement the historic goals put forward by the 13th Congress and to commendably implement the great party program of building the comprehensively developed socialist society and Romania's advance toward communism, a program that ensures the elevation of Romania to higher and higher peaks of progress, well-being, and civilization!

FURTHER COVERAGE OF 13TH LCY CONGRESS

Krunic on Economic, Political System

LD251404 Belgrade TANJUG in English 1040 GMT 25 Jun 86

[Text] Belgrade, June 24 (TANJUG) -- Yugoslav society will not be able to overcome the present crisis unless everything that enables the reproduction of statist relations in the economic and political system is eliminated, said League of Communists of Yugoslavia (LCY) Presidency member Bosko Krunic at the 13th LCY Congress today.

In his opening statement at the session of the congress Commission for the Development of the Political System, Krunic said that the development of socialist self-management, whose conflict with statism is increasingly acquiring the features of a class struggle, is the condition for surmounting the crisis. It is of major importance that the self-management system be up to its historical task of surmounting the crisis, that it be "economically effective in conditions of commodity production, politically democratic and that it ensure social security," he said.

Krunic assessed that the political system has meaning "only as an effective instrument of support to the further development of socialist production relations" which will provide for highly-productive methods of economic operation, capacitation for operation in market conditions instead of under state patronage, and breaking up of tendencies toward insularity in the economy and society.

The LC's key commitment in developing the political system is not to change it, but to consolidate its foundation: the position of workers and the working class in production and society, the equality of the nations and nationalities of Yugoslavia, the country's federal system and its nonaligned position, and the concept of total national defense, Krunic said.

Changes in the political system should lead to faster integrational processes in the country since tendencies toward disintegration in the economy and the society as a whole are currently Yugoslavia's most serious problem. The question, however, is whether the integration will be based on the power of monopolistic capital, state unitarianism, or the free, self-management association of workers. It is therefore necessary to find solutions providing for the more immediate presence of associated workers in the overall process of delegational decision-making in the Assembly of Yugoslavia and other federal bodies.

Noting that "we find ourselves in difficult times, in an economic crisis and serious social contradiction, which must be resolved without delay," Krunic concluded by saying: "We communists have the strength to bear the greatest burden since the LCY has developed unity of views and has a clear strategy in long-term economic development, ways out of the crisis and the lines of socialist self-management development."

Ideopolitical Commission Reports

LD261649 Belgrade TANJUG Domestic Service in Serbo-Croatian 0937 GMT 25 Jun 86

[Excerpts] Belgrade, 25 Jun (TANJUG) -- Two introductory reports were submitted in the Commission for Ideopolitical, Organizational, Action and Cadre Training and Activity of the LCY and statutory questions.

Hamdija Pozderac spoke about the ideo-political and action training of the League of Communists, while Budimir Vukasinovic explained the essence of the proposed changes and amendments to the LCY Statute.

Introductory Report by Hamidja Pozderac

The questions of ideopolitical, organizational, action and cadre training and activity of the LCY deeply cut into our orientation, way of thinking and action as a whole, Hamidja Pozderac stressed in his introductory report in the commission dealing with these problems. We are, he added, facing the task whereby our organization and our movement should ensure that the present economic crisis and crisis situation in other areas of life, including also the visibly upset unity and action capability of the League of Communists and other organized socialist forces, are not disorientated or directed off the main path, which seems to offer the only opportunities for a speedier way out of the existing situation.

Our task is to define the historical moment and within it develop those characteristics of the League of Communists which speed up the socialist self-managing trasnformation of Yugoslav society. The League of Communists is duty-bound to involve in this process, as much as possible, all creative social forces. Improving and development development alternatives, Pozderac concluded, demands the widest possible political involvement of the working class and the larges socialist forces of our society.

Pointing out that the objectively contradictory position of the League of Communists, both as a party and as a movement, is the cause of many of our present difficulties, Hamidja Pozderac then spoke at length about the confrontation between self-management and statism. Destatization and democracy, with which we were taking apart the federal centralism in order to create the federation of associated labor, have produced some kind of quite chaotic, insufficiently linked polycentric statism, with all of our partializations of consciousness and action. This has also led to the pragmatization of economic life, transforming socialist forces into the extended arm of state organs and to other negative consequences. All this, Pozderac pointed out, considerably decreases the efficiency of the social system. Because of this, Pozderac went on, we are holding the 13th LCY Congress under the sign of struggle against statist and technocratic usurpations of self-management. The first and unavoidable step in the series of tasks is the control by the working class over social capital, which lead to the working class taking control of integrational and coordinative functions in social reproduction. To identify in precise terms, in the political sense, the forces which offer resistance to this orientation of ours and to undertake very concrete measures to rid them of their monopolistic positions is the task of this congress.

Pozderac then stressed the need to urgently open up new and wider spaces of destatization. "The republics and provinces can implement their responsibility for the total development of Yugoslavia more successfully only on the basis of their own self-managing transformation, their own speedier and more democratic material and self-managing development. Because they themselves, this is now clear everywhere, cannot develop further with republican statism, as much as our society could not survive and develop with some kind of statist centralism. Socialist self-management has not had much luck with either, not to say that both lead to destruction. Each delay in the self-managing transformation of the republics, provinces and the federation, and delays in their development and transformation into self-managing democratic communities of working people and citizens, nations and nationalities, make more difficult the self-managing integration of our multinational community, bring into danger the propserity of our nations and nationalities and hinder the strengthening of independence, integrity and security."

Hamidja Pozderac then spoke at length about the democratization of internal relations in the League of Communists, which is the only basis on which its unity can be erected. The conviction has matured that democracy is not something which will be added to self-management at a particular stage of its development, rather it is the unavoidable prerequisite of its present survival, development and future. The task of the congress is to practically establish what sort of means, procedures, solutions and what sort of overall climate can speed up this process.

In the structure of the League of Communists, a number of its members and their capability, we have a completely new solution and special tasks, Pozderac said, and in this context he presented the information that over 305,000 new members were admitted to the League of Communists from 1981 to 1985. However, because of the exacerbation of contradictions of the economic and overall social situation, as well as because of signficiant departures from the proclaimed policy of the League of Communists, we have had a reduction in the number of new admissions and a higher number of members leaving the League of Communists, in particular workers from direct production and other production structures. Meanwhile, the participation of members from nonproductive structures has increased. Therefore it is not an accident that in our policy compromises have been made even when there was no need for them.

Pozderac then stressed that democratic centralism is the expression and the most adequate organizational prerequisite of ideological and action unity of the LCY. Its application presupposes a democratic discussion and struggle of views, with the obligatory acceptance and consistent implementation of the majority decisions. As the main principle of internal LCY life, democratic centralism represents a prerequisite for its existence and activity as a united organization, as a prerequisite for organization and the influence of the working class.

I am convinced that in this way -- united, and this means democratically and with the struggle for various views on the same path -- we will reach the resolution in the proposal of which we clearly said that our force was in our unity, Hamidja Pozderac said in conclusion in his introductory report.

Introductory Report by Budimir Vukasinovic

Explaining the text of changes and amendments to the LCY statute, Budimir Vukasinovic, who submitted the second introductory report in this commission, stressed that this document reflects in a satisfactory way the real needs of the LCY and opportunities on offer at this juncture and that it would contribute to achieving the results expected from the LCY. The statutory solutions provide a basis and obligation for the members, organizations and organs of the League of Communists to realize a comprehensive insight into everyday manifestations and problems and direct them how to act and behave in everyday social and political life, Vukasinovic said at a session of the Commission for Ideopolitical, Organizational, Action and Cadre Training and Activity of the LCY and Statutory Questions.

Explaining the essence and significance of some of the most important changes and amendments to the LCY statute, Vukasinovic said that in a public discussion on this document there were suggestions that the text of the preamble of the proposal on the historical role of Josip Broz Tito should be revised or extended. The most numerous were the views that the present text should be retained, which was done. The stand that this same text should be in the statutes of the republican and provincial Leagues of Communists were also retained.

The public discussion, Vukasinovic said, as well as the entire historical experience has confirmed the justification of the further development of the LCY as a united revolutionary organiation of the Yugoslav working class. The unity of the LCY is particularly significant and topical in the situation characterized by the trends of autarchy and disintegration, group-property relations and bureaucratists etatist monopolies and when we are experiencing the isolationism of the national economies, which not only limits the overall reproduction of socialist self-management into the integral system of social relations, but also in themselves carry tendencies of the federalization of the League of Communists and the danger from its increasingly stronger "turning toward" state and administrative structure. Therefore the ideological, political and actional unity of the LCY presents itself as the essential prerequisite for the change of the existing situation.

Unity is reached through analyzing differences and through a democratic dialogue about them, and then through responsible implementation of established stands, rather than through dogmatic glossing over differences and bureaucratic preventions that they do not come out, Vukasinovic said, explaining formulations on the unity and independence of the republican Leagues of Communists and the united LCY. Developing and realizing unity, he added, presupposes a democratization of the internal life and relations in the League of Communists, including all the differences in views expressed during discussions and making decisions -- those who are a minority on some questions in a discussion, can be in a majority on others. Contrary to this political process is the institutionalizing minority, since this would lead to fractions and make impossible the realization of the democratically expressed will of the majority, turned into stands, conclusions and decisions.

Whenever unity is discussed on the working and class basis, Vukasinovic stressed, we should not lose sight of the national component of this unity. Each discussion in which, even indirectly, the existence of the republican and provincial Leagues of Communists, which within the framework of the LCY exist as an expression of the multinational composition of Socialist Yugoslavia, and their certain independence within the framework of the LCY, is questioned, and is backward and unacceptable. Similarly, according to Vukasinovic, neither the role nor the tasks of the republican and provincial Leagues of Communists could be reduced only to the struggle for independence and implementation of their republican and provincial interests. They are also responsible for the entirety of the content of revolutionary trends in Yugoslavia.

Budimir Vukasinovic then recalled that special attention had been devoted to statutory solutions which more clearly and in more precise terms develop democratic centralism as a general basis for overall relations in the LCY. Democratic centralism is not pulling "authority" of any of the organs over others, it is not a hierarchical vertical linking of committees, or leaderships of various ranks with the aim of centralizing and concentrating power in some circles and groups. It is not the form for replacement of will and mood of the membership by the will of individuals and informal groups and it is not a curtailed principle which would be valid up to the level of the republics and allow the possibility of appropriate behavior at the level of central organs, Vukasinovic said.

With the formulations on democratic centralism, attempts were made to answer the question how in the current situation of critical disturbances and accumulated contradictions this principle should become the instrument for overcoming contradictions and developing their unity.

The statute strengthens the obligation that the principles of democratic centralism should be applied in a unified and continuous fashion by everybody from basic organization up to all organs and forums of the LCY, Budimir Vukasinovic said.

Without the category of independence of the republican and provincial Leagues of Communists, he went on to say, it would not be possible to express national, socioeconomic and other characteristics and special features of the role of the LCY. Independence, however, does not mean independence and sovereignty in a dogmatic or state and legal sense, rather, it means the right and obligation to establish and realize the policy of the LCY. The LCY Central Committee is duty-bound to adopt the policy which is of joint interest for the entire LCY, to ensure its implementation and undertake measures for consistent realization of this policy. That is why in the statute the relation between the LCY organs and the organs of the republican and provincial Leagues of Communists is developed more clearly and comprehensively.

The amendments to the statute also stress the obligation that the League of Communists should constantly strengthen and develop ideopolitical and action unity. It is necessary to formulate a norm in the statute for the obligation of the League of Communists to comprehensively shed light on the phenomena in society and establish their real causes. Measures for strengthening responsibility in the League of Communist are particularly developed, together with the significant development of the methods of criticism, self-criticism, struggle of views, and so forth. The stands on the cadre policy are developed in more precise terms, with the stress on the need for their socialization. As Vukasinovic explained, the LCY Central Committee is duty-bound to define in precise terms the criteria for registering, proposing and adopting proposals for candidates for delegates of forums and members at all levels of organizing of the LCY.

With the changes and amendments of the statute it is envisaged that the LCY Congress should elect the Central Committee, Statutory, and Supervisory Commissions. From these structures the LCY Central Committee elects the Presidium as an executive political organ. Another innovation is that presidents of presidiums are elected in the republican and provincial Leagues of Communists. This is not only a formal harmonization of titles and functions. Rather, it is of essential significance for developing the collective work and responsibility of the organs of the League of Communists, Vukasinovic said. Only some of the corrections of the solutions thus far on establishing the unified membership fee for the LCY, as defined in the statute, were entered into the statute. It was left for the LCY Central Committee to find an appropriate solution for the membership fee, in consultation with the Central Committees of the republican Leagues of Communists, provincial committees of the provincial Leagues of Communists and the Committee of the LCY Organization in the Yugoslav People's Army.

Vukasinovic also mentioned some unacceptable proposals for the changes and amendments of the statute put forward in the public discussion. They are, as he said, suggestions that, apart from being a united organization, the LCY should also be a monolithic organization, some kind of social superstructure and command center, as well as suggestions to abolish the self-centeredness of the republican and provincial leagues. Also untenable are proposals which, if they were entered into the statute, could lead to negations of national interests and particular features, and on this basis to abolishing the independence of the republican and provincial organizations. Suggestions to turn the LCY in to some kind of ideological or "political administrator," of either a centralist or decentralist type, are unacceptable, and we should take a resolute stand detaching ourselves from them.

The statute cannot regulate all questions, it cannot have a solution for every situation and circumstance. It is not omnipotent, but it should not be powerless either. A clear, precise, principled, and concrete statute is a safe support for increasingly more successful and responsible activity of the entire LCY, Budimir Vukasinovic said in conclusion of his introductory report at a session of the Commission for Ideological Questions and the Statute of the LCY of the 13th LCY Congress.

The first participant in the discussion and the oldest delegate of the congress, Kresimir Britvic, stressed that the rank and file expect a great deal from this congress.

Stevan Bjedov proposed several amendments to the LCY statute, among them the proposal that in the LCY there should be a unified way of regulating the duration of the mandate for the presidents of the Presidium, Central Committees and provincial conference of the League of Communists to 2 years, plus another 2, and of executive secretaries to 4 years, with the possibility of an additional mandate. He in particular stressed the need to strengthen the ideological capability of secretaries and secretariats of the basic organization of the League of Communists.

A proposal that the mandate of congress delegates should last until the next congress was supported by Drago Rakocevic, who then proposed several amendments to the proposed statute. Among them is the proposal that Article 28 should explicitly state that professing a religion and nationalistic behavior is incompatible with LCY membership. Drago Rakocevic in particular pointed out the need for differentiation among the ranks of the LCY. Differentiation is being carried out intolerably slowly, starting with Kosovo all the way up to the lack of implementation of economic stabilization and conclusions of the LCY Central Committee. I am not speaking in favor of a campaign, or purge, but of strengthening responsibility and of settling accounts with those who break the rules of party behavior, Rakocevic said.

Radovic Opens Education Session

[Text] Belgrade, June 25 (TANJUG) -- It is not enough that a clear ideological platform of a socialist self-management transformation of education, science and culture be defined by highest party forums, but the League of Communists must wage a battle for its implementation in the daily social practice, as LCY Presidency member Miljan Radovic said today at the 13th LCY Congress.

Opening the work of the congress Commission for Ideological Questions in Education, Science and Culture, Radovic set out that the development of the Yugoslav science and technology was a primary prerequisite of the country's further economic development, an economic development which must proceed from the necessity of the national economy's openness to the world and its more forceful presence on the international market.

Special measures must be taken to insure a continued financing and work of the approved common scientific macro-projects in the country, and a greater balance between the basic, developmental and applied research, as Radovic said.

The overall education system in Yugoslavia, as he set out, must be further developed along the line of gradually overcoming the predominating tendency of averageness in quality and, at times, a negative personnel selection. It is necessary, without any hestitation, to open new and greater possibilities for detecting, stimulating and developing research talents in the course of schooling, and for systematically employing and following the work of talented researchers, as he said.

It is extremely important, as Radovic assessed, to introduce an integrated information system which would insure a speedy flow of scientific, technological, economic, financial and other types of information necessary for a successful implementation of developmental, economic and business policies.

If the LCY is successfully to exercise its leading role, all necessary conditions must be insured for theoretical work and research, especially in social sciences, as Radovic said. This, as Radovic elaborated, would enable a deeper understanding of contradictions in society, point to optimal developmental solutions, disclose new possibilities of socialism and self-management, and contribute to the further development of the socialist self-management consciousness and of the working-class essence and values of the Yugoslav socialist society.

The League of Communists, as Radovic said, must more vigorously than so far mobilize all social forces and potentials which can contribute to a successful implementation of the basic principles of the education reform.

In all educational institutions, starting from kindergartens, it is necessary to step up the creation of conditions for the full equality of members of all Yugoslav nations and nationalities in terms of their schooling in their respective mother tongue and more even conditions in which they acquire the basis for higher education, as Radovic noted.

Radovic termed the battle for quality in education the main battle Communists must wage in the respective area. Communists must decisively struggle against those who indoctrinate the young from anti-socialist and anti-communist positions and who belittle the achievements and values of the Yugoslav socialist revolution, as he underscored.

Radovic drew attention that it was indispensable also to launch an action for improving the situation in the area of culture. Culture must not be left to whims of the market, monopolies, bad taste, administrative scissors, narrow or clan interests of individuals or groups. A greater circulation of theatrical and music performances, art exhibits and museum displays, and a better utilization of the library funds would create the most favourable conditions for culture to spread beyond the big urban centres, contributing to the fellowship and better mutual understanding in the Yugoslav multi-national community, as Radovic said.

Education Commission Session

LD262243 Belgrade TANJUG Domestic Service in Serbo-Croatian 0835 GMT 26 Jun 86

[Excerpts] Belgrade, 26 Jun (TANJUG) -- On the 2d day of the work of the 13th LCY Congress in the Commission for Education, Science and Culture, the first to take the floor was Gordana Kosanovic. Having noted that some congress resolution recommendations are generic, she spoke in favor of introducing the commitment whereby social accords by the republics and provinces in the domain of education should be consistently carried out. The Communists is associated labor and in self-management interest communities, too, should be put under the obligation to treat the strategic programs in the educational system as production and not as consumption.

Division is still present in assembly halls and in schoolyards where the teachers and the youngsters of different nationalities sit separately. Sonja Bulga demanded categorically that this must be abolished. She stressed that it was the teachers who were most responsible for that state of affairs. In the Titova Mitrovica area, there are still some communes where a number of educational workers are employed in the educational institutions who do not accept the LCY's policy and they must be removed from such institutions.

Intranational relations in culture were discussed by Ciril Zlobec, who did not agree with the assessment that few mistakes are committed in our society. The contradictions are economic, cultural and pertain to the domain of civilization. He added that on several occasions praise was heard of the joint educational core subject matter. However, Slovenia rejected them, believing that they constituted an attack on its national integrity.

I do not claim, Zlobec stressed, that national consciousness a priori leads to nationalism. In his view, to reject core subject matter is not separatism, but an unconstitutional manifestation. The responsibility for education has been handed over to the republics and provinces, and, in this specific case, this is not being abided by.

Zlobec illustrated this by saying that a Slovene pupil reads 70 percent of the texts translated from the other languages of the Yuglosav nations and nationalities, while in other environments this is not the case.

This drew a riposte from Oskar Davico, who considered that Zlobec's method of thinking about joint core subject matter was erroneous. Literature does not admit percentages and quantities: The overriding fact in literature must be quality.

Preoccupied by many major problems, we are not aware of the extent to which nonintegration and fragmentation in science will make us dependent on the world developments in this area, Mirceta Djurovic stressed. In his view, the problem is not only with our economic difficulties, but in the unsuitable nature of many of our systemic solutions. Science is firmly entrenched behind the republican, regional and municipal borders and tinged with separatist interests. It is not surprising therefore, Djurovic said, that its institutions give way to political movements.

Speaking at length of the "stupid cadre solutions," Fadil Hadzic pointed out that people with a cultural background are represented least of all in our diplomatic and consular missions because, in his view, the creative intelligentsia is considered to be politically unsuitable by the very fact that they are involved in culture, whereas the bureaucrats are "professsionally specialized" to the job.

Having stressed that political opponents should not be allowed to have the initiative of working on the awareness of the masses, Mihailo Lalic stressed that there are still some institutions which one could join if one has asserted himself as an adversary of the L.C. He asked: Who is controlling the channels for the people leaving for specialization, who published libelous books which bristle with hatred of all achievements of the revolution and of anything to do with socialism? He noted that there are institutions maintained by social funds in which the insults hurled at the communists are appreciated.

We again swear by science, and yet despite that our science is vegetating at the bottom of the European ladder, ahead of Albania, Joze Ciuha remarked. He expressed the view that the time has come to stop telling the tales about what "should and must" be done. Instead, a transfer to revolutionary action is required in which everyone knows what his duty is and everyone is responsible for his work. Is it not paradoxical, Ciuha wondered, that some journalists and cultural workers are to be found among the culprits for all sorts of mistakes made in our society.

Drago Rakocevic and Katica Hedrih concentrated on scientific and research work. Rakocevic drew particular attention to scientific work in the Yugoslav People's Army, insisting on cadre investments and cooperation between the Army and other educational institutions. Katica Hedrih briefed delegates on the experiences of Nis University, which are motivated by a desire for the strengthening of new blood in the sciences, better cooperation with the economy, and a request to revive morale and evaluate knowledge and work.

Listening to everything said at the congresses so far, it seems as if there is nothing new in this outburst of words, Zivan Milisavac said, adding that one wonders to whom and why all this is being said. Who is competent enough to unite this country, economically, ideologically and intellectually, if not the ones who had made it such, Milisavac noted, adding that nationalism and chauvinism are not being nipped in the bud. We are hitting the snake on its tail, Milisavac stressed, and within this context he mentioned the organization of Yugoslav writers which has not enough strength to overcome nationalism as the past, as the 19th century. Thus, writers resemble the politicians with whom they are usually angry. Milisavac recalled that at a time when anthologies of European and world literature are being compiled, we cannot agree on the terminology: Yugoslav literature or literatures. I declare that I am not a unitarist, nor do I want to negate national literatures, nations or nationalities, he added. In his reply to Ciril Zlobec, he stressed that he did not understand the panic of losing national identity. It is a disgrace that writers have become advocates of outdated ideas. Milisavac warned of decay and rot, which has particularly penetrated the top strata of our society, pointing out that this is not the result of the revolution but its negation. We are ideologically disunited and broken up, and the LC must discover the causes and eliminate them. So-called common nuclei did not only cause damage to the Slovene people; the whole thing is badly made and has caused damage to all of us because the basic criterion of moral is the greatness of a literary work, and not a national belonging.

Georgi Dimitrovski said that there is no separatism in Yugoslavia, but, above all, regional egotism. One should say clearly that federalism also implies responsibility toward others, and not only the right to national independence. However, culture ought to be something different, a factor of integration. I feel that I am a Yugoslav, Dimitrovski stressed, but I say that I am Macedonian because the negation of my people today also negates my existence.

Ciril Zlobec replied again, saying that he respected such an aspect of national awareness as well, but different sentiments should also be respected, Speaking about nuclei, he did not have a percantage in mind, but the fact that one should respect the desire of a nation to be on an equal footing with the world, and also Yugoslavia.

Our overall cultural situation is not good. Some cultural workers try to outdo one another by shouting across the republican and provincial borders, completely forgetting about our fellowship. There is an increasing number of ideological novels. Some write them themselves, and some been dictated, but it is always the matter dogmatic ideology. Having said that, Prvoslav Ralic was greeted with spontaneous applause.

Delegate Ratko Zanetic dwelt on some questions concerning the further development of science and spoke about the Communists' duty to fight against a sectarianist isolationism of science, the alienation of its results from creative application in production, as well as against its educational role and elitist development.

Petar Rakocevic, Djordje Jovic and Jakim Petrovski joined in the demands of the delegates for a speedier integration of Yugoslav economy, science and education, while Aleksandra Ninkovic and Gordana Stanojevic spoke about the problems of education and the employment of young people. Those who completed their working life should retire and show their trust in young people, said Gordana Stanojevic. If they think that they have never taught anyone anything, I wonder what they have been doing all their lives.

So far 66 delegates and guests have taken part in the work of the Commission for Ideological Questions in Education, Science and Culture, and another 29 will participate in tomorrow's debate.

Political Commission Addressed

LD262245 Belgrade TANJUG Domestic Service in Serbo-Croatian 0938 GMT 26 Jun 86

["13th LCY Congress: Commission for the Political System" -- TANJUG headline]

[Excerpts] Belgrade, 26Jun (TANJUG) -- By calling for more intensified process of ideopoliticial differentiation in the entire LCY and in its leaderships, in particular, for establishing unity in deeds and not words and for tightening the discipline and responsibility from the "top" to the "base"... Cirilo Blazevski, the first participant in today's work of the commission indicated tht the tenor of the discussion would be more frank and criticial.

Expressing his support for the congress draft resolution on the political system, Dusan Popovic stressed that the document clearly defined the nature of the changes which the LC is advocating. They are progressive changes from the historic-class point of view, the champions of which are the immediate producers, i.e. workers in associated labor. In his view, individual members of the LC cannot decide, each on his own, what is revoluntionary at a given moment and conduct his "own private revolution" since the LC is an organized and effective vanguard of like-minded. We cannot give our support to such slogans as "We are for changing everything" or "We are for everything that is different from what we already have" - We must reject all the calls for changes which could lead to bourgeois private ownership monopoly or the monopoly of centralist etatism, Popovic said.

The Critical Analysis states that an informal mechanism of decision-making has replaced and pushed aside the delegate system. This statement, Pasic said, is correct but failed to be further developed. The protagonists of power are hiding under the cloak of self-management, they are here, among us and are actively involved in the campaign against and denunciation of bureaucratism and the attempts to usurp self-management. All the institutions of self-management have acquired their surrogates whose professional-administrative stratum represents a monopoly of local, regional, factional and other interests. The most dangerous, however, is the monopoly of politicial centres which favor national interests since it gives rise to the conflict between the national states and the federation.

Pasic also warned of the attempts to distort the fundamental principle of national equality which, in his view, must not be achieved at the expense of the rights of the working people and citizens, and should not be reduced to the level of mechanical parity and nationality "key" in which case it will become its own contradiction and be a direct cause of nationalism, Pasic concluded.

In Ljiljana Zorkic's view, our journalists have succeeded in fulfilling the tasks which society placed before them. They have exposed many negative phenomena, particularly etatisms. However, in doing this they often remain on their own for which reason they are sometimes the butt of sharp criticism even when they called for a speedier implementation of the long-term program of economic stabilization or for normalizing the situation in Kosovo. Ljiljana Zorkic drew attention to the difficult material position affecting the media. If it is allowed to continue it could soon jeopardize their ability to carry out their duty of informing Yugoslav and world public about events in the country on time and in the best possible manner.

The Critical Analysis of the functioning of the political system does not defend all the aspects of the system, as is being maintained. It supports only those basic aspects which have been affirmed in practice, Josip Vrhovec noted. It is not true either that the Critical Analysis suggests conclusions to the effect that the system itself is good but the people are evil, he added. The document calls for changes in everything that failed to be affirmed in practice, be it laws or institutions. However, the problem is that we often failed to gain support by the subjective forces, including the LC.

Vrhovec went on to stress that numerous tasks set at the 12th LCY Congress had not been implemented in practice. The basic omission in his view is the fact that the LCY was not separated from the state. The consequences of this is that workers are seceding from the LC. Here lies, in his view, the basic cause of the present social and economic crisis which, in fact, began with the adoption of the unrealistic medium-term 1976 development plan. Tito and Kardelj had warned about this omission but the republican and provincial development plans which had no hope of succeeding had not been revised. This led to large debts abroad.

While the republics and provinces became stronger, the federation became weaker but, Vrhovec believes, the Constitution is not to blame for this. What is to blame is lack of respect for the Constitution. The LC has also isolated itself within republican and provincial borders. Consensus was abused at the expense of common Yugoslav goals. The LC was not able to resist all this and thus we arrived at a stage in which the ideological divisions became identical to republican and provincial borders, Josip Vrhovec said.

Marjan Rozic believes that the past party congresses in the republics and provinces only diffidently pointed out that the frontal LC activity has been reduced to the least, impermissible extent. This error should not be repeated at this 13th Congress too. Rozic went on to say that the LC activity in the socialist alliance is misunderstood -- as if the LC should be in power there. This expresses doubt in self-management and in turn is conducive to strengthening statism.

Just like Vrhovec, Rozic too pointed to the collusion between the LC and state organs. This is also the reason for the SAWPY not being the motivating force of society and yet, without a politically organized people, a swift way out of the crisis cannot be expected either, Rozic stressed.

When we speak about the continuity and future of our socialist revolution depending in a crucial way on the extent to which the young people are the champions of its ideas and goals, then we must also literally understand this premise and in practice adopt a corresponding attitude to it and not see it merely as a theoretical premise which binds no one, Kemal Buzaljko stressed, in speaking about the social role of the young generation.

Ilija Nikezic said that weaknesses of society also had a negative influence on the system of all-people's defense and social self-protection as a significant segment of society. The main problems of society, such as weakening of the leading role of the working class and of self-management, in addition to the strengthening of nationalism, unemployment, a fall in the standard of living, and the spread of disintegrational processes in the political and economic system, are also "eroding" the defense system. Because, as he pointed out, the Army is not in a glass house isolated from what is going on in our society.

Nikezic emphasized in particular the problem of strengthening nationalism and recalled the dangerous theses about the Army being a "supranational, unitarist-centralist and bureaucratic-dogmatic structure" which has no understanding for national identity and intranational relations. It would be very wrong indeed were the LC to underestimate the consequences of such views, Nikezic said at the end of his statement in the debate.

Implementing constitutionality and legality in our society is not and should not merely be a juridical question, Bosa Nenadic warned. She spoke critically about the parts of the resolution which refer to the implementation of these principles and she stressed that the sociopolitical essence of these principles, which protect the class foundations of the system, should not be forgotten. Implementation of the constitutionally and legality is not merely a question of the judicial hierarchy, nor should it only be the task of state and judicial organs. The LC has often stood idly by when these principles were violated, while individuals, including organs of sociopolitical communities, had often taken part in this themselves, she added.

We want to know who is dividing the working class of Yugoslavia, who is separating those employed in material production from those working in the nonproductive branches of the economy, said Simo Mamula. He proposed that the term "working class" no longer be used, for by this term many take it only to mean immediate producers. Instead, Mamula added, one should use the term "working people", to prevent turning the workers -- the immediate producers -- against those we cannot do without, such as engineers, physicians, economists. In the same way, he pointed out, it is untenable to always turn to the basic party organization which we consider omnipotent in resolving our problems. In fact, we must primarily turn to higher party forums, such as central committees, with such demands.

Vukadin Rakovic, Cvetan Mircevski and Bora Andjelkovic also took part in the discussion. The commission resumes work this afternoon.

In order to overcome the crisis, which is very deeply rooted, we must break down resistance, particularly ideological resistance, if we are to change the situation. The consolidation of the united Yugoslavia, which is the expression of the need of our every nation and nationality, should be the focal point of our overall activity, particularly the activity of communists stressed Mihailo Brailovic. One of the fundamental tasks of this congress is to establish a clearly defined program to ensure the unity of the country, Brajovic said.

Marko Martinovic also pointed to the seriousness of the crisis citing nationalism as the main evil of our present time. Nationalism, he added, threatens to lead to bloodshed. That is why there can be no compromise with nationalists as they are the enemies of both their own and other peoples.

Nenad Bucin noticed that when it comes to priority duties of communists and their organizations and organs, our party document of 2 or more decades ago has been much more articulate, explicit, direct and above all clearer.

How do we transfer the contents and the ideological potential from public debates to "papers" and our own action programs? Among selected and avoided political demands are there also those which are not refuted on the political scene in a convincing enough and democratic way? What is meant by opening a "public discussion" together with a simultaneous panoramic labelling of all the possible "anti-stands", "anti-demands" and "anti-interests"? Asking whether this is encouragement or a stimulus or else an effort to discourage, Nenad Bucin stressed that his reservations to such a method are not only of a methodological but also of a fundamental nature.

Ivan Cudina and Mirko Raca talked about a need for a speedier solution to the problem of unemployment, that is the restoration of dignity to associated labor, assessing that the LC must be the main exponent of the action here.

Stressing that lack of vigilance on the part of LC organs contributed to the escalation of nationalism in Kosovo, Kriste Bekaj warned of a need for party organizations to exert maximum efforts in the realization of tasks from the platform on Kosovo which, as the main goal, outlines the indispensable need to halt the emigration of Serbs and Montenegrins. But, he emphasized, we also need the broad support of the subjects outside the province in order to succeed. The working class has not lost and cannot lose trust in the LCY, said Sretenka Loncar, explaining that one can only lose trust in organs and leaderships, starting from the basic organization, up to the LCY Central Committee. She asked that we stop referring, in an impersonal way, to the exponents of resistance to the implementation of the long-term stabilization program, bureaucratism, statism...The first and most important step after the congress must be to carry out a differentiation from these forces and to identify them.

We have never ended the corrections to the political system because, in the opinion of Metodija Duskovski, the LC has an opportunist attitude to this task. He expressed his fear that something similar might happen with the proposals from the "Critical Analysis" and the discussion held on this document.

Branko Manasiev, Pavel Ungur and Kosta Jancevski also took part in this afternoon's discussion.

Dizdarevic at International Commission

LD261435 Belgrade TANJUG Domestic Service in Serbo-Croatian 0844 GMT 26 Jun 86

[Excerpts] Belgrade, 26 Jun (TANJUG) -- The existence and activity of the Nonaligned Movements' policy exert a constant pressure against intensifying divisions and confrontations, and represent the broadest buttress for a way out of confrontation and for negotiations and reaching of agreements on genuine universal detente.

It is precisely such a development which tallies with the interests and needs of nonaligned countries. This was stated by [Foreign Secretary] Raif Dizdarevic in his speech in the debate which resumed today at the Commission for Issues of International Cooperation of the LCY and of the Foreign Policy of Yugoslavia.

He devoted his speech to the situation in the Nonaligned Movement, the role and tasks of the movement in the existing exacerbated international political and economic situation, relations in the Balkans, and the interdependence between Yugoslavia's international position and its internal situation.

Dealing with the period since the last congress, Dizdarevic noted that world relations had experienced grave tribulations, manifested above all by powerful pressures exerted on the progressive achievements in international relations. This refers to attempts to halt the great historical progress toward the emanicipation of international relations, thwart the strengthening of the principle of all countries' equitable participation in international relations, preserve and intensify the domination by the interests of the richest in international economic relations, and use the differences in the development and the problems of the nonaligned and developing countries as a means of exerting pressure on their internal development and behavior in international relations.

The absence of a dialogue in relations between the North and South, which have been pushed by East-West relations onto the sidelines, was described by Dizdarevic as an explosive powder keg which would further endanger economic development, cooperation, stability and world peace.

Adding to this the growing confrontation between powers and blocs, and also the arms race, Dizdarevic went on to stress that holding negotiations and reaching agreements is today a necessity, both for the West, the East and the whole world. Everyone needs the prospects of security, and this aim will grow and nullify strategies which offer the prospects of a threatened existence. In this context, he deliberated on the immense role and historical tasks of the Nonaligned Movement. This great movement, in Dizdarevic's words, does not align itself either with confrontations or with negotiations in favor of one power against the other. The Nonaligned Movement is aligned to its own principles, goals, interests and stances.

He expressed the conviction that this would also be reiterated in Harare.

It is this attitude which Yugoslavia always adopted in its activity. As Dizdarevic stressed, among other things, Yugoslavia always assesses any policy according to its content and its contribution to peace, cooperation, equality, detent, disarmament, development of all countries, and so forth.

Recalling the 25th anniversary of the first nonaligned conference in Belgrade, Dizdarevic said that the movement had played a major role in mankind's most recent history and that nonalignment had provided a powerful impact to progressive thought and the practice of international relations. The movement had grown constantly, while at the same time, Dizdarevic stressed, there had not been at the same time any major spread in blocs or the formation of new military alliances; some military alliances (CENTO, SEATO) had even disappeared, and this is undoubtedly the result of the influence exerted by the activity of the Nonaligned Movement.

We must not idealize the role of the movement and the situation in it; the movement is not only part of a greatly interdependant world, but also one of great differences and deep contradictions.

History has left the nonaligned countries a grave legacy. In this context, Dizdarevic noted that any attempt at introducing ideologization into the movement and causing political divisions within it would be reactionary because it inflicted harm to the positive role of the movement and to its contribution to world progress.

Dizdarevic noted that since the New Delhi summit, the situation in the movement had consolidated on the basis of its original principles and goals. He expressed the conviction that conditions are being created to have the forthcoming summit in Harare open up a new stage in the way the movement operated, a stage in which its activities would be less in the nature of declarations but orientated more toward actions.

Raif Dizdarevic stressed in particular that Yugoslavia continues to enjoy the prestige of being one of the most active and most influential nonaligned countries.

Raif Dizdarevic went on to emphasize that only by respecting the historical legacy and the realities in the Balkans is it possible to develop cooperation and create conditions for turning the Balkans into a zone of peace and cooperation.

He stressed that all responsible protagonists in the Balkan countries must deliberate on what they would bequeath to future generations: understanding, mutual respect, comprehensive cooperation, rapproachement and friendship; or mistrust, greater national aspirations, fanning of nationalistic passions and hatred and illusions that aspirations which had been rejected by history long ago as irretrievable forever, could nevertheless be achieved.

Yugoslavia constantly aspires, Dizdarevic went on, to contribute through its policy of goodneighbourliness to cooperation, peace and understanding in that area, and it would continue to do. The policy of goodneighbourliness based on the well known principles and accompanied by full respect for them, has been and remains the priority of the Yugoslav foreign policy.

At the end of his speech, Raif Dizdarevic said that Yugoslavia's stable development and unity had in a crucial manner determined its international position and influence. We would make a mistake, he said, were we not to understand that our internal difficulties and our tardiness and inefficiency in resolving them, in particular the manifestations of disunity, phenomena of nationalism and national, or rather, nationalistic narrow-mindedness and egoism, are altering the view the world has of us. In his words, the strength of Yugoslavia's resistance to external pressures lays in the stability of its internal situation.

Svetislav Popovic spoke on, among other things, the dangerous consequences of the U.S. armed attack on Libya, and denounced looking for pretexts to violate generally acceptable norms of international behavior and lend legitimacy to new dangerous methods in the behavior of superpowers toward small independent countries.

Popovic stressed that the existence of Macedonia and of the Macedonian people could not depend on any arbitrary assessments from foreign quarters. In condemning Albania's interference in our internal affairs, he said that we could discuss with Albania all aspects of cooperation, but not Kosovo, which is our internal affair. Popovic also criticized the manifestation of various trends in our country, such as articles in some papers about the events in Kosovo, and he concluded by saying that in a nutshell, Kosovo is a Yugoslav problem.

Anton Vratusa also spoke about relations with neighbors. He advocated that the policy of open borders and good-neighborliness be continued. Such cooperation, he said, is not only in the interest of speedier progress of our national minorities in neighboring countries, but also in the interest of the development of economic relations with other countries. Good-neighborliness, he continued, is an expression of the Yugoslav nonaligned policy and of adherence to the spirit of Helsinki.

Delegate Angela Kuhar spoke about the position of nationalities in Yugoslavia and about their significance in spreading cooperation and understanding among neighboring countries. She spoke in favor of the consistent implementation of LCY policy in resolving the position and implementing the rights of nations in Yugoslavia and in neighboring countries.

If we want to resolve the problem of foreign debts, the condition must be set to tie the debts of developing countries to the possibility of selling their products and earning convertible currency, Janez Stanovnik said in speaking about the present juncture in international economic relations.

Brana Markovic spoke about the peace movements in the world, particularly in Western Europe. He pointed out that they are among the forces with which Yugoslavia shared many common goals. He advocated that closer cooperation be realized between the Socialist Alliance, the Youth Organization and the Yugoslav League for Peace and these movements.

Danilo Zorn spoke about Yugoslav-Italian border cooperation. He stressed that this cooperation is of major significance to the progress of our national minorities. However, he said, there are still major difficulties in implementing the bilateral Osimo agreements, particularly in the economic sphere.

We have never renounced the principle of socialization of our foreign policy, Trajan Petrovski said. In this context he also pointed out the contribution which the SR of Macedonia made to the affirmation of Yugoslavia in the world.

Speaking about the policy of good-neighborly cooperation, Petrovski dealt in particular with attempts by some neighboring countries to negate the existence of the Macedonian nation. He noted in this context that declarations made by governments of these neighbors stating their wish to promote good-neighborly cooperation with Yugoslavia are not in line with failure to recognize the Macedonian nation.

In addition, Petrovski described attempts by some circles abroad to create the impression that the SR of Macedonia pursues a foreign policy which diverges from the policy of Yugoslavia, as absurd.

Branko Pribicevic asked that the draft resolution should define in more precise terms the formulation referring to the reformist course in socialist countries. He spoke in favor of the LCY presenting a more open all-round assessment of the development of socialism in the world. Pribicevic in this context proceeded from the view that recent years were marked by a stagnation in this development, and that some traditional premises had not withstood the test of time. Socialist forces in the world, he said at the end of his speech, are just now facing the reexamination of some of the premises which historical practice has not confirmed. The future belongs to those who are open-minded about this practice.

Commissions End 2d Day Debates

LD262140 Belgrade TANJUG in English 1911 GMT 26 Jun 86

[Text] Belgrade, June 26 (TANJUG) -- Five of the six commissions of the 13th League of Communists of Yugoslavia Congress ended the second day of their debates here this evening. The Commission on Economic Development will continue its debate until late tonight since another 75 delegates have registered to speak. The large number of speakers demonstrates that the country's economic problems are in the focus of delegates' attention.

The commissions are expected to close their debates tomorrow morning. The second plenary session of the congress will be held in the afternoon. It is expected to adopt a report of the LCY's activities in the last four years. Elections for top party bodies will also be held tomorrow afternoon.

CHAMBER COMMITTEES DEBATE 'MAY ANALYSIS'

LD261643 Belgrade TANJUG Domestic Service in Serbo-Croation 1800 GMT 24 Jun 86

[Summary] Belgrade, 24 Jun (TANJUG) -- At the session today of the Planning Committee of the SFRY assembly's Chamber of the Republics and Provinces, at which the delegates discussed the implementation of the socioeconomic development policy as laid down by this year's resolution, the "May Analysis", the view was expressed that while unfavorable economic trends require fresh measures, more precise analyses of the causes of the disruptions are also necessary. The delegates' assessment was that the "May Analysis" rests on statistical indices and does not examine the causes of the troubles in any great detail. There was fear that the scope of the latest measures would also not be as extensive as hoped for.

The "May Analysis" was also the subject of debates in several other committees of the Chamber of the Republics and Provinces. Assessments similar to that made at the above committee were voiced. Measures introduced by the Federal Executive Council were supported by the delegates at the Committee for Issues of the Speedier Development of the Insufficiently Developed but the warning was sounded that excessive administration manipulations should be avoided, as they fuel inflation.

At the Market and Prices Committee the question was raised as to whether the Federal Executive Council has both the means and opportunities to ensure consistent implementation of its moves. Measures have been adopted before but the expected results have not been achieved. Delegates at the Credit and Monetary System Committee were told that lower interest rates will start on 1 July.

The Economic Relations With Other Countries Committee devoted most of its attention to the trends in the country's balance of payments. Although all the obligations and interest on foreign credits falling due and amounting to $2,482,000,000 have been paid in the 5 months of the year, this has required great efforts by the Yugoslav economy because this amount represents 44.2 percent of the country's current foreign exchange earnings. In conditions of spiraling inflation at home and flagging motivation for exports, Yugoslav deliveries to other countries in this period fell by 4.4 percent which, along with reduced imports of 0.5 percent caused a high trade deficit and worsened the supply of the industry with reproduction material.

Since at the same time the foreign exchange earnings from services and remittances have not come up to expectations, in current payments with other countries, a deficit of $520 million has been registered. Such trends cast doubts on the planned increased in the surplus of the country's balance of payments this year of about $900 million. It is thus extremely important that the planned measures of the Federal Executive Council as stated at this committee, do not merely extinguish the fire but provide long-term incentives for increase in exports. In extending their support for these measures, the delegates did point out that they should, as an entirety, halt inflation since inflation, if not extirpated, would nullify the benefits derived from exports incentives and from the influence exerted by a realistic exchange rate of the dinar."

LCY CENTRAL COMMITTEE COMMISSION ON CRIME

AU261653 Belgrade BORBA in Serbo-Croatian 14-15 Jun 86 p 7

[Excerpts] Belgrade, 13 Jun (TANJUG) -- The struggle against political and economic crimes, which have over a number of years been more and more in evidence, is excessively concerned with norms while the number of real political actions that would secure the solution of this problem is still insufficient. In that struggle we rely more on the state than on the consciousness of the workers and their readiness and ability to solve problems. This was stated at the session of the LCY Central Committee's Commission for All People's Defense and Social Self-Protection. It was concluded that the state of cadres and the material position of the judiciary are not satisfactory. The juiciary is burdened by other weaknesses. Thus, there have been some instances where the same political and economic offenses have been treated differently in different places. One of the LC's tasks is to establish a more uniform judiciary practice. In solving these problems our society must not rely on the work of the judiciary organs and prosecution organs. The LC action should be directed toward removing the causes in these cases.

RELIGION, LC MEMBERSHIP SAID 'INCOMPATIBLE'

AU261652 Belgrade BORBA in Serbo-Croation 19 Jun 86 p 2

[S. Sagolj Article: "Religious Persons in the Party"]

[Excerpts] Can a religious person be a member of the LC? -- this is the question asked by a part of the clergy and us, "socially organized forces" as we are usually referred to, almost regularly before every congress, including this 13th party congress. This question is even more topical considering, for example that the Italian and some other communist parties have permitted this through their statutes in order to make their parties mass parties. In recent times a number of the party's statutory commissions issued a warning that our parctice has become too diverse ever since the 8th LCY Congress did not regulate in the statutes the relationship between the faithful and the LC. The draft statute prepared for the 13th congress does not mention this either. And the reason is that the general opinion says that there is no need to solve with a statuet something that has already been clearly said, namely that practicing religion is incompatible with membership in the LC.

Historic and other conditions in which our party or the LC was founded and works are not the same as the conditions of other countries, especially considering how strong the clerical-nationalist currents are even today, although they were historically compromised during the revolution.

HUSAK SPEAKS AT FOREIGN POLICY SEMINAR

LD262321 Prague Domestic Service in Czech and Slovak 1600 GMT 26 Jun 86

[Text] Gustav Husak, general secretary of the CPCZ Central Committee and president of the Republic, today took part in a seminar on the fulfillment of the conclusions of the 17th Congress in the foreign policy sphere, which is taking place in Prague with the participation of workers of the diplomatic service, foreign trade, officials of party organizations abroad and other institutions.

In his speech about the current tasks of internal and foreign policy of the CPCZ Gustav Husak stressed that we are entering the period of realization of the demanding program of the 17th Congress which demands a marked improvement in the quality of management and organizational work in all areas. He also pointed out that workers of all parts of our foreign service are faced with a demanding task, to overcome deep-seated routine, to implement more effective methods in realizing congress tasks, in implementing the political and economic interests of our state, and in popularizing the results of the work of our people abroad. He also pointed out the need to increase initiative and activity in fulfilling the goals of our peaceful foreign policy, the joint peace initiatives of the Soviet Union and the socialist community.

Comrade Gustav Husak emphasized the importance of efforts for the unification of peaceful, progressive and realistic forces in the world in the struggle for the aversion of the threat of war, for strengthening peace and for the development of constructive international cooperation.

RUDE PRAVO VIEWS SEOUL SUMMER OLYMPICS

AU251111 Prague RUDE PRAVO in Czech 24 Jun 86 p 8

[Vladimir Slobodzian article: "Realistic Proposal"]

[Excerpts] From the moment the members of the IOC awarded the 24th Summer Olympics to South Korea at the 84th session of the top agency of the Olympic movement, in Baden-Baden in 1981 the Olympic movement had had to grapple with a number of difficulties connected with that decision.

The complexity of the political situation of the Korean peninsula, which was divided after 1948 and the DPRK in the northern part of the country embarked on the path of the construction of socialism, was even more aggravated by the imperialist war waged 1950-53 by South Korea and the United States against the people's democratic system. Since that time, the unification of Korea has been systematically thwarted by the resistance of the South Korean military regime, supported by the United States, although the wish of the overwhelming majority of the Korean people is to the contrary. And this is precisely the main motive of the endeavor of the National Olympic Committee [NOC] of the DPRK to have a part of the competitions held also in the northern part of the country.

For a long time the International Olympic Committee [IOC] was deaf to wish of the Koreans to express the community of a 60 million-strong nation and the aspiration to unite with the help of Olympic agency, supported by the government of the dictator Chon tu-hwan.

However, the third meeting of the representatives of the IOC of the two Korean states, held in Lausanne on 10-11 June, might have brought a fundamental turn, maybe because the IOC proposal still depends on the agreement of the two involved parties. In the name of the IOC, J. Samaranch proposed to the two NOC chairmen, Kim Yu-sun (DPRK) nad Kim Chang-hu (South Korea), that the competitions in archery, table tennis, cycling, and some soccer matches of the tournament be held in the DPRK.

By 30 June, the NOC's of the DPRK and South Korea must announce whether they accept the IOC proposal; in that case they would have to meet in Lausanne at a final, fourth meeting by the end of July.

The IOC's Lausanne communique states, among other things, that "the proposal corresponds to the spirit of the Olympic Charter and is in harmony with its changes adopted at the 11th Olympic Congress in Baden-Baden in 1981."

The IOC's offer is another proof that conservative and reactionary forces in the Olympic movement opposing the DPRK demand have had to back down before reality. How the NOC of South Korea reacts, is something we will find out in the very near future.

TESTS AT DOKOVANY NUCLEAR POWER PLANT

AU282057 Prague RUDE PRAVO in Czech 25 Jun 86 p 3

[CTK report: "Testing the Third Block in Dokovany"]

[Text] Dokovany (CTK) -- A series of hydrotests on the third block of the Dukovany nuclear power plant, which is being completed, began on Tuesday [24 Jun].

The cold running-in of the six main circulating pumps will -- as of Wednesday -- continue with 5-day trials of the airtightness of the operations' are through overpressure. After Sunday, there will begin the warming-up of the primary circuit for pressure and tightness tests, with which will begin the program of 20-30 days so-called hot tests on the third block of the Dukovany power plant.

The third 440 MW Dukovany block is to reach full performance regarding the generation of electricity by 31 December 1986. The two completed 440 MW blocks operate reliably.

GORBACHEV, CPSU DELEGATION ARRIVE IN WARSAW

LD281751 Warsaw Domestic Service in Polish 1700 GMT 28 Jun 86

[Text] We have learned that a delegation of the CPSU has already arrived in Warsaw for the 10th PZPR Congress. It is headed by Mikhail Gorbachev, general secretary of the CPSU Central Committee. The Soviet guests were welcomed at the Warsaw Okecie Airport by Wojciech Jaruzelski, Zbigniew Messner, and other members of the leadership of the party and state as well as by high Warsaw officials.

10TH PZPR CONGRESS OPEN IN WARSAW 29 JUN

Jaruzelski Opens Congress

LD290854 Warsas Domestic Service in Polish 0700 GMT 29 Jun 86

[Opening statement by Wojciech Jaruzelski, first secretary of the PZPR Central Committee to the 10th PZPR Congress held in the Palace of Culture and Science in Warsaw -- live]

[Excerpt] At this very moment Wojciech Jaruzelski, first secretary of the PZPR Central Committee; Mikhail Gorbachev, general secretary of the CPSU Central Committee; Willy Stoph, member of the SED Central Committe Politburo and premier of the GDR Government; Jozef Lenart, member of the Presidium of the CPCZ Central Committee and first secretary of the CPSL Central Committee, are entering the hall. All the delegates have risen from their chairs. Also entering the hall are members of the PZPR leadership, members and candidate members of the Politburo, and members of the PZPR Central Committee Secretariat. The 10th PZPR Congress is opening its deliberations. [applause]

[Jaruzelski] Lead in the standard of the Polish United Workers' Party! Esteemed comrade delegates. Esteemed guests. The 10th PZPR Congress begins its proceedings.

You, comrade delegates, have received a report on the work of the Central Committee and on the implementation of the Ninth Extraordinary PZPR Congress resolutions. You have also been handed reports from the Central Auditing Commission [CKR] and the Central Party Control Commission [CKKP]. You should be familiar with the Central Committee theses that were the subject of precongress discussion, and a preliminary draft of the socioeconomic plan for the current 5-year period. You also have a draft party program -- reedited after wide discussion -- as well as a draft 10th Congress resolution.

Today the Central Committee report will be presented to you. Additional light on particular issues will be cast by the chairmen of the congress commissions groups. We shall therefore have at our disposal extensive preliminary material for creative discussion and for fruitful work during the 10th PZPR Congress.

Esteemed comrades, 107 foreign delegations have come to our congress. I would like to address warm words of welcome and thanks to all our guest for accepting our invitation and for taking part in the proceeding. [applause]

We warmly welcome the delegation of the party of Lenin -- the CPSU -- led by the general secretary of its Central Committee, Comrade Mikhail Gorbachev, [applause] our great friend with whose name important initiatives in the struggle for peace and socialism are connected.

We warmly welcome the delegations of the fraternal parties from the socialist countries. [applause] With the awareness of internationalist ties, we cordially welcome delegations of communist and workers' parties from Western Eruope, Asia, Africa, and North and South America. [applause] With feelings of solidarity, we greet delegations of revolutionary and democratic parties and national liberations movements. [applause] With sincere satisfaction, we also greet delegations of socialist and social democratic parties with which the PZPR maintains contacts and cooperates. [applause]

I wish to express the conviction that such widespread participation by foreign guests in the 10th Congress proceedings will strengthen the our party's ties with the international communist and workers movement, with the forces of democracy, progress, and peace in the whole world.

Comrades, today we pay tribute to all those who created our party and shaped its Marxist-Leninist aspect, who built the foundations of an independent, socialist existence for our nation. I cordially greet the representatives of generations of veterans of work. [applause]

I greet the representatives of applied parties, the ZSL delegation led by Roman Malinowski, chairman of the Supreme Committee and Speaker of the PPR Sejm, [applause] and the SD delegation led by Tadeusz Witold Mlynczak, chairman of the Central Committee and deputy chairman of the Council of State. [applause] I greet the PRON leadership with Jan Dobriczynski, chairman of the National Council [applause]. I greet representatives of the trade union movement led by Alfred Miodowicz, chairman of the National Trade Union Accord [CPZZ] and member of the Council of State, who together with numerous other trade union activities is a delegate to our congress. [applause] I greet delegations of representatives of the scientific and cultural world, youth and social organizations, and eminent non-party members, from various spheres of our country's life. [applause] I welcome all the guests that have been invited. I welcome all you women and men, comrade delegates. [applause]

Esteemed comrades! The past 5-year period has seen death remove Comrade Wladyslaw Gomulka, a leading founder of the PZPR and of People's Poland, a former first secretary of the Central Committee and an outstanding Polish statesman. During this period many merited veterans and selfless members of the party have departed from our ranks. Let us honor their memory with a minute's silence. [silence]

Esteemed comrades! In the precongress period working people and numerous workers' and youth collectives undertook and implemented many social and production deeds. Confident that I am expressing the feelings of us all, I wish to convey to them works of sincere gratitude and profound acknowledgement. [applause]

Our congress is a result of the efforts and aspirations of the whole party. The successful implementation of the decisions we make here will also depend on the party. Allow me, on behalf of the 10th Congress participants, to convey sincere greetings to all PZPR members and candidate members. [applause]

On behalf of the Central Committee I declare the 10th PZPR Congress open. [applause] I aks Comrade Jozef Czyrek to assume the chairmanship of the deliberations.

Czyrek Chairs Congress Voting

LD290924 Warsaw Domestic Service in Polish 0750 GMT 29 Jun 86

[Procedural voting on composition and agenda for commissions at the 10th PZPR Congress chaired by Jozef Czyrek, PZPR Politburo member; at the Palace of Culture and Science in Warsaw -- live]

[Text] Comrade delegates! We are about to examine the necessary procedures. First of all, I propose the election of a scrutinizing commission to count the votes cast in open voting. You have received, comrades, in your materials, and specifically in this booklet here, the draft composition of the commisson together with the proposal that its work be directed by Comrade Andrzej Galus, a delegate from Katowice Voivodship.

It is proposed that the commission number 17 persons. This composition, and those of all other congress commissons, were discussed with delegates in the voivodships. In connection with these proposals, have you, comrades, any comments regarding the number of persons making up the scrutinizing commission for counting votes in the open ballots? I do not see anyone. Who is in favor of the election of the scrutinizing commisson in the proposed composition? Please raise your cards. Thank you. Who is opposed? Who abstains? I declare that the congress has unanimously elected the scrutinizing commisson for counting votes in the open ballots. I ask the comrades selected for the commission to begin work.

Delegates! The congress deliberations are led by its Presidium, whose executive body is the Secretariat. Their composition was also discussed with all delegations in the voivodships. In the course of those consultations, you, comrades delegates, agreed to a Presidium composed of 161 persons, and a Secretariat of 18 persons. It was also agreed during the consultations that for organization reasons the persons proposed would take their places in the Presidium before the congress began. As you see, comrades, this agreement has been fully implemented. I appeal, therefore, to you, comrade delegates, to confirm by a vote our previous decisions. Who is in favor of the election of the congress Presidium and Secretariat in the proposed number and composition? Thank you. Who is opposed? Who abstains? I declare that the congress Presidium and Secretariat have been unanimously elected.

Let us pass on to the examination of the draft agenda for the deliberations for our party's 10th Congress. Do you, comrade delegates, have any comments on the proposed agenda for our work? I do not see anyone. Who is therefore, in favor of the adoption of the agenda for the deliberations? Please raise your cards. Thank you. Who is opposed? Who abstains? The agenda for the deliberations has been unanimously approved.

Next, we are to examine the draft regulations for the deliberations of our congress. Have you, comrades, any comments on the proposed regulations? Who is in favor of the adoption of the regulations for the deliberations? Please raise your cards. Thank you. Who is opposed? Who abstains? I declare the regulations for the deliberations approved unanimously.

Let us proceed to the election of the 10th Congress commissons. Delegates have received proposals for the composition of the mandates commission, together with the suggestion of the mandates commission, together with the suggestion that its work be headed by Comrade Krystayna Karczewska, delegate from Lodz. Are there any comments regarding these proposals? Who is in favor of the election of the mandates commisson in the proposed composition and of entrusting the function of chairman to Comrade Krystyna Karczewska? Who is opposed? Who abstains? I declare that the congress has elected the mandates commission in the proposed composition and has entrusted the chairmanship to Comrade Krystyna Karczewski.

I now propose that we elect the commision for the 10th Congress resolution of this commission and the person of its chairman? I do not see anyone. Let us proceed with the vote. Who is in favor of the election of the commisson for the 10th Congress resolution in the proposed composition and of entrusting the function of chairman to Comrade Tadeusz Porebski? Thank you. Who is opposed? Who abstains? I declare that the congress has elected the commission for the 10th Congress resolution and entrusted its chairmanship to Comrade Tadeusz Porebski.

Let us proceed to the election of the commission for the PZPR Program. Are there any comments regarding the proposed composition of that commission and its chairman? I do not see anyone, so I propose that we vote. Who is in favor of the election of the commission for the PZPR Program in the proposed composition and of entrusting the function of chairman to Jozef Czyrek? Thank you. Who is opposed? Who abstains? I declare that the congress has elected the commission for the PZPR Program and entrusted its chairmanship to Comrade Jozef Czyrek.

Now, I will propose the commission for the PZPR Statute. Would the comrades like to suggest any motions concerning the draft that has been submitted, the composition of the commission, and the candidate for its chairmanship. No motions. Who is in support of the electon of the commission for PZPR Statute affairs with the suggested membership and of te entrusting the function of chairman to Comrade Wlodzimierz Mokrzyszczak? Thank you. Who is opposed? Who abstains? I declare that the congress has elected the commission for PZPR Statute affairs and entusted its chairmanship to Comrade Wlodzimierz Mokrzyszczak.

Now we will elect the electoral commission. Are there any motions concerning the draft for this commission's composition? Who supports the election of the 81-people-strong electoral commission with the suggested membership and supports Comrade Marian Wozniak as its chairman? Who is opposed? Who abstains? I declare that the congress has unanimously elected the electoral commission with the suggested membership and entrusted its chairmanship to Comrade Marian Wozniak.

Comrades delegates, Let us now elect the appeals commission for the 10th Congress. Do the comrades have any remarks as to its suggested composition? No motions. Who is in favor of electing the 55-people-strong apealls commission with the suggested membership and entrusting its chairmanship to Comrade Kazimierz Barcikowski? Who is opposed? Who abstains? I declare that the congress has elected the 10th Congress appeals commission with the suggested composition and entrusted its chairmanship to Comrade Kazimierz Barcikowski.

With this we have now concluded the election of the 10th PZPR Congress commissions. Now, I request Comrade Wojciech Jaruzelski, first secretary of the Central Committee, to deliver a report for the PZPR Central Committee Politburo.

POLICE BREAK UP POZNAN DEMONSTRATION, ARREST 10

AU291709 Paris AFP in English 1655 GMT 29 Jun 86

[Excerpt] Poznan, Poland, June 29 (AFP) -- Riot police broke up a demonstration here Sunday of more than 5,000 supporters of the banned Solidarity union and made at least 10 arrests, eyewitnesses said. The demonstrators, who gathered after an open-air mass celebrated at the city's cathedral by Jozef Cardinal Glemp, Roman Catholic primate of Poland, were on their way to a monument dedicated to the victims of the June 1956 workers riots, in which 70 people were shot dead by security forces. The demonstrators chanted slogans such as: "We want Lech (former Solidarity leader Lech Walesa) and not Wojciech (Jaruzelski, Polish leader)," "Free the political prisoners," and "No freedom without Solidarity.")

In his sermon, Mgr Glemp paid tribute to the victims of the June 1956 incidents and denounced the "cynicism" of the authorities of that time. But the church, he said, is "always prepared to work for national entente."

Earlier, the archibishop of Poznasn, Mgr Jerzy Stroba, praised the Poznan rioters and stressed "the people's right to truth, freedom, and dignity."

ITALIAN MP AMONG ARRESTED IN WARSAW DEMONSTRATION

AU301121 Paris AFP in English 1119 GMT 30 Jun 86

[Text] Warsaw, June 30 (AFP) -- Eight demonstrators, including an Italian member of parliament, were arrested Monday while pleading freedom for Polish political prisoners in front of the building where the Polish Communisty Party Congress was being held. Soviet leader Mikhail Gorbachev was scheduled to address the meeting at the time of the demonstration.

Italian Radical Party MP Franco Corleone and another two Italians, a Frenchman, two Belgians and two Spanish women were arrested shortly after they unfurled a banner proclaiming "Free political prisoners."

As three police vans arrived, two demonstrators chained themselves to a stairway handrail and others lay down on the pavement of Warsaw's principal Marszalkowska Avenue, lined by numerous onlookers.

CEAUSESCU ADDRESSES 13TH RCP CC PLENUM

AU261001 Bucharest SCINTEIA in Romanian 24 Jun 86 pp 1,3 and 4

[Speech by RCP Secretary General Nicolae Ceausescu at the 23 June Bucharest opening of the RCP Central Committee Plenum]

[Text] Dear Comrades; the party Central Committee plenum is discussing the socioeconomic development plan for the 1986-90 5-Year Plan period and certain measures to better organize production and work and improve the financing system, proceeding from the need to firmly apply self-management and self-administration in all fields of activity.

This plan is based on decisions adopted by the 13th RCP Congress and the program to build the comprehensively developed socialist society and ensure our country's progress toward communism.

As is well known, the plan was discussed in detail by all ministries and units; hence, everybody is familiar with this plan, which reflects the thinking of all management cadres and, one can say, of the working people from all socioeconomic units.

Concurrently with drafting the national plan, we formulated programs per branches and subbranches, with a view to ensuring a balanced development of all sectors.

The main target of the Eighth 5-Year Plan is Romania's transition from the stage of developing country to the higher stage of an averagely developed country. One can say that the 1986-90 5-Year Plan is decisive for implementing the party program, which aims at ensuring that our country becomes a comprehensively developed one by the year 2000, in which the communist principles of work and life are strongly asserted in all fields.

We have wonderful provisions, hence we must resolutely work to implement them in order to raise our fatherland to higher peaks of progress and civilization, increase the people's overall well-being, and strengthen the country's independence and sovereignty. (loud applause)

The plan provisions submitted for discussion ensure the transition to an intensive development of industry, agriculture, and other branches of activity, in accordance with the 13th RCP Congress decisions. We aim at firmly working to implement the new scientific-technical revolution and the new agrarian revolution, which must lead to modernizing and raising the entire socioeconomic activity to a higher stage. We must achieve a new quality of work and life.

The new stage of socioeconomic development requires a further increase in the role of science, education, culture, and the political-educational activity of fashioning the new man, as a decisive element of pooling all the people's efforts to implement the goals of the 13th RCP Congress. (loud applause).

As you have been able to see from the documents examined here, industrial production will increase by 40-45 percent during the 1986-90 5-Year Plan at an annual rate of 7-8 percent, in accordance with the 13th Congress provisions

Agricultural production will increase by 35-40 percent, at an annual rate of 5-6 percent. The other economic branches will also develop accordingly.

The program of measures for the intensive development and better organization of production and work, for the improvement of technologies, and for the maximum utilization of productive capacities has shown that, beginning with this year, we can obtain a supplementary production of several hundreds of billions of lei until 1990. As a matter of fact, we must approach the 5-year plan proceeding from the supplementary program, hence we must take all steps to organize the activity of all ministries, central departments, units, and all counties in such a way as to commendably fulfill the provisions included in the supplementary programs.

Likewise, in agriculture we aim to attain an additional production of 20-30 billion lei for the entire 5-year plan period. The plan accordingly provides for increases in all other sectors.

Small-scale industry and services will also register a strong development; by 1990 they must expediently meet the working people's requirements. To give an example, services should increase by more than 80 percent during the current 5-year plan.

All programs are an integral part of the 5-year plan and I again stress that they must be at the basis of the activity of all ministries and units and must be commendably fulfilled.

Particular attention should be paid to developing the raw material base and implementing the energy program. By 1990, we must generally resolve the electric power problem. However, this presupposes resolute steps to fulfill the program for developing the energy base and commission coal-based power stations, hydropower stations, and nuclear power stations on time. In this respect, we reached the conclusion that we must review the nuclear energy program, proceeding from the need to increase its safety level.

At the same time, we must take firmer steps to further develop and increase new energy sources. It is also necessary to further increase the amount of recovered and recycled materials in all fields, including energy sources. It is up to each unit to find the surest way to secure the material and energy base, which means the rational utilization and continuous reduction of energy and material consumption. All working people's collectives must pay daily attention to special programs drafted for these fields.

Everybody knows the provisions for recovering and recycling materials; their implementation must lead to ensuring 50 percent of the required raw materials in many fields, and even more than 50 percent in certain fields. Hence, the implementation of these programs cannot be left to chance. One must properly understand that smooth technical-material supplies and the fulfillment of programs for the country's overall development depend on this.

The intensive development requires, as an objective prerequisite, the further improvement of the quality of production and an increase in the technical level of production. We have a special program for this field, also, and must take all steps to implement it. Everything we produce must be at the highest possible quality level, comparable to the best similar products at the world level.

It is necessary to take resolute steps to increase labor productivity by 10 percent annually and to implement the supplementary provisions included in the program of measures submitted to the Central Committee.

The good experience of enterprises that applied measures for organizing and improving technologies shows that labor productivity has increased by 2-2.5 times. There are fields where labor productivity has increased by 5-6 times.

We should now generally introduce, as soon as possilbe, the good experience acquired and unflinchingly implement the measures established for branches, subbranches, and units. We should proceed from the fact that we must double labor productivity by 1990. We must never forget that a high labor productivity is the decisive factor in implementing the party program and the 13th congress decisions and that labor productivity is decisive in asserting the superiority of the socialist society and the creative power of the working people and all the people, who have become masters of their destiny and are consciously building their own communist future. (loud and prolonged applouse)

Along with the increase in labor productivity, we are thinking about a transition, during the current 5-year plan, to reducing the working week to 42 hours. This requires a better organization of shifts and of the working week in all units and sectors.

The unswerving implementation of measures envisaged in the program for organizing production and work must lead to strengthening order, discipline, and the responsibility of management bodies and all working people, and to increasing the revolutionary workers spirit, as a decisive prerequisite for the smooth development of activities and the commendable fulfillment of the plan.

In their capacity as owners and producers, the working people in each unit and the collective management bodies are fully responsible for implementing all measures, attaining maximum productions in each unit, and further increasing the national wealth and income, which represent the decisive way to ensure the fatherland's overall development and raise the people's overall well being. (loud and prolonged applause)

Dear comrades, in the Eighth 5-Year Plan we will implement a volume of investments of about 1,400 billion lei, thus ensuring the necessary means for the further harmonious development of the forces of production. We will carry out large energy projects, will prepare the Arges River for navigation on the Bucharest-Danube route, and will complete irrigation systems on about 2.5 million hectares. In 1990, fixed assests will reach 3,800 billion lei, of which almost 3,100 billion lei will represent productive assets. You can see the huge efforts made by our people and party to ensure the necessary means for enlarged reproduction and for the development of the technical-material base of socialism and communism! We can now assert, with justified pride, that these efforts proved that the only way to ensure the victory of socialism and communism is to further develop the fixed assets, the technical-material base, and the enlarged reproduction. Only with a strong material base can we ensure our firm progress toward the golden dream, communism! (loud and prolonged applause).

Likewise, it is worthwhile stressing at this plenum the correctness of our party's policy to rationally distribute the forces of production throughout the country. On this basis, all counties and localities in our fatherland have registered and will continue to register a strong development. In 1990 there will be no county left with an industrial production under 20 billion lei or per capita production of less than 50,000 lei. This will ensure increasingly better living and working conditions for all of our fatherland's citizens, thus actually guaranteeing full equality of rights among all working people and all citizens, since only by securing working and living conditions can one ensure true equality of rights. (loud and prolonge applause)

In view of the large volume of investments, we should take resolute steps to complete all envisaged activities in good time and to commission all productive capacities. At the same time, we must ensure the proper functioning of existing capacities, within established parameters. In this respect, we must ensure their proper maintenance and thoroughly plan major repairs at appropriate dates.

I do not wish to dwell now on certain negative states of affairs in the sphere of production and investments. We have discussed them many times. We discussed them in detail over the last few months, when we prepared the materials submitted to this plenum for discussion. Everybody should realize that all ministries, central departments, enterprises, working people's collectives, party county committees, and party organizations must act in a spirit of high responsibility to eliminate negative states of affairs as soon as possible and to ensure the commendable fulfillment of plans and programs. Only thus can we guarantee the expedient fulfillment of plans and programs; only thus can we guarantee the expedient fulfillment of the 5-year plan. We must do all we can to ensure that the entire party and all our people work in a spirit of communist and revolutionary exactingness in all spheres! (loud and prolonged applause)

Dear comrades, the fulfillment of the 13th congress decisions presupposes, as an objective prerequisite, the improvement of the new economic-financial mechanism. Each socioeconomic unit must operate on this basis of self-administration. We have often discussed these problems, but we must openly admit that we have not yet implemented the provisions of this new economic mechanism. There is a great deal of talk about it, but little has been attained. It seems that certain comrades act in the spirit of Caragiable [classic Romanian author of satirical theater plays], namely: "Let there be changes, but everything should stay the same!" It seems that this is how the comrades from the financial and economic field thought: Let us have a new mechanism, but we should work on the basis of the old one. In actual fact, we work almost entirely on the basis of the old mechanism. We must resolutely throw it into the garbage can, as the saying goes, and we must firmly introduce the new mechanism, namely self-management and self-administration. Each unit should operate on the basis of self-management and self-administration! It is inadmissible to continue with the present situation, namely to function at the expense of the state budget and the work of others! (Lively applause)

The programs on perfecting the self-financing program and the new financial measures aim at eliminating anarchy and waste and at setting forth compulsory financial norms for all fields of activity.

We must work resolutely to reduce production costs, primarily material expenditures.

We must put an end to the trend of unjustifiably raising prices in certain sectors. The increase in profits and profitability must not be attained by raising sale prices but by reducing expenditures and further expanding the itemized production.

The new measures aim at ensuring that all units can finance themselves entirely or to the largest extent from their own incomes, by radically reducing credits.

The financing system on the basis of credits has proven to be inappropriate. It has become an obstacle to the application of the new economic-financial mechanism and has led to an unjustifiable increase in material stockpiles and unfinished output.

We will have to accelerate the production and sale processes and shorten the production-commodity-money cycle. We must proceed in such a way as to ensure that each unit takes steps to utilize available means and raw and other materials, take into production and process good quality products quickly, sell its produce, and cash its sales as soon as possible, in accordance with its prices and production costs. On this basis, each unit can secure its finances and means for resuming the production process.

The current situation is inadmissible: Stockpiles have increased by more than 20 billion lei in the first months alone, including unfinished production and unsold commodity stocks, while the units have resorted to credits to finance their activity further.

This is a very serious problem, which we must eliminate as soon as possible. Financial and economic bodies and enterprise managements must realize that society cannot finance poor activity, stockpiles, and those who fail to fulfill their obligation to carry out their activity properly!

We should improve management and planning, on the basis of workers' self-management and the greater responsibility of management councils and of the general meetings of owners, producers, and end-users. Let us harmoniously blend the spirit of initiative, autonomy, and self-administration with the uniform national plan and the uniform management of the entire economy.

We have many unit managers, management councils, and, why not say it, even ministries which have understood and understand self-management as meaning that they should spend as much as possible and demand as much as possible from the state; they do not understand it in the spirit of the country's laws and party decisions which, when the issue of self-management was raised, set out from the need that each unit and working people's collective should administer the means entrusted to it with maximum efficiency and ensure maximum profitability. It is high time we put an end to this state of affairs!

I said that I do not wish to dwell on shortcomings; but I find it very hard to abstain from referring to the very negative states of affairs which were apparent even this month, and to the lack of responsibility of certain ministries and units in fulfilling the production earmarked for export. We will pay particular attention to this problem during the plenary debates. We use raw materials, spend money, and stockpile products, while failing to attain the production earmarked for export. This is an inadmissible attitude and I suggest to the plenum that we should make those who continue along these lines account to the party and people for their inadequate activity. We cannot further tolerate this state of affairs which runs counter to the interests of the people and socialism! (lively applause).

At the same time, we must firmly apply the new remuneration on the basis of the overall contract system, which ensures the implementation of the socialist principle "From everybody according to his capacity, to everybody according to his work." The incomes of all working people in all sectors must only be decided by their work results. Always proceeding from the fact and the socialist principle that there is "no work without bread and no bread without work." Nobody may live in our society without work. We have permanently eliminated exploitation, oppression, and the possibility that people may have incomes without work, hence, we must firmly apply the principles of socialist equity in all fields!

We are building a society of free work, in which everything that is being produced belongs to all the people and ensures the overall development of the fatherland and the further increase in the material and intellectual well-being of the people. (loud applause).

Dear comrades, our intensive development and the implementation of the 13th Congress' decisions require that we lay emphasis on the new scientific-technical revolution. We have a special program for scientific-technical revolution. We have a special program for scientific-technological research. We must strengthen the links between science, education, and production. Socialism and communism can only be successfully attained on the basis of the latest achievements of science, technology, and overall human knowledge.

Since I am talking about the intensification of the activity of scientific-technological research, I would like to draw attention to the fact that this presupposes a high spirit of responsibility and perseverance in further improving production processes and technologies, while always bearing in mind that the new products and technologies should ensure a reduction in consumption and expenditures and an increase in labor productivity.

Last week I visited an exhibition of machine-tools. Certain good results were displayed, but I noticed that a number of machines and installations with lower material consumption have doubled their selling prices. We were told that the new machines will lead to higher productivity and turn out more products, hence they thought that they should also increase their prices. This runs counter to the country's laws and we cannot accept this situation at all! The new products and technologies available must obviously be better from all viewpoints, and this new equipment should lead to a production increase several times over. But this does not mean that we should increase the selling price of a given machine; on the contrary, by reducing its material consumption and weight we must also reduce its price. Concerning the products I saw on display at that exhibition, we must achieve a 20-30 percent reduction in costs, not a doubling of the selling price.

In this respect, we have appropriate bodies in charge of prices, planning, and research which are responsible for supervising all these facets. The new regulations envisage certain measures that would prevent this practice of increasing prices. But no matter how good the decisions and laws may be, we must ensure that people apply them and that a revolutionary change occurs in the thinking of leading cadres in units, central departments, and ministries; the ministry, central department, the enterprise, and all who work there are to be blamed, particularly the minister who permitted such prices to be set for the new products, as well as the ministry management and the financial and price bodies which accepted these prices. This example proves once more what I have already said, namely, that many economic managers continue to think along outdated lines and stick to the trend of acquiring incomes without work and causing damage to the national economy. This indeed means causing damage to the national economy. I dwell on this problem because it is not an accidental case, but rather a general trend which we should eliminate. As a matter of fact, since we are talking about the scientific-technical revolution we should complete it with a revolution in people's consciousness. We must change the awareness of our management cadres and bring about a revolution in the way of thinking and acting of economic managers in all sectors. Without such a revolution in the consciousness and thinking of the people, we cannot attain a true scientific-technical revolution! (loud applause)

We should also take resolute steps to improve and raise the level of all of education. Let us proceed from the need to modernize instructional textbooks and the entire educational activity, with a view to mastering the latest achievements and closely linking education to practice and production. We will have to combat trends toward narrow specialization which, in many cases, are not determined by the need for such specialization but rather by the desire to ensure another teaching chair and a department head, who believes that his specialized knowledge entitles him to such a chair.

We must proceed from the need to arm youth with all-round knowledge, by obviously giving priority to basic subject matters, but also by training them in such a way as to endure that -- during their activity, in accordance with the requirements of the national economy and society in general -- the working people have a sufficiently thorough training to allow them to move easily to another specialized field.

We will have to pay greater attention to implementing the programs for raising the professional and technical training of cadres by thoroughly organizing the recycling of cadres in all sectors of activity. In practical terms, we must ensure that every few years, let us say every 5, each working man attends evening courses to improve his skills.

The ever more modern equipment and the latest achievements of science and technology which we are introducing into the production flow require people with high training, hence the need arises periodically to raise their qualification level. As a matter of fact, man is the decisive element of progress, hence -- in order to implement the scientific-technical revolution in all sectors -- we must concern ourselves with training the men who will carry out this revolution.

Dear comrades, the 5-year plan has important provisions concerning the development of our international economic relations and production sharing. We will have to work resolutely to develop ties with the socialist countries belonging to CEMA in order to implement the long-term economic program, attain production sharing and specialization, and fulfill the comprehensive scientific-technical program up to the year 2000. All this must ensure the strong development of each socialist country, the implementation of programs adopted by party congresses in each socialist country, the successful construction of socialism and communism, the increase in the general well-being of our nations, and the growth of the prestige of socialism in the world.

At the same time, it is ncessary to broadly develop economic relations and production sharing with all socialist countries.

An important role must be played by relations with the developing countries and the expansion of production sharing with these states. Likewise, we must intensify economic relations with the developed capitalist countries. We must actively participate in the international division of labor and the world exchange of material and cultural values.

It is necessary to pay great attention to exports, to attaining the production earmarked for export and selling it as soon as possible by delivering it to our partners. I believe that we should take special steps, as I have previously said, in order to attain, in a timely and commendable way, export production at a high qualitative level. We should probably review the way in which the overall contract system is applied in the foreign trade field, because it seems that this principle is not adequately applied in the foreign trade sector.

We will have to permanently supervise the increase in the efficiency of our foreign trade and intensify barter trade, which ensures the necessary prerequisites for expanding our international relations.

I think it is not necessary for me to stress the importance of foreign trade, economic relations, and production sharing, with all that this implies. This must create conditions for attaining our imports of raw and other materals as well as other products required by the smooth development of our production flow, and must also ensure an equal balance of payments, by taking into consideration the fact that we need a surplus in order to quickly eliminate our foreign debt.

Everybody should properly understand that export activity and international relations must always be the concern of all party-state bodies, units, and working people. All units must realize that the attainment of export tasks is a priority duty and we must do all we can to commendably carry out this activity.

Dear comrades, the fulfillment of the 5-year plan and all other programs is the decisive element in raising the material and cultural well-being of the working people and the entire nation. Only on the basis of increasing the national income can we ensure the necessary means both for developmenmt and for raising the living standard.

In the current 5-year plan, 70 percent of the national income will be allocated to consumption and 30 percent to the development fund. This distribution of the national income will ensure both the means for developing the forces of production and for increasing the national wealth -- which are most important for our fatherland's development -- and the necessary conditions for raising the people's material and cultural living standards, the supreme goal of our party policy and the essence of the comprehensively developed socialist society that we are successfully building in Romania. [loud applause]

Life and reality have strongly proven that only by securing a high percentage of accumulation can we attain greater reproduction, develop the forces of production, science, education, and culture, and ensure the overall progress of our fatherland! Only thus can we ensure the socialist and communist future of our people and the continuous increase in our material and cultural well-being! [lively applause] One should understand that we cannot consume everything we produce at a given moment and that to do so would endanger and jeopardize the very future of our fatherland and nation!

In the 1986-90 5-Year Plan, the real remuneration of the working people and the incomes of the peasantry will increase by 6-8 percent. Social expenditures per inhabitant will also increase.

The plan ensures the necessary means to attain an important volume of housing construction and other sociocultural establishments. Through the completion of about 700,000 new apartments in the current 5-year plan, we will gradually resolve the housing problem. We now have many counties and towns which no longer need new dwellings. Some of them do not even know to whom they should give some of these dwellings.

We have made great efforts in this field. Our fatherland's cities have become new and modern cities; our villages have also registered strong development. That is why we should use the buildings that will be finished in the current 5-year plan to conclude, along general lines, the organization and planning of the country's cities.

Therefore, we have to review once again and to perfect town planning in accordance with the norms we have submitted for the discussion of the Central Committee plenum. It is particularly necessary to proceed with greater determination to commune and village planning. These measures play an important role in improving the level of civilization and in bringing the living and working conditions between towns and villages closer to each other. We must see to it that, beginning with this 5-year plan, we will change the image of communes and villages through better planning, so that by the year 2000 we will conclude both the planning and the organization of communes and villages in general terms.

All this is part and parcel of our party program of raising the level of civilization and of creating conditions for proceeding to the construction of communism in Romania. [loud, prolonged applause]

Dear comrades, we have a long-term plan; we have an important number of programs which will jointly ensure smooth developmenmt and the resolute implementation of the 13th RCP Congress decisions. What is decisive now is the organizational activity and the activity aimed at fulfilling those plans and programs! It depends on the activity of each minister, each central department, and the managerial councils in all units, and on the activity of all working people to implement all these wonderful programs!

It seems that there are still many things to be done to improve and perfect the management of all areas. In this respect we must continue to strengthen socialist democracy as a decisive factor for our homeland's development. We must perfect the activity of ther managerial councils, of the general meetings of working people, and of the owners, producers, and end-users. We must see to it that each working people's collective will act with great responsibility to implement the plan and programs in order to vigorously increase production, productivity, profitability, and economic efficiency.

Furthermore, the state bodies and our socialist state must ensure a uniform leadership of all areas and of the entire society -- and, at the same time, must broadly develop cooperation between the state bodies and the new democratic bodies in various areas of activity. We must proceed from the fact that the state bodies and democratic bodies constitute a unitary whole and together, they represent and constitute the new democratic form of our state and of workers' revolutionary democracy.

I believe it is necessary to refer once again to the necessity for the Council of Ministers to fulfill its tasks more appropriately and play its role in the uniform management of all areas. Recently, we adopted certain organizational measures; according to the branches we have created councils whose mission it is to ensure the uniform operation and the timely solution of problems in each area. More determined measures are necessary for promoting cadres and for a better distribution of manpower in keeping with the given capacity and with each individual's sense of responsibility at his workplace.

We must ensure more active participation by leadership cadres -- beginning with the members of the Political Executive Committee, and the party and state aktiv -- in activities carried out in counties and units.

Generally speaking, I believe that on the whole, from top to bottom, it is necessary to perfect and pay greater attention to participation by the party aktiv and cadres in grassroots activity where, in the final analysis, the fulfillment of the plan and the solution of problems is decided and where the implementation of all targets put forward by the 13th RCP Congress is ensured.

Once again, I want to dwell on the need to constantly respect and firmly apply the country's laws and the party's decisions. The communist spirit, the revolutionary spirit, means to respect and apply laws and decisions! This is a basic and elementary requirement of a party and state activist! Any failure to observe laws and the violation of laws and party decisions means implicitly to put oneself outside the country's laws and decisions and to put oneself outside the party!

It is necessary to properly understand that laws and party decisions are compulsory for all and that no one is permitted, by any means, to ignore them and not apply them! [loud applause]

The fulfillment of the great goals put forward by the 13th Congress requires a constant strengthening of the party, of its ideological and organizational unity, and the enhancement of its leading role.

All party organizations, all town and county committees, and all party bodies are responsible for uniting the efforts of all working people in implementing the targets and programs of each unit and each county. One cannot speak of the party's leading role in case where the party bodies and organizations are not acting with the greatest of determination to fulfill their tasks. How can one appreciate the activity carried out by a communal or county party organizaton or the activity of the party in a unit when the industrial production plan and the agricultural production plan are not fulfilled? We must determinedly eliminate formalism and the practice by some party bodies and organizations of making a show of their activity.

We must take firmer action to resolve the problems of the working people and we must constantly strengthen the link between the party bodies and organizations, the party in general, the working people's masses, and the people. Let us always proceed from the fact that socialism is being built with the people and for the people and that only together with the people will be able to ensure the victory of socialism and communism in our homeland, an improvement in the general well-being, and the constant strengthening of Romania's independence and sovereignty! (loud, prolonged applause)

We must intensify and perfect ideological and political-educational activity, both within the party and in the ranks of the people's masses. In ideological activity and the party's educational activity we must proceed from the need to increase the revolutionary spirit, communist awareness, and the devotion and spirit of revolutionary struggle of each communist. Let us intensify our activity of fashioning a new man, a conscious builder of the new social system.

We must understand that workers revolutionary democracy is closely linked to the constant elevation of the workers-revolutionary awareness of our whole nation, and that only by acting conscientiously and properly understanding the problems of our homeland's development and international problems will the working people act in keeping with the new realities!

Let us always base our political-educational activity on the revolutionary materialist-dialectical and historic concept, and on the principles of scientific socialism! Let us firmly combat everything that is old and retrograde, all backward concepts of any kind! Let us improve the level of awareness of our people proceeding from the fact that only in this way and only thus will our party be able to fulfill optimally its historic role of leading the whole nation, in close unity, in implementing the party program, and on the road to the victory of socialism and communism in our homeland! (loud, lively applause)

We have a powerful party and we have a long-term program. But above all we have wonderful people who are resolutely implementing our party's domestic and foreign policy. Thus, we have everything that is needed to look with trust upon the implementation of the plan and programs that we are discussing at this plenum. Let us do all we can to implement optimally the goals of the 13th Congress and those of the Eighth 5-Year Plan, in order to thus ensure our homeland's elevation to new heights of progress and civilization and the constant strengthening of Romania's material and cultural potential! (loud, prolonged applause)

Dear comrades, as I have mentioned on other occasions, in order to fulfill our plan and programs we need peace. Therefore, our party and Socialist Romania attach great importance to developing international cooperation with all countries, irrespective of social system. We have reached a stage at which the international situation continues to be very serious. The arms race and primarily the nuclear arms race continues. Therefore, the basic problem of our time is to achieve disarmament and ensure peace, to eliminate nuclear weapons, and achieve a world without weapons and without wars!

Our party's and state's activity and initiatives in this respect are known. The Political Consultative Committee of the Warsaw Pact reached important decisions which reflect the desire of the socialist states to do all they can to change the dangerous trend of events and ensure a policy of detente and peace. The meeting focused on disarmament and peace matters. The decisions adopted fully reflect the common positions and desire of all member-countries to act to achieve disarmament and ensure peace. The appeal program on reducing weapons, troops, and military expenditures by 25 percent by 1990 is of particular importance and, for the first time, offers real prospects for proceeding -- along with reducing nuclear weapons -- to a substantial cutback in conventional weapons.

I believe that the program adopted by the socialist countries of the Political Consultative Committee of the Warsaw Pact ensures good prospects. We, I have to state frankly, would have liked more; however, it is very important to make a beginning -- and if we will achieve this cutback mentioned in the appeal, that is 25 percent by 1990, we will create the necessary conditions to proceed to further such cutbacks up to the year 2000. One can state that a 25-percent cutback in weapons, troops, and expenditures by 1990 creates real prospects for achieving a cutback of at least 50 percent by the year 2000, certainly under conditions of implementing the program on nuclear disarmament in three stages up to the year 2000 proposed by the Soviet Union, a program that is of great importance.

As a matter of fact, these two programs complement each other and, for the first time, open up real prospects to proceed to disarmament. This will lend new prospects to the people's struggle to fully eliminate wars from the life of mankind.

The situation continues to be particularly serious in Europe; new weapons are being stockpiled and new missiles are being deployed. Therefore, we believe that it is necessary for all European countries and all peoples on our continent to act with great responsibility to halt the deployment of the new intermediate-range missiles and to eliminate those in place. Let us draw the maximum of conclusions from the Chernobyl accident which demonstrated that any European state is endangered if nuclear weapons are used and that Europe should not have any state with nuclear weapons on its territory, and it also demonstrated that measures must be taken to strengthen security and the operation of peaceful nuclear power plants in conditions of greatest of security.

We must see to it that the Stockholm Conference concludes this year with the best of results. We believe that on the basis of the proposals made so far it is possible and necessary to achieve a general accord that will ensure a strengthened security and cooperation in Europe. We also advocate the achievement, already this year, of an accord in Vienna on the reduction of troops and weapons in Central Europe. In this case, too, we proceed from the fact that the proposals made so far offer a positive basis -- if there is political will -- to achieve an appropriate accord.

We act to develop cooperation with all countries in the Balkans. We believe that we must do all we can to achieve an understanding on the elimination of nuclear weapons and on the non-deployment of chemical weapons in the Balkans, so that there will be neither nuclear, nor chemical weapons, and no foreign military bases in our area.

We also believe that we must intensify our activity aimed at halting the various military conflicts and at resolving disputes between states by negotiations alone. In this context, we believe that an international conference under UN aegis should be held as soon as possible to resolve the Middle East problem, with the participation of all states concerned, including the PLO.

We attach great importance to the problems of underdevelopment and achieving a new world economic order. Romania has proposed within the United Nations and other international economic bodies measures aimed at a global solution to the problems of foreign debts and of underdevelopment. I do not want to dwell on them now. Within this framework, I believe that we have to take action, with other countries, to organize an international conference within the United Nations with the participation of all states in order to solve these very serious economic problems and to achieve a new world economic order.

It is necessary for us to do all we can to enhance the role of the United Nations and of other international bodies in resolving the serious problems of the world. An important role is to be played by the Nonaligned Movement.

We believe that everything must be done to overcome certain differences between some nonaligned countries, so that the meeting in Zimbabwe this year will result in strengthened solidarity and an increased role of the nonaligned countries in resolving the complex problems in the international arena.

It is also necessary to strengthen cooperation and solidarity among the developing countries, the small and medium-sized countries, so that they will participate more actively in resolving the serious problems of the international situation.

There are many problems in the international arena. They can be solved only with the active participation, on a fully equal footing, of all states. We must strengthen even more the solidarity and cooperation with the progressive, anti-imperialist forces, and with the broad peoples' masses and peoples everywhere.

No matter how serious problems may be, if peoples act in greater unity, if they make the leadership of each country take into consideration the interests of peace and cooperation, then it will be possible -- and we are convinced of this -- to achieve a change in the trend of events and to impose a policy of disarmament, peace, and equal cooperation among all nations! (loud, prolonged applause)

Dear comrades, half of the first year of the 1986-90 5-year plan has passed. Our agenda is the 5-year plan and the programs up to 1990. I have referred to them. We achieved a number of positive results in the first half of this year. However, I must frankly state that we cannot be fully satisfied and that not all areas have taken very firm action to fulfill the plan optimally. It is necessary to take measures to fulfill the 1986 plan optimally -- the first year of the current 5-year plan -- and the additional provisions.

Once again I want to stress the need to pay particular attention to exports.

In agriculture we must harvest summer grains without any losses, we must carry out secondary crop sowing, and must carry out all crop-tending activity in order to ensure the highest possible agricultural yields this year.

All counties, all units must proceed very determinedly to working to fulfill all plans and the program!

Once again I want to stress that we have everything necessary available -- both this year and throughout the 5-year plan -- to fulfill appropriately the 13th Congress decisions, the 5-year plan, and the programs we have worked out. I am convinced that all party and state bodies, and all bodies of the workers revolutionary democracy will demonstrate, through their work and by taking very responsible action, that they are determined to be up to their responsibilities toward the party, the people, and toward the cause of socialism and communism. (loud applause)

I am also convinced that all working people and all our people will resolutely implement our plan and programs, and the 13th Congress decisions and party program aimed at building the comprehensively developed socialist society and advancing toward communism, which will ensure the elevation of our homeland to new heights of progress and civilization, an improvement in our people's well-being, and the strengthening of Romania's sovereignty and independence. (loud, prolonged applause, chants of "Ceausescu-RCP!" In an atmosphere of great unity and revolutionary commitment, all participants in the plenum stand up and give long ovations to the RCP and its secretary general, Comrade Nicolae Ceausescu)

Speaks at Session's End

AU281739 Bucharest SCINTEIA in Romanian 25 Jun 86 p 1

[Text of speech given by RCP Secretary General Nicolae Ceausescu at the concluding session of the RCP Central Committee Plenum in Bucharest on 24 June]

[Text] Esteemed comrades: Our plenum broadly discussed the issues of Romania's socioeconomic development in the coming 5 years and up to the year 2000. Documents, which were the subject of the discussions on the agenda, were adopted unanimously.

During the discussions the concern of the party organizations and bodies and of the working people's collectives with appropriately fulfilling the new 5-year plan was strongly emphasized and the overall good results attained in the first 5 months of this year and the firm decision to most commendably act to unflinchingly implement the plans and programs for this year and the whole 5-year plan period have been dwelt upon.

The concern with fulfilling the program in agriculture was stressed and several good results attained this summer in barley yields and prospects for the wheat yields and generally for this year's harvest were presented.

In conclusion, I would like to mention again that facts and reality demonstrate that we have everything necessary to appropriately fulfill the plans and programs and that the development rate achieved in some enterprises and countries demonstrates the realistic character of our socioeconomic development plans. The barley yields attained also demonstrate the great possibilities we have. I believe that you will agree with me when I stress once again, in conclusion, that the role played by the party organizations, by people, and by agricultural cooperatists and workers -- when I speak of agriculture -- in implementing the programs and the new agrarian revolution is outstanding.

I would like to express great value for the party organization and working people in Olt County, which attained the greatest barley yield in the country. This yield is over 50 percent higher than the greatest yields attained by other countries. Thus, we do not speak of a 100 or 200 kilograms surplus but of an average of more than 2,000 kilograms per hectare more than in other countries. That is why I believe that our plenum should appreciate the activity of the working people, of peasantry, and of the party organization in Olt County and, at the same time, should call on all party organizations, cooperative workers, and agricultural workers to work in the same spirit. Everything attained by Olt County should have been attained -- even exceeded -- by other counties which have better soil and have 80 percent of the irrigated land. (loud applause).

Our plenum is held in a working spirit. Therefore, I would like to stress, in conclusion too, and to draw attention to the fact that in all fields we must draw the necessary conclusions from all the good things, and bad things as well, and work to ensure the unflinching implementation of the programs at the highest level.

For the results attained and in accordance with the legal provisions regarding the overall contract system, we decided that the working people in Olt County should receive, as a bonus, 200 kilograms of barley per hectare, which should be divided, half going to the cooperative members and half to the cooperatives for their activity. (loud, prolonged applause). It is within the power of all to attain such wheat and corn yields so as to fully benefit from the application of the legal provisions.

With the decisions we adopted in accordance with the 13th RCP Congress decisions, we embarked, as a matter of fact, on the implementation of the new stage of our homeland's development, which is decisive for the implementation of the party program on building the comprehensively developed socialist society and the country's advance toward communism.

One could say our plenum marks the passage, with all the forces, to the implementation of the new scientific-technical revolution and of the new agrarian revolution. We must organize our activity in such way as to ensure in all fields of activity, the strong assertion of science and technology -- a decisive factor for our homeland's development and for the victory of communism in Romania! (loud applause).

At the same time, our plenum marks the passage to intensive development and to organizing all activity according to the principles of the workers' self-management and economic and financial self-administration.

We must act most resolutely to continuously perfect the management of all sectors and to increase the revolutionary responsibility of the party organizations and bodies, of the party cadres, of the communists, and of all the working people.

From the rostrum of the plenum of our Central Committee, I call on all the party organizations and communists to act in all circumstances in accordance with the revolutionary principles and to do everything possible to unite the efforts of all our people in implementing the 13th RCP Congress decisions and in raising our homeland to new peaks of progress and civilization!

From this plenum I call on all working people and on all our people not to spare any efforts and to do all they can to unflinchingly implement the plans and programs which ensure the raising of our homeland onto a higher development level, the strong increase of our people's general well-being, and the strengthening of Romania's independence and sovereignty! (loud applause).

We have to achieve a wonderful program that has great prospects. We must advance toward new heights, the peak of communist civilization. I repeat at this plenum again what I said at the congress. It will not be an easy road; it will not be a climb without obstacles. We must travel an unknown path. We must overcome many difficulties, and we must make great efforts to ensure the advance toward the high peaks of communism!

Nevertheless, we have a long experience which demonstrates that it lies within the power of our party and people to travel these new paths and advance toward the new peaks.

We have a sure guide -- the Romanian Communisty Party -- which honorably fulfills its historical mission of leading the political force of all our nation on the road of socialism and communism! (loud and prolonged applause).

The invincible principles of scientific socialism, the revolutionary concept about the world, and dialectical and historical materialism light our way. We have the party program, which represents our party's revolutionary concept about the world and life.

Let us unflinchingly follow and implement in all circumstances the communist principles of work and life! Let us be fully confident that by marching under the banner of the party and being led by the revolutionary concept, we will overcome any difficulties and will ensure the triumph of communism in Romania! (loud and prolonged applause).

I wish to express my most ardent thanks for the statements made here about my activity and for the homage paid by the Central Committee to the activity I have carried out in the past 50 years as a party member, serving the cause of socialism, the people, and their well-being and happiness.

I assure the party plenum and all our people that in the future, too, I will do all I can to make my contribution to the implementation of the great objectives we have; I will serve, under any circumstances, the interests of the people, of all our nation, and the cause of socialism and communism and of peace and international cooperation, and I will never spare any effort to ensure the implementation of the party program for the triumph of communism in Romania, for continuously strengthening the material and cultural power of our country, and for our homeland's independence and soverignty! (loud cheers and chants; prolonged chants of "Ceausescu-RCP!" and "Ceausescu and the people!").

Starting off on a new road of struggle and work, I believe that all our Central Committee must pledge solemnly to work for ensuring the implementation of all the programs of our homeland's development. We must do everything to ensure our people a dignified place among the nations of the world, a dignified place of complete freedom and independence in the comprehensively developed socialist society and communism. (loud and prolonged applause).

I wish ever greater successes in the activity of the party organizations and bodies, of the Central Committee members, of Communists, of all working people, and of all our people to most appropriately implement all the programs and plans!

Much health and happiness!

I declare the proceedings of the party Central Committee plenum closed! (loud cheers and chants; chants of "Ceausescu-RCP"; "Ceausescu and the People!"; "Ceausescu, Romania -- Our Esteem and Pride!". In an atmosphere of strong unity and enthusiasm, of ardent revolutionary engagement, all those present in the great hall of the plenum rise and cheer at length for the RCP and for its secretary general, Comrade Nicolae Ceausescu.)

CEAUSESCU CABLES BULGARIA'S ZHIVKOV ON REELECTION

AU2021042 Bucharest SCINTEIA in Romanian 19 Jun 86 p 5

[Text] To Comrade Todor Zhivkov, BCP Central Committee general secretary and chairman of the State Council of the People's Republic of Bulgaria, Sofia.

Esteemed Comrade Zhivkov: Your reelection as chairman of the State Council of the People's Republic of Bulgaria affords me the pleasant opportunity to extend warm congratulations to you, together with best wishes for good health and happiness.

I also want to express the conviction that relations between the SR of Romania and the People's Republic of Bulgaria will continue to develop in the spirit of understandings agreed upon to the benefit of our peoples and countries of the cause of socialism and peace throughout the world.

I wish you fresh successes in your overall activity and in implementing the directives put forward at the 13th BCP Congress aimed at building the developed socialism in neighboring and friendly Bulgaria.

[Signed] Nicolae Ceausescu, RCP secretary general and president of the Socialist Republic of Romania.

FURTHER REPORTAGE ON 13TH LCY CONGRESS

Zarkovic Report

LD261900 Belgrade BORBA in Serbo-Croatian 25 Jun 86 pp 1-6

[Report "The LCY in the Struggle for the Further Development of Socialist, Self-Managing, and Nonaligned Yugoslavia" submitted by Vidoje Zarkovic, president of the LCY Central Committee Presidium to the 13th LCY Congress in Belgrade 25 June]

[Text] Delegates, esteemed guests, soon 45 years will have elapsed since the historic appeal by the Yugoslav Communist Party for an armed uprising on 6 July 1941 when the Communists led by Tito took responsibility for the future of Yugoslavia. With massive heroism and working endeavor, and with great effort, denial, and sacrifices, the working class and the nations and nationalities of our country, with the LCY as their ideological and political leader, during these 4 and 1/2 decades, radically changed the image of our country.

We won a magnificent victory and freed our country from fascist occupiers. We provided a firm basis for our new social system based on social ownership and socialist self-management. Yugoslavia has developed and become strong as a fraternal, socialist, self-management, federal community, which ensures full economic and political affirmation and national equality for its citizens and nations and nationalities. We strengthened the independence and the international position of our country. Yugoslavia has made a big contribution to the struggle for peace and international relations on an equal footing and has become one of the factors of stability in the world.

With our authentic revolution and the development of socialist self-managment, we opened up new prospects for the development of socialism and contributed to the building of relations of equal cooperation and solidarity among all progressive forces of the present-day world.

In the period between 1947 and 1986 Yugoslav social production increased by more than sevenfold, the volume of industrial production over 17 times, and the number of employees in the social sector by over 5 times. The development of education, health service, culture, and scientific creativity was expanded. A modern working class and creativity was expanded. A modern working class and scientific, technical, and creative intelligentsia have grown up in all the areas of material and cultural pursuits whose potential strength and opportunities are capable of bringing about a change in the direction of most up-to-date material progress and a further development of socialist self-management. Every area in our country experienced a material and cultural transformation. With a policy of boosting the development of the economically under developed republics and the Socialist Autonomous Province of Kosovo we attained significant results in enhancing the production forces and equalizing the economic foundations of our nations and nationalities.

We belong to a very small number of countries that established the policy of nonalignment and to whose affirmation and development we have provided a lasting and generally recognized contribution. During the past 25 years when it was first set up the nonaligned movement, despite the trials it has undergone, has asserted itself as an irreplaceable factor in the struggle for peace and international cooperation on an equal footing, and as a democratic and progressive force in world politics. By its activity in the Nonaligned Movement Yugoslavia has gained respect and a high reputation in the world.

All these and other results we attained in the wake of war devastation; under conditions of inherited economic and other kinds of backwardness, and strenuous opposition by supporters of the forces defeated during the revolution and by statist-bureaucratic and technocratic objections to new self-management processes; and against a background of very unfavorable international conditions. We have achieved this despite the many mistakes we made that led to the growth of unrealistic ambitions in development policy, too rapid and haphazard stratification of the rural areas, disruptions in the material structure of the economy, large-scale and irresponsible indebtedness abroad, irrational use of resources from our own and foreign sources, and expenditure over and above our realistic material possibilities.

This is why the LCY is coming to its 13th Congress not only with great achievements and good results, but with the burden of acute economic problems and social contradictions. We are facing development stagnation, weakening the unity of the Yugoslav community and the LCY; growth of deformates and deviations from proclaimed objectives; and violation of some social norms and values that we affirmed during the revolution. All this gradually paved the way to the present economic crisis and to a crisis situation in other areas of our social life.

The causes of our economic crisis were there well before the 12th LCY Congress. Because of the nonfulfillment of the essential objectives of the 1965 reform, subjectivism and voluntarian in the economic and development policy and economic development on the basis of nonlabor intensive economic operations all became widespread.

When abandoning the statist-centralist system we did not at the same time build and develop the system of self-management social planning. When abandoning the statist system of concentration and direction of the social accumulation resources we failed to develop the system of self-management concentration of these resources. This strengthened haphazard and autarkic interventions and deepened disproportions in the material structure of our economy. This was greatly contributed to by many years of irrational behavior in the agrarian and energy policy, uncoordinated general conditions of economic cooperations and the very slow rate of adaptation of our economic policy to the changes on the world market that were unfavorable to us.

The investment expansion in the 1976-80 period, accompanied by carefree and disorganized borrowing abroad and the failure to use the loans in a more efficient and rational manner -- in particular for the construction of those apacities which could have contributed to increased exports and foreign currency earnings -- are among the immediate causes of the crisis. All this resulted from the fact that the development of socio-economic relations proceeded along the path which deviated from the fundamental principles of the SFRY Constitution and the decisions of the 10th and 11th LCY Congresses. Instead of enhancing the power and influence of workers and working people, organized in associated labor on the basis of self-management, in the control of all the aspects of social reproduction, we have witnessed the strengthening of statism, of new forms of alienation of income from the working people and the weakening in the material basis of socialist self-management.

Instead of the integration of labor and resources on the basis of self-management and the interests of the workers and the working people, and instead of a stronger integration of all of the country's material and human potential, we have been witnessing mounting tendencies to group ownership, the destruction of unity of the Yugoslav market, the dangerous practice of insularity within the republican, provincial and even municipal boundaries, and divisions on the basis of nationality, culture and other factors.

The discrepancy between the set goals and practice occurred as a result of serious shortcomings in the work of the LCY and other subjective forces on realizing the constitutional concept of further development and improvement in the production relationship of socialist self-management. The processes of decentralization in the functions of the federation, outlined in the reform of the Constitution, have not been developing as the processes of the further de-statization aimed at achieving faster development of socialist self-management and strengthening the unity of the Yugoslav community. Instead they have been developing as the processes of consolidating decentralized statism which created new obstacles to the development of self-management and led to further weakening in the cohesion and unity of the country and its economy.

Many of the economic and systemic solutions and the measures of the development and economic policy introduced after the constitutional reform stimulated the process of territorialisation and insularity instead of motivating workers in basic and other organizations of associated labor to perform efficiencly and rationally their social function of controling the means of and trends in social reproduction. This was conducive to the strengthening of group-ownership tendencies in organizations of associated labor, their autarkic development, alienation of the self-managing rights from the workers self-management duties and responsibilities and to major shortcomings in the system of distribution etc.

On the other hand, the LCY and other subjective forces failed to invest constant and resolute efforts to develop socialist self-management as an integral form of social relationship and as a system of freely associated labor. They were not determined enough in their struggle for the development of socio-economic relations of the socialist self-management at all levels of work and production -- from the basic organization of associated labor and work and composite organizations to the provinces, republics and the federation. Only a part of the decisions in the sphere of the control of general social reproduction is being passed directly by organizations of associated labor. The majority of the decisions, particularly those concerning the most important economic and other issues of overall social reproduction are, as a matter of fact, being made at the level of society as a whole.

The workers and working people are not integrated and organized on the basis of self-management in a manner which would make them capable of taking on the responsibility for the issues of this kind and removing the statist-bureaucratic forces from that sphere and prevent anarchy.

In this way ground is inevitably ceded to bureaucratic statism. This statism appears as a real force which makes decisions about overall questions of general social reproduction and arbitrates in conflicts of interests in society. Under these conditions, the very workers in associated labor, without links of income interests and under the threat of even more spontaneity, in many respects frequently succumb to the patronage of the bureaucracy.

Statist bureaucratism can, and must, be destroyed only through the energy of the working class, which is liberating itself and advancing, by means of the processes of self-managing association of labor and free organization on a self-managing basis, in the unified Yugoslav economic area and under conditions in which a unified Yugoslav market is operating. In the face of such a force, the possibilities for alienating income and power from workers and working people organized in self-management are diminishing.

Bureaucratic-statist forces have therefore resisted these processes, and hamper them wherever they can, making use in so doing of all sorts of ideological sops, and most often spreading the fear that such processes will threaten national interests and reinforce unitarism.

Bureaucratic statism has opened the way to increased voluntarism in economic and development policy, to fragmentation of economic policy, to isolationism of socio-political communities and to clashes between these, and to divisions in the market and in the working class itself.

This has, of course, weakened the country's unity and the material basis of socialist self-management, as well as workers motivation toward greater and better output and labor productivity. All this has inevitably led to stagnation in the economic and social development of Yugoslavia and of all our republics and provinces, and to a deepening of the economic crisis and critical state of society.

The LCY has failed to conduct a timely struggle in the proper manner against tendencies which have led to the crisis, and which are in most profound contradiction to the processes of revolutionary transformation of Yugoslav society, on the basis of socialist self-management. It failed at the beginning to encourage and direct the workers class and the working people to grapple with them, so that they may in good time eliminate the socioeconomic bases upon which etastism breeds, and to remove the hotbeds of the crisis.

And it has itself long been fettered by vascillations, lack of unity and by liberalist illusions that the system would of itself prevent such tendencies and halt unfavorable economic and social trends. This belief in the spontaneous operation of the system rests upon making that system absolute, which comes about whenever it is forgotten that the revolutionary transformation of society does not rest upon the system alone, but upon the constant struggle of the organized forces of socialist consciousness for that system itself and its dynamic and efficient operation, and for the respect and enrichment of the achievements and values of the revolution.

Many organizations of the League of Communists have identified themselves with special interests, and their leaderships, together with state organs -- that is of socio-political communities, and the managerial organs of organizations of associated labor -- have often been protagonists of statist-technocratic tendencies. Bureaucratic-statist, particularist-egoist, group-property and nationalistic tendencies in society have also gnawed at the LCY, weakening its ideological unity and its unity of action. LCY organizations, burdened by such weaknesses, will not be capable of being a factor integration if they continue in this manner, but on the contrary will be a factor of disintegration. They will not be capable of mobilizing the working class and working people in the struggle against statism and bureaucratism, for they are themselves part of statist structures and protagonists of etatist attitudes.

In parallel with the manifestations of the economic crisis and the critical state of affairs in society, retrograde processes are becoming stronger in the ideological sphere, in which attempts to secure a renewal of elements of state socialism and elements of private-property bourgeois society are intertwined.

Manifestations are becoming increasingly evident of antisocialist trends and ideologies which, taking advantage of the difficulties confronting society, stubbornly try to compromise the LCY and the system of socialist self-management, in order to imbue the people with ideo-political confusion and defeatism. Under the influence of powerful rightwing propaganda in the world and the difficulties we are bearing, those who not only deny the results of our working class and working people, but also attempt to bring into doubt the historical justification of socialism itself, of social property and of socialist self-management are rearing their heads.

They are helped by pragmatism, militarism, ideological sluggishness and insufficient ideo-political unity among our ranks. On the basis of the disintegrated economy, science, and other areas of human creativity not connected with the principles of self-management, on the basis of strong group and property tendencies, breed and grow petit-bourgeois egosim, a consumer psychology and increasingly cruder attacks on social property. Such trends in society have resulted in a situation whereby in the League of Communists itself there can be felt characteristics of those ideological and theoretical beliefs which are based on the ideology of statist bureaucratism or bourgeois liberalism. Adherents of such beliefs accuse the system of socialist self-management of being the main reason for the crisis situation, although, the opposite is true.

They key problem is that the system is developing slowly and is being implemented inconsistently. Unfavorable international circumstances have also considerably contributed to the growth of economic crisis in our society. The existing economic order has made the division of the world into rich and poor even more pronounced. Billions of people live below the line of absolute poverty while tens of millions die of starvation every year. Developed countries are increasingly using protectionist measures and closing their markets to the products of underdeveloped countries, to which end they frequently use economic sanctions, embargoes, blockades, trade restrictions, and other similar means of economic and political coercion.

The consequences of this state of international relations have become destructive to the economy and population of developing countries. From 1980-85 the prices of raw materials, which are the main exports of developing countries, fell considerably. In the same period interest rates were increased by several points. For most of the debtor countries debts have become an unbearable burden. As a consequence of all this, the per capita income in developing countries today is lower than what it was in 1980. Our economy, too, has suffered great damage as a result of unjust international economic relations and the protectionist conditions of commodity exchange in the world market. We have, except in rare cases, been severely hit by the drop in prices of raw materials, as well as the continuing increases in the prices of the products demanding high degree of technological processing.

A further aggravation of relations between import and export prices has been caused which, I wish to recall, has lasted for a long time. Our economic policy is adjusting itself too slowly to changes in the world market, we have organized ourselves too slowly with the aim of defending and protecting ourselves from such trends and blows.

Also the contemporary world is characterized by the new scientific and technological revolution which creates new challenges for our country, too. In this aspect, too, we are increasingly lagging behind. In many ways we are on the fringes of this revolution. Consequences will be even more severe unless we become capable as soon as possible of answering its challenges and thereby decreasing dependence on importing licences in the way we have been doing so far. In all this, the most difficult things is that we lack a unified strategy of technological development and we have not organized ourselves as yet to make radical U-turns in this area.

From the report of the LCY Central Committee it cvan be seen that the LCY, in the period between the 12th and 13th Congresses when the economic crisis and the crisis situation in society reached their culminating point, shed critical and self-critical light on this situation, its main causes and the ways of solving the crisis. This period between the two congresses was the period of maturing awareness of the crisis and great dangers which it brings. Enormous efforts have been invested in developing and strengthening ideological and actional unity of ther LCY on a democratic basis, as the most important prerequisite for overcoming the crisis situation in society, and developing the widest possible activity in the struggle for economic and political stability and further development of our country on the basis of socialist self-management. In this period the Long-Term Program of Economic Stabilization was adopted, as a program for solving the crisis. The "Critical Analysis of the Functioning of Political system" was prepared. New social plans and programs of development were adopted. The LCY Central Committee, the republican LC central committees and the provincial LC committees increased their activities and confirmed ideopolitical stands on many unsolved questions which burdened our society and weakened the ideological and actional unity of the LCY.

After the 13th session of the LCY Central Committee, the all-party discussion was organized. It took part in the atmosphere of an open critical analysis of internal weaknesses and omissions. Severe criticism was in particular addressed to the leaderships of the LCY.

In the context of all this a firm belief has been voiced in the program orientation of the LCY and its strength and ability to overcome its own weaknesses and mobilize the social forces with the aim of extricating ourselves from the difficulties. The criticism has had a mobilizing effect; it has yielded much specific knowledge and many proposals about what should be done and how. It has also initiated many specific actions. The preparations for this congress, the congresses of the LC of the republics and the conferences of the LC of the provinces as well as the conference of the LC Organizatons in the Yugoslav People's Army have taken place in the same spirit.

Thanks precisely to such activity of the LC and of other organized socialist forces in society as well as to the unswerving trust of the working class and working people in the program orientations and strategic aims of the LCY, individual strongly manifest problems and contradictions in our society have not, in the period under review, assumed dimensions which would have much graver political, social and economic consequences. Some have even been overcome or controlled. With its ideo-political activity, the LC has made a decisive contribution to the aim of seeking and finding a way out of all our difficulties along the course of the socialist self-managing development of our society and greater activity and responsibility of its legitimate institutions.

A certain economic growth has been achieved, even if unsteady and not extensive, although tendencies to stagnation and lagging behind have not yet been overcome. A considerable number of new jobs have ben provided; however this was not enough to halt the increase in unemployment. The coverage of imports by exports has been increased and a surplus in the balance of payments achieved. This has made it possible to improve the supply of the market with raw material, reproduction material, and some consumer goods and to preserve the country's foreign liquidity. Initial results have been achieved in the application of the more realistic economic criteria in the economic life and investment policy.

All this has contributed to strengthening our consciousness that we can overcome our great difficulties and ensure successful development only through the maximum reliance on our own forces and better work and work of greater quality. It could be said that we have begun to a significant extent to realign and strengthen our ranks in the struggle aimed at extricating ourselves from crisis situations. However, even despite the initial encouraging results, we have not eliminated the great threats with which the economic crisis oppresses our community. Efforts in this direction have not been the same everywhere. There was considerable tardiness, hesitation, and superficial activity in implementing the stances adopted. The LCY membership has, in its all-party debate, manifested great energy and resolve in its demands for more radical changes; it has manifested its ability and its readiness to participate actively in this, and to bear its part of the responsibility. But this energy and this resolve have not yet fully been translated into relevant social action.

The successful realization of the long-term economic stabilization program implies and imperatively calls for greater unity, more resolute and swifter realignment at all levels of social organizing activity, and more responsible economic behavior and a broader practical action in mobilizing and activating all our society's potentials. Internal weaknesses, inconsistencies and shortcomings of our political system, which reduce its efficiency and which make the more successful realization of the long-term economic stabilization program more difficult, should also be eliminated more boldly and more swiftly. It is due to great tardiness, indecisiveness and lack of unity in implementing the long-term economic stabilization program that some economic problems, and thus also socio-political problems, manifest themselves today in a more severe form than at the time this program was adopted. These are, among other things, alienation of a large part of the income from those who create it, along with the intensified influence exerted by various informal groups and noninstitutional factors on the social trends; spiraling of inflation; fall in the standard of living of the poorest strata of society; increase in losses and thus also great difficulties in current reproduction; division into social strata by bypassing the criteria of distribution according to work.

In conditions when the long-term program is not implemented on time, implemented only partially, disjointedly, and inconsistently, some indispensable measures of the economic policy too, such as the realistic interest rates and realistic exchange rate of the dinar, brought results contrary to those hoped for, in particular regarding the rise of inflation, impoverishment of the material aspects of self-management in many branches of the economy, and division into social strata.

There is still much hesitation as regards the role and the significance of commodity production and its laws in the struggle for the economic stabilization and the development of socialist self-management. We still have not made decisive changes in the direction of the fuller use of existing capacities and working time, speedier application of scientific achievements and a more efficient participation in the international division of labor.

It is unacceptable that in this difficult socio-economic situation there is an irrational and dogmatic attitude to agriculture, tourism, and small-scale business, in the rapid development of which there are great reserves and possibilities for overcoming the crisis. Today the most important task of society and of all subjective forces led by the LCY is: The greater mobilization of the working class, working people, and all progressive forces in our society so that we can overcome more rapidly the crisis and open up the prospect for the further, dynamic and stable economic and social development of our country. It is expected and required of the LC that it shed yet more light on the concrete roads which lead to the development of even more decisive actions to remove everything which stands in the way of progress and extend the horizons and areas of man's freedoms and creativity.

The LCY Central Committee, in the documents submitted to the 13th Congress, indicates that a way out of this situation must be sought in the more intensive development of socialist self-management as an integral socioeconomic relationship; the more determined abolition of socioeconomic bases of statism; bureaucratic arbitrariness and encapsulation; the more rapid change from extensive to intensive methods of economic operations; the increased strengthening of the unity of the Yugoslav community on the bases of socialist self-management and full national equality.

This has already been unanimously confirmed by the LC congresses of all the republics and the LC conferences of the provinces and also by the Conference of the LC Organization in the Yugoslav People's Army. This has also been confirmed by the congresses and conferences of all our sociopolitical organizations. It has also been confirmed by working people and citizens at numerous pre-election gatherings, at which, as they did in the elections, they participated in large numbers. At the congresses and conferences of the LC, the trade unions, the veterans organization and of youth, the demand has been strongly made for the strengthening of the unity of the LCY and the country as a whole. But we all know quite well, that this unity can only be strengthened by revolutionary action, which constantly gives an impetus to the development of social relations in the direction of communist society.

It is the task of the 13th Congress -- by assessing in a united way the causes of the crisis and in particular by answering the question of where to go from here -- to make a strong contribution to the ideological unity of the LCY and thereby stimulate its revolutionary action. This is the most important political condition for a way out of the crisis. This is the most important political condition for a way out of the crisis and for the further successful transformation of our society.

Our 13th Congress should be a congress of the strengthening of socialist self-management, a congress of the strengthening of the unity of the country and the LCY. In the struggle against growing statism, it should be a congress of action and harmony of words and actions. With the force and the clarity of its stances and orientations. The 13th Congress should open up the prospects for a gradual but consistent and certain realization of the domination of workers in associated labor over the currents of social reproduction and the political functions of society and initiate uncompromising and effective action to overcome all the obstacles which block the more dynamic development of socialist self-management. It should contribute to the concrete elaboration of an action program which working people will accept and implement as their own practice of liberation and association of labor and, on this basis, of expanding their own and social freedoms. This practice should engender concrete answers to the question of maximally restricting the space for the realization of the intermediary role between the working individual and the results of his work on the part of those political and social factors, which build their privileged position on the basis of estranged income in opposition to socialist self-management and the true authority of the working class.

The congress is expected to reaffirm the basic orientations of the long-term economic stabilization probram and to contribute to a higher level of activity and responsibility for its faster, more consistent implementation and in so doing to open up the prospect of a more dynamic economic development, of halting the decline in the standard of living, and of reducing the social differences to a measure stemming from the application of the principle of distribution of income in accordance with the results of the work that had been done.

For this kind of result and success the 13th LCY Congress has a reliable support in the LCY program and in the 1974 Constition, in the decisions of the recent congresses, and in the clear long-term vision of the self-management socialist development of our country, which we created together with Tito, Kardelj, and other great men of our revolution. Resisting every attempt to abandon this vision the LCY is obliged at its 13th Congress to make its contribution to an in-depth and critical analysis of the function of our economic and political system and of the activity of all the factors in it, especially of its own activity, with a view to overcoming the crisis faster, sounder economic and social development of our country, and consolidation of the international reputation and influence of the LCY and of the SFRY.

The most important task of the 13th Congress concerns its stands and decisions to help our working class to appear -- in deeds and not in words -- more forcefully on the scene of our socioeconomic and political life and to ensure that socialist self-management is made stronger and to make it work in practice more efficiently, providing increasingly good results in our material and social development. In our specific situation this means first and foremost that production relations and the political system of socialist self-management, by being further developed and strengthened, must encourage a faster self-management integration of our society and secure more efficient decision-making, a more rational and intensive use of social resources, and faster application of scientific-technological achievements. All the forms and tendencies of usurpation of social property in a private-ownership, group-ownership, or state-ownership manner must be eliminated faster.

In order to bring this about the LC must pay paramount attention to the development and consolidation of self-management by the workers in the basic organizations of associated labor. The substance of their constitutional concept as the condition to directly acquire self-management rights, and of the workers' commitments and responsibilities in controlling social resources, must be implemented more consistently because that is the basis for the implementation of the delegate system and of the authority of the workers in our society as a whole. If basic organizations of associated labor are not a point of departure for the necessary self-management organization and self-management integration of associated labor of our society, they also cannot be the main fulcrum of the decisive role of the workers and of the working people in all the currents of social reproduction and protagonists of modern production.

The LCY will press hard to see to it that the improvement of our system will ensure and help the basic organizations of associated labor -- as part of a work organization -- to develop as sound economic factors and as commodity producers. Our system of socio-economic relations should motivate the workers in them so that in order to make economic operations involving social resources more efficient and more rational, through their work organizations they could merge into wider labor associations. They would thereby continue to increase their labor productivity and revenue; be more interested in extended reproduction and application of modern equipment and technology; use accumulation funds as rationally as possible and attain their self-management concentration in the interests of acquiring a higher level of revenue; ensure a growth in the standard of living and of all aspects of expenditure in keeping with the results of work; and accept economic and any other type of responsibility for the quality of their self-management decisions. Promotion of the system and the action of subjective forces should prevent any losses and mistakes which are a consequence of poor work and of autarkic group-ownership behavior and decision-making from being made good at the expense of our community.

In the conditions of the development and building of such socio-economic relations, it will become increasingly clear that the substance of the self-management by the workers in the basic, work, and other organizations of associated labor cannot be attained through autarky and group-ownership conduct because these tendencies run counter to the essence of social property and socialist self-management and the requirements of the present-day development of production forces. They undermine the future of the associated labor organizations and of self-management as a whole. In these conditions the pooling of labor and resources, the promotion of the system of social planning, the concern for the implementation of self-management commitments and responsibilities and for the reduction of unwieldy administration in work organizations and in our society as a whole will increasingly become an existential requirement of the workers. In these conditions the workers will develop and strengthen the work organizations as market factors and integral-plan development entities that will play a bigger role in planning the development and in economic relations with foreign countries and will strive to develop other forms of self-management association and organization.

Self-managing integration, if it is based on the real interests of the working cass and working people, does not decrease the freedom and independence of the subjects of this integration in the effective use of their self-managing rights, rather, it strengthens their joint power. The independence of self-managing organizations and communities, when it operates in the function of realizing the essence of social property and self-management, is the factor of progress; but when it becomes the force and support of autarchy and defends group property and egoistic interests, it becomes its brake. In our present situation, characterized by the strongly prominent tendencies of the autarchy of self-managing organizations and socio-political communities, of crucial significance for the system itself for the cohesion and firmness of the Yugoslav community, and for our economic and social progress to continue to develop the self-managing socioeconomic relations and thereby to strengthen the intergrational functions of socialist self-management, and the mutual ties, obligations, and responsibilities of parts and the whole, beginning with the basic organization of associated labor through work and composite organizations and other self-managing associations to the provinces, republics, and the federation.

Such a course of developing socialist self-management is imperatively demanded by the modern scientific and technological revolution. The disintegration of the Yugoslav economy, its autarchic development, and the economic parceling of its parts in modern conditions increasingly present an obstacle to the development of production forces and thereby also become a cause of Yugoslavia's economic lagging behind. Maintaining such a situation would not only slow down the development of socialist self-management but would also lead to its discreditation. Socialist self-management, if it is developing consistently in the real interests of the working class and working people, will strengthen the political, cultural, and economic ties of peoples and nationalities and the unity of Yugoslavia. It will contribute to national equality and the fuller utilization of all the advantages of our unity for the speedier and more successful economic and social development of the country a a whole and all the republics and provinces individually. Socialist self-management and the increasingly stronger self-managing integration of Yugoslav society, which is based on pooling labor and resources, are the main condition for strengthening freedom, independence, equality, and finally, for a happier future for each of our peoples and nationalities and every individual. It is the historical interest of the working class and thereby the real national interest of the widest working strata in each of our nations and nationalities to strengthen our unity.

Starting from this, in the next period the LC will make more resolute efforts to create conditions for a speedier self-managing integration of the Yugoslav economy and society. With its activity, the LC will eliminate bureaucratic obstacles to these processes, will cut the roots of autarchic and isolationist tendencies, and stimulate the development of the system of self-management organization of the worker, according to the logic of his production and reproduction linking, and on the line of the further development of the delegate system. Such development of socialist self-management cannot be realized without a more complete utilization of numerous advantages offered by the delegate system to include the widest possible circle of working people and citizens in the process of making and implementing all decisions in this society. In this aspect today, we are insufficiently utilizing the advantages of the delegate system.

We are far from realizing its essence. The essence is that through delegations, their linking, the participation of workers and working people in making decisions at all levels in managing the economy and other social tasks should be ensure. Neither the method nor the content of work of the LC, Social Alliance, and other sociopolitical organizations are adjusted for realizing the essence of the delegate system. That is why the self-managing integrational essence of the chambers of associated labor is not being realized in accordance with constitutional orientations nor the self-managing essence of self-managing communities of interest. In many ways, the delegate system is formalized. Its revolutionary form is often filled with conservative, etatist, and bureaucratic relations and contents. The LC is dupty-bond, by following the class objectives of society and its own revolutionary orientations, to increase its efforts in the direction of a more consistent realization of the constitutional concept of the delegate system and the staturory principles of the ways of communist activity in this system.

Without the delegate decisionmaking process, as the essence of the delegate system, there can be no socialist democracy, or ruling position of the workers in society, or destruction of technocratism and bureaucratism. Our practice so far has demonstrated that for the efficient implementation of the essence of the delegate system it is of crucial significance that there be day-by-day concrete political work by the organizations of the LC, the Socialist Alliance, the trade unions, veterans and youth at the grass roots of society and in the institutions of this system.

The role of the Socialist Alliance, as the front of the organized democratic forces and the political basis of socialist democracy is irreplaceable in the proces of delegate decisionmaking. The duty of the Communists is to fight for such a work and development of the Socialist Alliance as will ensure that our political life is richer and that it encompasses the masses; so that through democratic creative criticism better solutions are constantly sought and found and that everything which is backward and weak is overcome more swiftly; so that the policy and practice which curtail initiatives, restrict self-managing decisionmaking and fetter man as the producer and creator be prevented.

The LC is consistent in its orientation that no single essential issue, on which the further development of our society depends, can be successfully resolved without the involvement, knowledge and revolutionary enthusiasm of the young through our political and delegate system. By operating through self-management organs, the delegate system, the Socialist Alliance and other socio-political organizations, the LCY should be the most significant political organizations, the LCY should be the most significant political cohesive force in society. It can be such a force only by constantly elucidating, on every concrete situation, the course leading to the strengthening of the social position of the working class and the working people in the system of increasingly developed socialist democracy and fighting decisively and unswervingly for qualitative solutions that are in accord with this.

The successful functioning of the delegate system implies the public nature of work and objective briefing of the working people and citizens, self-management organs, delegations and delegates on all society trends. It is indispensable, therefore, that all all the levels of social organizing and activity such a social information system be built which will be able to provide timely and complete information to all the participants in the delegate decisionmaking process on all relevant social issues.

The LC must resolutely oppose all forms of isolationism and various manipulations through the information system, in particular in cases when the selfish and narrow interests are camouflaged as being social ones.

In view of the great significance of the public word, the socialist subjective forces must, through self-managing and political action, create space for responsible social criticism and objective information which will contribute to the development of self-managing relations and the overcoming of statist-bureaucratic and petit-bourgeois liberalist deformations. What we need is a realistic picture of our class-oriented critical thought.

The role of the state and of its organs has in recent years been moving away from the LC attitudes formulated in the LCY program and resolutions of earlier LC congresses as well as in constitutional provisions. The role of the state and its regulative function has been expanding deliberately and spontaenously extending to the currents preventing the role of the working class in associated labor, as established by the Constitution, from being realized. At the same time, the responsibility and efficiency of the state organs in the spheres of social life where their role is irreplaceable has weakened. These are the spheres of social records and control, of inspection services, and, most important, of ensuring respect for constitutionality, legality, and strict implementation of the laws and decisions of relevant bodies and organs.

Such a situation must be altered urgently because it fetters socialist self-management and gives rise to insecurity and justified disatisfaction among the working people and citizens. The working people rightly expect the LC to embark on a resolute struggle against bureaucratic arbitrariness and against such actions by individuals in state organs as are in strong contradiction to the moral and legal norms of our society. All cases of lack of responsibility, bribe and corruption, connections and favoritism should be resolutely and publicly condemned.

This congress should call for improvement in the work of and for a greater degree of responsibility of the executive, administrative, judicary, inspection and other states organs. It also should insist on systematic, politically responsible control over the work of these organs and all those working in them.

In recent years, we have countered many problems in the efforts to realize the constitutional concept of the Yugoslav Federaton. These problems have manifested themselves in a very slow pace in the harmonizing of common interests in economic and development policies and the development of the economic and political system; in the weakening of the unity of the Yugoslav market; and in the increasingly frequent cases of the failure to apply and adhere to federal laws.

All this has led to serious difficulties in the functioning of the federation, weakened the system's efficiency, in general, and the unity and strengthen of the Yugoslav community in particular. These developments are causing increasing concern and dissatifaction among the working people and citizens and among all of our nations and nationalities. They provide a fertile ground for spreading ideological confusion about the character of the Yugoslav federation and for distorting the LCY's viewpoints in regard to this major issue.

The LCY Central Committee has extensively examined the set of problems relating to the realization of the constitutional concept of the Yugoslav federation and adopted its ideopolitical stance containing the assessments of the situation and the directions for the necessary social action designed to speed up a more consistent realization of the concept. The stances were fully supported by communists and working people during the preparations for the LC congresses and conferences of the republics and provinces, and for the 13th LCY Congress.

They are more completely elaborated in the proposed resolution, and conferences.

In its efforts to develop the Yugolsav federation, the LCY always has proceeded consistently from the principle that solutions must be constantly found which would create conditions for as high a degree as possible of national freedom, equality, and unity on the basis of the liberation of work and the development of socialist self-managment. The Yugoslav federation was not created as a result of compromises between political structures and agreements between national leaders; neither is it a creation of external factors. It was created out of the flame of the national liberation struggle and socialist revolution as a reflection of the aspirations of all the Yugoslav nations and nationalities. It can therefore develop successfully only on the basis of those factors on which it was created, such as on the strengthening of national equality and the working class' power.

The lull and difficulties in the development of self-managment and the intensified tendencies toward etatism have resulted in difficulties and confusion in realizing the constitutional concept of our federation. Because polycentric etatism and bureaucratism continue to gain ground, the integration of labor and resources for the most part has been limited within the republican and provincial boundaries. The republican and provincial economies have been developing as closed economic structures, thus destroying the organic unity of the economy on the integral Yugoslav economic area and market. The responsibilty of the republics and provinces for Yugoslavia's development has weakened and the progress in recognizing and coordinating common interests has slowed down and become more difficult.

The coordination of special interests accompanied by political pressures and bargaining, by disregard for the interests of others and, by relation, for common interests as well, and by reckless accusations; unitarist, or separatist behavior, depending on the acquired political position, are manifestations of the conflict between various etatist centers of power, which make decisions "on behalf" of the working class and strive to present themselves as the sole true proponents and guardians of national interests.

As long as the workers and working people organized on the basis of self-management are not given the opportunity to be the champions of both class and national interest, in other words, as long as neither class nor national interests are manifested as the unique interests of the workers and the working people, there will be scope for dividing and even opposing these interests either from the positions of separatist nationalism or the positions of dogmatic centralist ideology of state bureaucratism.

These manifestations and negative tendencies in the realization of the concept of the Yugoslav federation will be overcome to the extent which workers, organized on the basis of self-management and not the republican, provincial, or federal buruaucracy are the champions of the interests of the Yugoslav people, and to the extent to which the Yugoslav economy succeeds in becoming integrated on the basis of self-managment and Yugoslavia develops in accordance with the Constitution as a self-managed sociopolitical community of working people and citizens.

The solution for overcoming tendencies and the practice of clashing withing polycentric etatisms should not be sought in strengthening federal etatist centralism, but in developing socialist self-management; in consistently realizing the constitutional position of workers in associated labor; in developing socioeconomic relations and the political system, which will enable workers and working people in associated labor to exert a decisive influence upon decisionmaking in the assemblies of all sociopolitical communities, including the SFRY Assembly.

The LC will vigorously oppose all tendencies which ignore the fact that Yugoslavia is a multinational community of equal nations and nationalities in which the republics and provinces have an irreplaceable role according to the Constitution. It also will oppose all those who lose sight of the fact that the constant strengthening of Yugoslavia's unity and the effective operation of the federation's organs is the common interest of all our nations and nationalities and of every working man.

The standpoints of the LCY Central Committee on strengthening unity and togetherness in the SR of Serbia basically have helped to eliminate the problems which had accumulated and to realize more successfully the constitutional concept of the SR of Serbia, the socialist autonomous provinces and our federation, in addition to helping to strengthen the unity of the Serbian LC and the LCY. Communists and all working people in the SR of Serbia, the socialist autonomous provinces, and Yugoslavia as a whole demand that activity relating to implementation of these standpoints should be continued more consistently and decisively.

Taking as the point of departure the assessment that we are indeed seriously lagging behind in implementing the standpoints of the 11th LCY Congress on the development of the political system and on the great divergence between the political system laid down in the Constitution and what actually happens in practice, in the intercongress period the LC initiated the critical analysis of the functioning of the political system.

Work on this analysis and the public debate on it have helped overcome many differences and disputes. Agreement on many important issues relating to the functioning and further development of the political system has been reached, and there has been great unanimity in evaluating that such criticism, analysis, and monitoring of the functioning of the political system is an ongoing and long-term process of the creative search for scope and ways to eliminate statism, free labor, and build up associations of free producers.

It is essential that all those changes in self-managing and legal institutional norms and in the conduct of subjects of the system which were pointed out in the Critical Analysis and public debate be implemented as soon as possible. After a well-argued debate, a stand must be taken up in the competent organs on those specific issues and proposals upon which various proposals were put forward during the public debate. Of course, this relates to those proposals which aim to more successfully develop the system on the basis of socialist self-management and full national equality.

In the future, having learned from the negative experience in the development of the political system, we must be more critical of our own practices in order to realize more successfully our strategic goals in developing socialist self-management. The LCY is responsible not only for the historical meaning of the ideological orientations it puts forward, but also for the development of the political and economic system, and the institutions and relations which these orientations are to effect. This makes it incumbent upon the LCY, from its position of who must see more and further, to make a critical evaluation of where society is heading and how it is doing so, and whether the existing systemic and other solutions correspond to the long-term interests and requirements of the working class.

The class liberation essence of self-management could not be realized if it were deprived of the efforts of its sociopolitical protagonists which aim to create new and more highly developed, democratic, and humane relations by changing the existing solutions.

In the period between the two congresses, the LCY, the Serbian LC and the Kosovo LC, and all other organized socialist forces exerted great efforts -- through not always enough effort -- toward stabilizing state and political conditions in the Socialist Autonomous Province of Kosovo, and toward the consequences of the counterrevolutionary activity of Albanian nationalists and irredentists. The political and security situation in Kosovo is, thanks to this, better today. Nevertheless, many tasks from the political platform for the LCY actions in the development of socialist self-management and brotherhood, unity, and togetherness in Kosovo have not been fully and satisfactorily carried out. Above all, the sources from which Albanian nationalism and irredentism find their inspiration have not been eliminated, nor has the destructive activity of the irredentists been fully prevented.

Not enough has been done to eliminate everything that leads to the indoctrination of young people in Kosovo into Albanian separatist nationalism and irredentism. The process of ideopolitical differentiation within the ranks of the LC and other socialist forces in Kosovo was started but has not been completed. There are also shortcomings in establishing action unity in the LC of Serbia and of the LC of Kosovo and the LCY in implementing the tasks arising from the political platform. The fact that there recently has been a resurgence there of Serbian, Montenegrin, and other kinds of nationalism, which render the battle for the stabilization of the situation in Kosovo difficult, makes it incumbent on the LC to commit itself to a most resolute and consistent ideopolitical action wherever these forms of nationalism appear. This has been responsible and continues to be responsible for some adverse developments in this province of ours.

We have not been able to stabilize the violated intranational relations and restore confidence in the principles of equality, brotherhood, and unity and the awareness of our vital unity. There is continued nationalistic pressure on the Serbian and Montenegrin population causing them to emigrate from Kosovo. For this reason the inconsistencies and shortcomings in the implementation of the tasks established in the political platform must be eliminated quickly. The LC of Kosovo has the big commitment -- and the same applies to the LC of Serbia and to the LCY as a whole -- to defeat the irredentists as soon as possible and to overcome the consequences of their destructive activity and secure the necessary political stability in the province and, in so doing, in the SR of Serbvia and in Yugoslavia as a whole as well. The LCY must mobilize much more resolutely all the social forces in Kosovo, in the SR of Servia, and in Yugoslavia to preavent any emigration under duress and to establish conditions favorable for the return of those who left. The paramount and urgent task of all organized socialist forces and of state organs in Kosovo is to ensure consistent respect of the constitutional rights and freedoms of our working people and citizens, applicable in the same way and on an equal footing to the members of all nationalities. The essential condition to achieve this it to intensify efforts and make it possible for the institutions of the political system in Kosovo, to strengthen their authority and the confidence in them because it is their duty to resolve the problems of human and intranational relations that arise in Kosovo.

We require concrete and organized action to boost political stability in Kosovo, replacing the formalist establishment of platforms and repetition of conclusions and appeals. As before, our community and the SR of Serbia will help hasten economic development and the overall self-management transformation of Kosovo because that is one of the essential conditions of the equality of the nations and nationalities and of more stable economic and overall social development of the Province of Kosovo.

In the world in which we live, further promotion of the all people's defense and social self-protection system is of special importance for our community and for the LCY.

Our defense concept stems from our self-management system and from the involvement of all the factors of our society in the defense of freedom, sovereignty, and achievements of our revolution. In keeping with this concept, during this period between the two congresses, we were once again able, despite many difficulties experienced by our country, mainly financial, to achieve major results in consolidating the defense strength of our society. Significant results were attained both in enriching the concept and the doctrine of all-people's defense and of social self-protection, and in the development of our defense protection system and in intensifying the building of the SFRY Armed Forces. Our country's defense and self-protection depends on the overall internal situation; on our economic, political, and social stability; on our ability to eliminate delays, shortcomings, and crises in our internal relations and in the development of self-management. This is why we link our constant concern for the development of the all-people's defense and social self-protection system with out efforts to extricate ourselves from our difficulties and our efforts to bring about further socialist, and self-management development of our society.

The Yugoslav People's Army [YPA] performs multiple functions in our defense and self-protection system. They are laid down by our Constitution. The YPA is a joint force of all our nations and nationalities and, with our territorial defense, the backbone of our all-people's defense system. The LC Organization in the YPA makes a significant contribution to the implementation of our Army's functions, and in so doing, contributes to the consolidation of our defense system as a whole. We must resolutely resist the attempts, under the pretext of the struggle against militarization and unitarianism, to attack the all-people's defense system and the role of the YPA in the defense of our country and seek a change in this role.

We must always critically, concretely, and realistically assess the state of our defense and protection capability in every cell of our society, constantly bearing in mind the conditions in the world, the military-political position of our country, the requirements of modern war and of our all-people's defense concept. Of course, we must never be satisfied with what we have achieved because many factors of international and internal nature operate unceasingly and consequently, we constantly must strengthen and develop our defense and protection.

The further socialization of national defense and social self-protection, because it must be realized as a revolutionary process, is a vital precondition for us to succeed in this.

Comrades, the long-term program of economic stabilization is the starting point for our overall action to find a way out of the economic crisis and the realization of dynamic development on a stable basis. The LC must oppose more resolutely the continuation of the practice up to now of its inconsistent, unsynchronized, and partial achievements and the great delay in carrying them out. Today it is clear that we must accelerate the processes of the extensive methods of running the economy and more resolutely turn our attention to raising labor productivity, fully using all economic resources, and struggling for high product quality. The historic moment requires that a significantly different attitude be created toward the economy and business operations, toward self-managment mobility and the concentration of resources, and the construction and development of large business system. With these measures of developmental and economic policy and with the energetic action of the LC and other subjective forces, an about face must be achieved and performed in the direction of greater social and progressive valuing of productive and creative work, know-how and ability, innovation and inventiveness.

At this moment, it is of exceptional importance that all social forces are involved in continuing the already-begun processes of overcoming the stagnation of production. It is necessary that in 1986 the already-begun growth of social production be stabilized and then, in the course of these 5 years, its growth rate be further increased on a qualitative economic basis. Without this, in other words, if there is stagnation, not one of the most important tasks facing us in the immediate future -- keeping inflation within acceptable proportions, and expanding the choice of commodities, exporting goods and services, abolishing of unemployment, and strengthening scientific and technical development -- will be able to be achieved. The large reserves which exist in the inadequately exploited material and human resources, offer us a precious basis both for the more rapid growth of production and for the attainment of the general quality of economic activity. With measures of the system of economic developmental policy and the action of subjective forces, we should ensure that production capacities are used to a much greater degree, that operational costs are more rapidly reduced, that the circulation of funds is accelerated so that country's foreign exchange resources are better channeled into productive ventures, and that there is a more rapid increase in labor productivity. The most important preconditions for the increase in the rate of the production growth on economically rational and qualitative bases, is the increase in exports, especially to the convertible currency area, and more rapid and more rational involvement in the international division of labor. The limitation of the domestic market points to the powerful expansion of goods export. Without this we cannot realize the full and rational increase of our economic potential, just as without the more powerful influence of the economic criteria of the world market, in domestic production there is no successful transition to an intensive method of doing business. The significant comparative advantages for which Yugoslavia has potential in the export of services, particularly in the sphere of tourism and international transport and demand that both the developmental current economic policies pay greater attention to them. The increase of overall foreign exchange receipts is also the precondition for the repayment of foreign debts and in the coming period this will remain one of our most difficult problems and most important tasks. We must build up a common Yugoslav conception of involvement in the international division of labor, so that we export what is combatible with international economy in the most rational way and import what will essentially contribute to our technical and technological development. The expansion of exports should increasingly be realized through joint production and export programs and on the bases of the most extensive integration and division of labor in the united Yugoslav economic sphere, with the strengthening of the qualitative factor in the conduct of business. It should develop, too, in those products and services in which it is possible to realize increasingly favorable foreign exchange methods.

It is also necessary to develop more quickly higher forms of economic cooperation with other countries, joint industrial ventures, joint investment, and the like; to achieve the necessary changes in the regional structure of our foreign economic relations as a whole, in particular with the developing countries. The rational and intensive inclusion in the internationl division of labor depends on qualitative changes in the policy of development and economy structure, the more organized operation of the economy in foreign markets, the faster development of integrational processes, greater respect for common interests, and the faster overcoming of the blind and group-ownership entrenchment behind narrow interests, even when this clearly does immediate harm to the common interests of Yugoslavia as a whole.

There is quite a bit of this in our relations with other countries. Foreign currency income from tourism is of great importance to the Yugoslav economy. This is certainly where our great chances lie and should be exploited more fully.

However, the warnings that our real foreign currency income from tourism is much greater than that which the institutions of the social sector realize must for once be taken seriously. For economic, social, and political reasons, we cannot allow this to remain the case. The problem with speculating on foreign currency must be tackled with greatest severity. We, of course, are not taking here about citizens' legally saving in foreign currency accounts, but about foreign currency from unauthorized and illegal payments from foreigners and the transfer of foreign currency from the social sector to private pockets.

The unexploited agricultural reserves are enormous. If we overcome the clear lag in agriculture as soon as possible, we will create exceptionally great opportunities to increase production all round. This is also of great importance for the stability of the domestic market, reducing inflation, raising the living standard, and improving the balance of payments.

The faster development of energy production, together with the greatest possible rationalization of energy use, should be seen as one of the key conditions for the faster development of production in general. But such development is not possible in the way that has existed hitherto; that is, under conditions of division and fragmentation. We are seriously behind in a joint Yugoslav program for the development of energy production, saving energy, and replacing imported sources of energy with domestic ones. We need an ambitious but realistic energy program based on combined Yugoslav balance sheets and rational use, above all, of domestic energy sources, with maximum care being taken over the protection of the environment. In the further development of energy production, our country, like the rest of the world, must involve itself in the modern trends in the exploitation of new energy sources, including nuclear ones. But this has to be a joint Yugoslav program. A decision on the construction of any kind of nuclear energy plant can only be adopted with the agreement of the competent federal organs and the broadest advance consultative information for the public. Reconstruction, modernization, more intensive intensive cooperation in industry based on the broader self-management integration and division of labor in the unified Yugoslav economic space -- this is the sure way toward the fast and rational increase of production in this largest of economic spheres.

Under conditions of the lagging development of communications, the water resources systems and housing and the lag of the construction industry is incomprehensible and unacceptable. With relatively little investment, the development of the construction industry will perceptibly contribute to the faster growth of production and employment.

We can achieve similar results with the faster development of the small-scale economy, which deserves the backing, general support, and particular support of the economic policy. It is high time for us to free ourselves of vacillation, doubts, and ideological prejudices regarding the place and role of the small-scale economy in complementing production structure, in greater and faster employment, and the involvement to this and of large resources of our workers abroad.

The development and current economic policy must aim at raising the volume and structure of investments as soon as possible to a level that corresponds to the modern developmental needs of the country, and at raising the efficiency of investments to a level that corresponds to modern European standards. Exceptionally great reserves in that respect are concealed in the large quantity of resources which are frozen in stocks.

Excessively high stocks in the economy which are out of line with the volume of production are manifested as an intolerably slow turnover of resources and directly slow down the development of production forces, exports, and employment, as well as the growth of the living standard.

The measures for the financial consolidation of the economy, development of production cooperation, stimulation of saving and innovations, the measures for selectively increasing imports, and , in particular, the measures which should ensure efficient functioning of the unified Yugoslav market, the resources frozen in stocks can be relatively reduced in favor of investing the economy's basic funds. Full attention should be devoted to increasing domestic sources for financing investments. Here as well, we have considerable unused opportunities and possibilities. Increasing economic income within the framework of opportunities of bigger contributions for extended reproduction is certainly the main direction of our efforts in this aspect. But, we should by no means forget that the population's savings cleverly stimulated, is of primary importance for economic investment. Foreign funds, whether in the form of credits for importing equipment or in the form of joint investments with foreign partners should be accepted on the basis of orientations and criteria from the adopted plans of the federation, republics, and provinces and with the guarantee that the one who gets these funds should be in a position to repay them on time.

Rational utilization and self-managing concentration of accumulation funds, which are scarce in Yugoslav economy; it is the irreplaceable orientation of the development policy. It is necessary that the LC make more resolute efforts toward the greater efficiency of investments and self-managing concentration...of...investment funds on the strategic programs of development and in accordance with the interest for a speedier increase of income. We therefore must attach great significance to the reform of business banking, so that it can realize its financial and development functions, primarily on the basis of economic criteria, with strengthening the responsibility of banks and breaking up their heretofore pronounced territorialization.

The policy of stimulating the developing of economically insufficiently developed republics, particularly the socialist autonomous Province of Kosovo, as one of the main orientations of our overall socioeconomic, and particularly development policy, will be best realized through closer association of the organizations of associated labor of all our republics and provinces on joint production and export programs and through fuller economic integration on the basis of the division of labor and specialization and through developing large economic systems. The assets from the fund for stimulating development of insufficiently developed republics and the Province of Kosovo therefore should be used primarily in a way that will stimulate this and similar processes.

Dynamic, rational, and harmonious economic development without delay demands our active participation in the scientific and technological revolution and the considerably more intense and wider development of science, education, and culture. Because they are not just mere proponents of technological progress but real conditions for the worker and self-manager who by taking control of the technology and organization of production, can thereby really take control of reproduction of his life. The strategic objective of active participation in the new international division of labor presupposes our more intensive and organized participation in the international scientic and technological trends. For this objective, it is necessary to establish as soon as possible a unified strategy of Yugoslav technological development so that the organizations of associated labor, starting from this strategy, can adopt their own program, with established priorities, on the basis of which the division of labor will be carried out and scientific potentials engaged on them.

This is the only way we can rationally join the international division of labor and the transfer of knowledge and technology, and reduce the dependence on importing licences. We must stop the practice of buying outdated and duplicated technologies and buying them under very restrictive conditions at that.

The insufficient participation of science in social practice, from production to social activities, is not manifested only as shortcomings of ties between individual organizations (for instance, research and economic organizations). The entire system of the organization of science and scientific research work is lagging behind the needs of society. In this area the integration within Yugoslavia is insufficient. It is therefore necessary that in the next period we should deal more fully with the organization, conditions of work, and the role of science in our society, so that we can make all subjects in science and associates labor more responsible for realizing their social function. We must develop science and technology among the broadest front, from the scientific basis of labor in every job to the entire sociopolitical relations and developing the concept of its further development. In this sense, we must approach the system of education and upbringing as a factor of the development of science and its transfer to the self-managing worker, as one of the most important factors of social progress in general. Upbringing and education are the most significant social areas because our most precious development potential stems from them. The LC approaches this obligation with an attitude based on the demand that they be brought into the function of creating complete, courageous, creative personalities, free of all admixtures of traditionalism and dogmatism, capable of realizing economic, self-managing, and other tasks which society sets in front of them and which are imposed by the time in which they live.

The LC has the duty to struggle for the self-managing transformation of the educational training system, for its linkage with the other spheres of associated labor and for its greater unity at the Yugoslav level. Both the joint principles and essence of the educational training program and all the forms and contents of republican and provincial cooperation at this level -- including legislative activity and the network of schools, universities, and other educational-training institutions -- should be subjected to these demands, which are the result of the nature of modern development. There can be no modern progress of production forces, successfull development of socialist self-management, or strengthening of Yugoslav unity without the unhindered of circulation of ideas and free professional and labor association throughout Yugoslav territory, particularly in the sphere of science, education, and culture. The creation of conditions for the accelerated development of science and research work at universities is of exceptional importance. It is necessary to devote greater attention to unifying scientific and material potentials with the aim of organizing interdisciplinary and multidisciplinary studies for highly specialized cadres and to halt the large flow of eminent experts abroad from universities and othe scientific and research institutions.

High inflation is one of our major problems. It degrades our system, weakens its possibilities and reduces the results of efforts to increase exports and the qualitative factors of economic operations, lowers the standard of living of workers and the poorest strata of our society, and transfers the burden of the struggle for economic stabilization almost exclusively onto their shoulders. For this reason, the curbing of inflation represents one of the most important prerequisites for away out of economic crisis and fpr the implementation of the tasks and goals of development and economic policies. Our activity that aims to curb inflation must be complex and directed toward elminating all of its causes. It is necessary to have a comprehensive anti-inflationary program of measures and activities, from the basic organization of associated labor to the federation.

It is the duty of the LC to make sure that, in the struggle against inflation, all means of the economic policy and the economic system are used and all the forces of society mobilized.

In order to curb inflation it is of crucial importance to increase production, exports, and income and to take more resolute measures to relieve the economy from enormous overhead costs. One should more rapidly realize the proposed measures for the financial consolidation of economy and the banks, reduce the indebtedness of the economy by rescheduling debts, and produce more effective solutions in order to reduce the heavy burden of differencies in the exchange of the dinar. One must end the practice of spending more than is created as quickly as possible. Along with this it is necessary to implement in a more effective way the policy of the social control of prices increases than it has been so far. In our socialist self-managing society, social policy is an essential factor for the success in our material and social development. The LCY proceeds from the attitude that the effective solutions of exacerbated problems in the sphere of the living standard and social policy can be achieved only through better economic activity, increased income, and reduced inflation.

We must develop a more comprehensive system of motivating workers for better work and economic activity on the basis of the consistent application of the principle of distribution according to the results of labor and more speedily implement the LCY's policy and stands in this sphere, which werre examined in more detail at the 24th session of the LCY Central Committee and in the draft resolution submitted to this congress. Communists must exert efforts in order that in all the organizations of associated labor and institutions of the system, the necessary criteria and yardsticks for such a distribution and that hesitation and resistance be more resolutely suppressed. It is the duty of Communists to fight against leveling, which has become increasingly pronounced in conditions of high inflation, as well as against untenable discrepancies in personal incomes, which are not based on the resulsts of one's labor. Communists are also expected to fight more resolutely to ensure workers' equality in the acquisition and distribution of income. Without this we cannot know for certain to what extent the acquired income is the result of labor and management of social resources on the part of workers in the basic organization of associated labor, and to what extent it is the result, in other words, the consequence, of privileged or unequal position of workers with regard to conditions for economic activities.

The principle of socialist solidarity and reciprocation, which is the component part of our social relations, should be realized in keeping with our society's material capacities and in such a way that will not encourage idleness and irrational behavior.

By proceeding from the fundamental orientations of the long-term economic stabilization program, it is of particular significance to ensure the consistent implementation of the constitutional principle of everyone contributing to satisfying the general social and common needs in proportion with his economic strength. In this connection, it is necessary to realize with greater resolve the redistribution of the burden of economic difficulties on that section of the population that has more and leads a richer life. We must continue to fight in an organized manner for the formulation and application of measures protecting the standard of living of those categories of the population that are in a more difficult position in this respect.

The LCY must launch the most persistent struggle for the swift elimination of social differences that are not based on the criteria of distribution according to work.

Nothing can justify the existing inefficiency in this respect. What we need is a much more efficient working class tax system and tax policy. A much more resolute struggle against corruption, speculatory ways of acquiring money, theft of social property, etc. is also indispensable.

Great unemployment is one of our gravest social and political problems. This is also an outstanding development problem because many young trained cadres who, with their knowledge and enthusiasm could contribute substantially to a speedier and more successful development of the country, are out of jobs. We have both material and other opportunities to resolve this problem more rapidly, but we do not make enough use of them. What we need are well-thought-out programs and specific actions. Such programs should encourage dynamic economic development, but also the discovery of more adequate systemic solutions and the adoption of the relevant economic policy measures. They should lay emphasis on the responsibility of the workers in disposing social resources, encourage the development of tertiary activities and more efficient investments, provide incentives for the accelerated development of economically insufficiently developed areas, increase agricultural production, and direct the savings of the population into production currents and the like.

We must deliberte and formulate more consisently and more efficiently the policy and the constitutional orientations about the work of citizens with their personally owned means. In order to achieve greater employment and the rational deployment of production forces, it is important to encourage the greater mobility of resources and workers, particularly those seeking jobs. Measures that aim to attract professional and highly trained cadres into underdeveloped areas must have the same purpose. The large reserves represented by capacities that are not used could be quickly turned to practical use by introducing work in several shifts, more intensive production cooperation, joint investments, and so. Promoting the entire way of life and work in the rural areas, raising the farm workers' specialized knowledge and the technical level of agricultural work, developing small-scale economic operations in the rural areas for the needs of the rural areas, developing agricultural cooperatives and village tourism, and creating conditions for farm workers' old age insurance and for the employment of agricultural workers -- all this should contribute to the development of agriculture and deceleration of the irrational exodus of the rural population, particularly the young.

Etatist-bureaucratic ideology and practice are undoubtedly today, in our present reality the greatest obstacle to the revolutionary development of our society on the basis of socialist self-management. In recent years, under conditions of economic crisis and of crisis tendencies in other societal spheres under the influence of intensified ideological and political offensives by the bourgeois right-wing forces in world dimensions and the exacerbated contradictions in the development of individual socialist countries, in our society and even in the LCY, there emerged to a greater extent than before ideotheoretical concepts that are an expression of the bourgeois-liberalist ideology. These two ideopolitical orientations are contrary to our Marxist and working class revolutionary orientation, beginning with the very idea of socialism, that is with the very strategy of socialist development. The critics of our understanding of socialism and of our socialist strategy negate the working class revolutionary character of socialist self-management development and the historical role of the working class as the motivating force of the revolution. From the bourgeois positions, with quasiscientific arguments, the expendiency and reality of our strategic aim of having the workers be the masters of expanded reproduction is being disputed. The dogmatic bureautic resistance to the social emancipation of the working class are manifested, among other things, in views that the normative institutional structure of the system already achieved on the whole automatically ensures this emancipation.

On the basis of such an ideological approach, social forces that are only now struggling to become society's leading forces are described as if they have already become that. Objective problems and obstacles along the path of realizing the system's intention -- that is to make the direct producer in material production also the one who adopts management decision -- are being ignored. What are lacking are the necessary theoretical and practical political analyses and work programs of the LCY and other subjective forces, by which these problems would be elucidated and ways of resolving them found.

In this time of cirsis, the ideas advocating a radical suppression of socialist principles, factors, and goals are also appearing in our country. The purpose of these ideas is, within the contradictior socialist processes to establish and strengthen relations and factors of capitalist society. Communism is being reduced to unattainable utopia, and at the same time the differences between socialism and capitalism are being increasingly played down. On the other hand, the proponents of etatist ideology in our country are attempting to restrict the scope of our revolution. They loudly advocate the development of social criticism, but at the same time they try to suppress and extinguish all efforts to develop the original Marxist criticism of various tendencies within socialism. This practice and ideology invalidate and betray the socialist democratic intentions and potential of our institutions, and at the same time involve persistent efforts to equate openly the bureaucratic-etatist distortion of practice with the system and ideas that inspired it and that are fundamental to it. In contrast to our ideas of the dialectic objective and subjective factors of social development in socialism, the views that one-sidedly interpret the role and significance of objective factors, while they brand all activites of subjective factors and their impact on economic trends as etatism or voluntarism, are very widespread. The 1974 Constitution and the law an associated labor are criticized because, by setting, in their words, utopian and unrealistic goals and objectives, they have allegedly curbed the role and significance of objective ecnonomic laws thus contributing to the socioeconomic crisis. According to the opinion of these critics of our system, it was necessary, first of all, to create material and objective conditions for achieving the historical goals of the communist movement, and only then think about how to struggle for these goals. As early as 1950, under exceptionally difficult conditions of external pressures, isolation, and economic backwardness, we have, by the adoption of the law on workers' self-management, committed ourselves to implementing one of the most important processes on the road to the construction of communist society, the process of the withering away of the state. Tito said on the occasion that even then we were too late and unless we took immediate measures to achieve it, "we would have to wait endlessly" for that to come.

The League of Communist consciously formulates its strategic documents in such a way as to maintain the vision and certain program committments and to make the general direction of development more clear, as well as the goals for which we are fighting and the criteria for solving numerous problems that arise at every stage of our development. The exponents of etatist-bureaucratic notions are ignoring precisely that programmatic element in the Constitution and other document, among other things, because this element alone, not bureaucratic routine and inertia, is the instrument for stimulating creative efforts in all spheres of life. This element calls for a social struggle in which it is necessary to be active and have clear orientations. The very concept of social ownership has come under a barrage of criticism. Attempts are made in various ways to show that not one of the forms of social ownership stimulates producers sufficiently toward high productivity, develops one's creative potentials, or builds up an adequately responsible attitude to work.

There is talk on how we should reconstruct our social property system in the direction of the so-called mixed economy. It is stressed that within socialism there should exist a greater number of independent methods of production whereby that which is based on social ownership does not have to have a dominant role. Suggestions are even being made the social ownership should develop in the direction of stock ownership.

There has also been increasing criticism of certain forms of social consumption such as health care, education, and housing. In contrast to these views, etatist-bureaucratic forces are either openly advocating state ownership or are declaring the existing social-ownership relations, which are still greatly burdened by the elements of state ownership, as being the realized form of social ownership, and are thus de facto favoring the side of the status quo. All this is also being helped by serious weaknesses in the realization of our constitutional concept of social ownership manifested in the form of state ownership monopolies and tendencies to group ownership.

Criticism of etatist and bureaucratic voluntarist domination of the economy also features the demand for the economy to be liberated from politics. The LC is struggling to free economic relations and economic policy from those relics of the etatist system that are, in any case, not in accordance with the Constitution, that is, with the concept of associated labor and the political system of socialist self-management. The LCY's standpoint is that this can be achieved in such a way as to ensure that the system of socialist self-management production relations develops so that workers in associated labor are put in direct control of the social means of reproduction, but in such a way as to guarantee that economic laws are respected and that the relatively most efficient and most rational results in production and economic development are attained.

Socialist self-management, as a production relationship, indeed has its own sociopolitical dimension. The LCY and other sociopolitical organizations and the state have a corresponding role in that system as an instrument in the hands of the working class organized in a self-managing way, which defends the interests of that class.

The LCY must perceive in good time such and similar contents of etatist-bureaucratic and bourgeois-liberalist ideology -- which are increasingly in evidence in society and in the LCY as well -- and must very clearly disassociate itself from them. It is essential that we study their social and class origins in our society, as well as their practical and political meaning. But, in order to squeeze out these orientations, we must, on the basis of Marxist theoretical researches and criticial reexamination of our now practice, develop the ideotheoretical bases of our own strategy, and develop that strategy itself, changing all the socialist social practice has rejected, on condition, of course, that our action works toward changing social practice itself.

Of those forces that are today operating in a counterrevolutionary manner, the most dangerous is nationalism, it is on the increase in all its forms in all our environments. Nationalism encompasses various spheres of our life from economic and political relations to relations in culture. and especially in historiography. The protagonists of nationalism invoke all forms of dissatisfaction, foster all the illusions and simplified views about the society and manipulate them. They skillfully use and, at the same time, encourage various negative tendencies, which are the consequence of the pressures of etatist relations, that is disintegrational tendencies and manifestations of the encapsulation and the fragmentation of our economy.

They favor those ideological deformations that reduce the equality of nations and nationalities to the equality of states and not the equality of people, producers, and citizens. The bourgeois right, as well as those sectors of etatist-bureaucratic forces that build their strength on international tensions and misunderstandings, seek and find a common language on the platform of nationalism. They are joined by clericonationalism as a form of abuse of religion for disseminating religious and national intolerance, creating suspicion and arousing hatred toward other nations and religions, especially among young believers.

The counterrevolutionary events in Kosovo demonstrated the entire reactionary nature and hostile content of nationalism brought to a state of incandescence.

We Communists must be in the front ranks of the struggle against nationalism. But this struggle must always be waged in a unified front by all socialist forces among all peoples and nationalities and everywhere in Yugoslavia.

The first condition for the successful struggle of socialist forces against all forms of nationalism is an uncompromising struggle against nationalism in our own environment.

Unfortunately, Communists have not always been consistent here. It is required of us that we be even more decisive in overcoming differing criteria in evaluating nationalism -- that we wage a more stubborn fight against the regionalization of the press and against the individuals and group that strive to draw individual associations and information media into their nationalist quarrels and tricks and involve them in intranational polemics and mutual "name calling", and which strive to assume the duty of overseeing nationalist manifestations in other environments while ignoring similar manifestations in their own environment.

It is impossible to overcome our current difficulties and to achieve our goals and tasks at this stage of the Yugoslav socialist revolution without the comprehensive, united commitment of all organized subjective forces with the LC at their head. The successful involvement of the LC depends to a great degree upon a change in its current position, which, in contradiction to its own program orientations and the requirements of the self-managing process, makes it an integral part of a structure that is in many respects etatist, and thereby necessarily makes it both mediator and arbiter in endless, mainly opportunistic and compromising coordination of partial interests that have come into conflict and that are often fabricated.

The abandoning of this position and the creative inclusion in reality of the "current moment" of our revolution implies the duty of the LC to replace its activity from positions of power and with the help of power, and to replace, not infrequently, the organs of power with the appropriate ideological and political activity among the working class, mass political and social organizations, and the institutions of the political system of socialist self-management. The LC therefore has the revolutionary duty to rid itself of collusion and bureaucratic partnership with the state organs, to overcome forum-type work on the part of leaderships, to develop and build its leaderships into genuine revolutionary headquarters oriented toward the broadest party and social grassroots, and capable of offering these grassroots real programs and of leading them to concrete actions instead of offering them papers and empty appeals. There is no alternative to the demand for the LC to be more completely rooted in the working class.

The reputation and influence of the LC has always been measured by the extent to which it has succeeded in taking root in the everyday reality of the working class, the extent to which it has expressed and realized the interests of the working class in its ideological and political activities and the extent to which it has guided social trends and encouraged revolutionnary changes. In this regard we take as our starting point the understanding that all creative forces in society that accelerate social development, all those who on the basis of their work contribution directly influence the development of production forces and whose work results are confirmed both in the domestic and world market are an integral part of the working class.

The more solid and complete working-class basis for the action and orientation of the LC is thus all the more pressing since in the working class and working masses there is great dissatisfaction with the present state of affairs in socioeconomic relations, the fall in living standards; the crisis trends in the economy; the intensification of social differences, which are not based on work and the results of work; and the phenomena of the privatization of social property and group-property tendencies. They are also dissatisfied with the inertia, wavering, and lack of unity of the LC, trade unions and other subjective forces in the struggle for the eradication of these phenomena and tendencies.

Only through comprehensive involvement in the working class and its active presence in socialist self-management processes can the LC realize the unity of its ideological leadership and involvement in carrying out concrete revolutionary tasks, and the mobilization out of their lethargy of the not inconsiderable part of its membership that in virtually no way plays a part in the realization and establishment of its policies.

The roots of the LC In the working class and the aspiration toward changes in the social-class composition of its members, which should guarantee the greater representation and more intensive participation of workers in all forms and content of its work, do not imply or tolerate any kind of regressive or sectarian approach to questions of social and political fundamentals of its revolutionary action. The orientation of the LC will have prospects and its action success only if it has sufficient space to affirm the creative potential and interests of workers, working peasantry, and intelligentsia, especially the young generation, and all social groups and strata that, in the given moment, constitute factors of progress. The LC's needs and aims can only be realized by those members who display ability and militancy, whose social position and awareness, motives and interests contain necessary elements and efforts needed in the struggle for realization of the ideas of socialism and humanism.

In order to strengthen its ranks in this respect the LC should continue even more intensively the process it has begun of democratizing the cadres policy, in which significant steps have been made recently, and should create conditions so that creative cadres reach positions within the LC and in society, who know and are willing to come to grips with the challenges of the accelerated development of the production forces and the scientific-technological revolution, who are capable of finding out the essence of all the elements and content of self-managing transformation, and to direct its course in a timely and active manner. The policy of recruitment into the LC ranks should be contained in the function of this demand.

The LC ranks should only be open for those who really understand and accept its revolutionary role and orientation and who are ready to fight for it.

Without serious results in the sphere of cadre policy and the admission policy, the LC will not be able to reorganize itself to a sufficient extent into the organization of creative forces in all the fields of social life, the forces which are capable of overcoming various burdens from the past, prejudices, and mutual lack of trust; of promoting self-managing social relations; of making fresh in-roads into realizing fresh production programs and technologies and in this way, of ensuring our equal participation in the international division of labor.

Our own experience has convinced us that democratic dialogue and all-party debate are the right and effective ways to both activate the membership and realize its right to participate in establishing the policy of the organization and also to step up the issue of its responsibility for the implementation of this policy. Only on this basis can the principle of democratic centralism, be reaffirmed in the real sense; it remains to be the sacred basis of the LC's internal relations, and only on this basis can phenomena and tendencies of federalization in its ranks be suppressed. Without the unhindered and free flow of information and initiatiaves from the grassroots to the top and vice-versa and without a climate in which its every member can manifest himself as a creative person, the LC will not overcome many of its internal difficulties, especially not those which concern the practice of different interpretations of and failure to realize the fundamental contents of attitudes toward its policy, the irresponsible behavior of low-ranking officials toward the decisions and stands of high-ranking organs; absence of regular democratic control, and the critical analysis of the work and behavior of its every member, organization and leadership. The democratization of relations in the LC is an essential factor in gathering and involving the most progressive social forces and the creative synthesis of all that arises in society as a result of scientific knowledge and practical experiences and in the function of the emancipation of labor and man.

The LC must, also in this phase of its revolutionary struggle, fulfill what Tito had always demanded of it: to be a united organization in an ideopolitical and action sense, not permitting any grouping or elements of ideopolitical neutralism and pluralism. Such unity can only be achieved in revolutionary action and by respecting its organizational prerequisite, that is, democratic centralism and a speedier and resolute emancipation of the LC from all the members who do not follow its course and who introduce and reproduce in its practice and the ideological sphere statist-bureaucratic and bourgeois-liberalist views and mentalities, opportunism, dogmatism, bureaucratic obstinacy, factionalism, nationalism, priviliges, and egotism. Opposing any apparent unity which could arise under the patronage of any alienated bureaucratic statist or centralist structure or on the basis of making anyone's partial interest absolute, the LC can and has to develop its unity only by patient and consistent ideopolitical work which aims to synthesize and reaffirm those actions and orientations of the membership which despite various concrete forms of manifesting themselves, lead toward the realization of the goals and tasks of our revolution.

The ability of the LC to reaffirm its ideopolitical orientations in practice essentially depends both on the behavior and moral suitability of each of its members;on the success of their work; their efforts and approach to work in self-managing organs and sociopolitical organizations; their attitude toward fellow-human beings, social ownership, and negative social phenomena; the extent to which they are ahead of others in tackling problems and tasks; and their self-sacrifice, principled behavior, and responsibility as an example to other people. Only those of high moral suitability whose words do not differ from their deeds and who by their work and behavior prove the possibility of the realization of a communist project for a new, humane, and democratic society, can count upon personal example and create a revolutionary vanguard. Communists must be ahead of others and sacrifice themselves more than anyone else in the struggle for a new society, but they must not lay claims upon any special rights or privileges in it.

The LC can strengthen its ranks in an organized way and become capable of realizing its vanguard role only in the process of social changes and subject to the degree and character of its influence on these changes. In order to be ready at any moment for mobilization and capable of being the first one in society and its own ranks to rapidly spot the factors of progress and regression and to be ready to carry out resolute action, the LC must raise to a higher level its entire ideopolitical work.

Only through well-developed theoretical work and ideological creativeness, through criticism based on scientific knowledge, which will be versed in the subject under criticism and which will not be afriad of the consequences, as well as through the contest of opinion which will not be fettered by the usage customary in monolithic practice and the rules of consensus can the LC acquire and maintain that level of knowledge and revolutionary consciousness which enables it to understand the essence and the contradictions of the present world events as well as the character and contents of the specific social problems and tasks which it directly faces. What the LC fully accepts is an ideology and theory which originate in the revolutionary critical attitude to be given social consciousness and which serve the further revolutionary historical process in Yugoslavia and the world. This means that the sources of its knowledge, in addition to its own experiences, should be scientific research, comprehension acquired by theoretical debates, as well as the workers' and people's direct experiences in their struggle for the development of socialist self-management. A higher level of consciousness and the ideological education of its membership represent the irreplaceable prerequisite for the successful recognition of the essential contents and meanings of etatist-bureaucratic, bourgeois, and other non-Marxist ideologies and theories and for the successful parting of ways with them, as well as for the further development of the communists' consciousness about their own social position, about the problems and contradictions of their own identity, and about the causes of the phenomenon of encumbrance with manifestations and tendencies of conservativism, dogmatism, and bureaucratism. This is also an irreplaceable prerequistite for the successful activity of communists in workers' councils, delegations, and assemblies in order to solve tasks that have been submitted by other bodies and organs.

Theoretical work and ideological struggle should unite and manifest the efforts of the LC with regard to further critical reexamination of our practice and our concepts, with regard to the further development of our strategy of socialist self-managing development and of changing in this strategy everything which has rejected the revolutionary experiences of the working class and its social and political protagonists with regard to efforts to seek a way out of the present crisis situation within the frameworks of real historical possibilities. A prerequisite for this is also the ability to introduce, in the positive understanding of the existing situation and relations, understanding for the need to substitute them with higher forms and qualities. This is the condition of the knowledge of how and in what dimensions our historical goals are present in what we have done and what we are doing today. To achieve this demand also implies the united involvement by basic organizations and leadership, political schools, Marxist centers, and party press, particularly in combatting superificiality formalism, and ideological lack of unity in the process of ideological training.

In the period between the 12th and 13th LCY Congresses the international situation has worsened. This negative development, which has become particularly manifest in the past few months, continues and threatens to turn into a deep crisis of international relations. Dangerous confrontations have continued, as well as the application of a policy of force; war and crisis hotbeds are multiplying in many parts of the world; rivalry by military-political blocs continue in military superiority and in spheres of influence.

The arms race has assumed frightening proportions: For the production of increasingly destructive arms about $1 trillion are now annually being spent. At the same time, the world scene continues to be characterized by a deep crisis of international economic relations and the increasingly difficult position of developing countries. Hunger and poverty represent a glaring reality of a great section of the world today.

The social development in the world and the trends in international relations in the period since the last congress were marked by complex contradiction. The continuation of confrontations between the forces fighting for deep changes of the present state of international relations, for peace and progress, for democratic and equitable cooperation between peoples and states, and of those forces which oppose this in their desire to halt the social progress and retain relations steeped in subordination, exploitation, and domination, continued. The process of the social and national emancipation, which are intertwined and mutually affect each other, have gripped the whole world. The development of socialism as a world process continues, and the circle of social and political subjects which fight in very varied conditions for social progress and socialism expands. Scientific-technological revolution and the achievements of the human mind open up prospects of further progress by mankind, and create conditions for a fuller satisfying of material and spiritual needs of the people and nations but there is great danger in international relations that they will also be used more and more for fresh forms of oppression and exploitation, for the production of dangerous arms, the use of which threatens the extermination of mankind.

The interdependence of all parts of today's world is growing, while at the same time, its manifold divisions are growing ever deeper. Although the historical process of decolonization is basically already completed, the pressures of neocolonialism are growing stronger, and new forms of dependence and subjugation are emerging. The increasingly profound abyss between the developed and developing countries is bringing into question the prospects for world development and represents the expression of the profound crisis of international economic relations.

The increasingly pronounced aspirations of peoples for peace and equal international cooperation, for a democratization of international political and economic relations -- the most consistent protagonist of which is the Nonaligned Movement -- are coming into confrontation with the policy of force, domination, and hegemonism. Acting as an independent, global, and independent factor in international relations, the movement and policy of nonalignment have affirmed themselves as a great political and moral force in the modern world, which through its struggle for peace, for democratization of international relations, and establishment of a New International Economic Order, is making a substantial contribution to progressive social development in the world.

The general picture of today's world shows that the dilemmas with which we are faced are universal in nature. The affect not only individual social classes, nations, and states, but also the entire world community. The chief question facing us is: How is the international community to confront, in an organized and successful manner, the chief sociopolitical problems of the present time, to ensure that the negative processes currently under way do not develop spontaneously, with unforeseeable and, a rule, negative and -- as may happen -- even catastrophic consquences?

How can it be brought about that the positive values based upon the achievements won in the struggle for a free and more humane life of man and peoples and for advancement of international cooperation are preserved in these processes?

In seeking an answer to this question, today, as ever, progressive social forces, parties, and movements have a special role and responsibility. Because we firmly believe that common decisions should be made on issues affecting the destiny of the world, our country and the LCY have, in the period which has elapsed, exerted great efforts to affirm those forms of multilateral agreement-making, cooperation, and decisionmaking -- such as the Nonaligned Movement, the United Nations, the Conference on European Security and Coopertion -- all of which have made the greatest contribution to the common struggle for peace and equal international cooperation. The international situation would have been far less favorable today had it not been for these forms of multilateral democratic gathering-together, decisionmaking, and action, which through their commitment, spread the ideas of equality, independence, cooperation, and mutual respect. It is therefore our profound conviction that there is no other way than seeking solutions to common problems in this manner, primarily through the United Nations.

The most important of all global problems today is without a doubt the struggle for peace and for the prevention of a nuclear war. The struggle for world peace and equal international cooperation has become the basic precondition for the progressive development of mankind, and of its very existence. We must constantly bear in mind the truth that the consequences of a nuclear war would be catastrophic for the entire human race. it is therefore a terrifying fact the continuation of the arms race -- with the development of space weaponry, which is advocated by the ruling circles and military industrial complex of the United States of America and some Western European countries -- threaten to get wholly out of control. We vigorously condemn that course and practice and decisively demand that measures be taken to halt the arms race, to ban nuclear weapns, and to start a process of general and total disarmament.

Our country and the LCY have for decades been tirelessly advocating general and comprehensive disarmament under international control; the liquidation of foreign military bases; the withdrawal of troops from foreign territories; a ban on nuclear tests; the creation of nuclear-free zones, and all the other measures which would lead toward lessening international tension; eliminating the war danger, and fear from nuclear annihilation. In this respect we recently put forward several constructive proposals and supported all positive initiatives of other countries and supported all positive initiatives of other countries and political forces leading to this. Like other peace-loving nations we welcome and support as renewed dialogue between the United States and the USSR, the countries with the strongest military potential and the main exponents of the arms race, hoping that they will open up prospects for renewed detente and lead to concrete agreements on halting the arms race. Unfortunately, this is not the case. But the opposite has happened. The U.S. Government even announced the revocation of SALT II, which can have unforeseeable negative consequences. We are deeply convinced that the international community should continue to encourage the continuation of negotiatons and thus increase their responsibility for peace in the world.

It is still necessary to have the broadest involvement of all peaceful progressive and democratic forces and the international public in the struggle against the danger of nuclear war and for peace and international cooperation based on the principles of active peaceful coexistence. It is indispenable to consolidate the activity of progressive political parties and movements and peaceful forces with the aim of developing awareness and public support for the policy of disarmament. It would be of great importance to achieve fundamental progress in this direction this year, which had been proclaimed the Year of Peace. It is not possible to develop lasting and stable peace without halting and overcoming a growing gap between the world's rich and poor, and without resolving the dramatic economic development problems of developing countries, such as the problems of food, debts, raw materials, transfer of technology, and so forth, which have arisen in the world from unequal international economic relations, exclusively subjected to the interests of developed countries.

For this reason it is indispensable to take urgent steps to resolve these problems which at the same time will contribute to efforts to create a new international economic system, based on the principles of equality, mutual benefits, just and stable conditions of international exchange, and the sovereign right of every nation to decide on its own natural resources. We are convinced that such a system of international economic relations would be in the interest of the entire international community, including the developing countries.

Today, the overindebtedness of developing countries is a priority political and economic problem of the modern world. It expresses a deep crisis in the functioning of the international monetary and financial system. In the interest of its progress and peace, mankind must find a speedier exit from these major difficulties. The debt problem cannot be resolved if, in the interest of settling the debts toward specific banks and developed countries-creditors, one hinders the development of overindebted countries. A just and lasting solution can only be found achieving an appropriate agreement between indebted countries and countries-creditors. This would imply writing off all the debts of the poorest countries, reducing interest rates, establishing new repayment deadlines, limiting repayments to a certain percentage of the foreign exchange earning of developing countries, and taking measures to encourage their development and exports. It is therefore necessary to convene a world conference on finance and money in order to carry out a radical reform of the IMF.

It is also indispensable to establish a new economic system in the sphere of information and cultural exchange, because the domination of development countries in this sphere threatens the cultural and national identity of developing countries and has a negative influence on international relations in general. The Nonaligned Movement produced a comprehensive platform on all these issues and offered a series of constructive proposals and ideas in order to resolve them. We are convinced that the coming conference in Harare will be a new step in resolving concrete tasks and overcoming serious economic problems of the modern world. What is now important, and what has been missing, is that developed countries should demonstrate the same degree of constructiveness, responsibility, and political will in order that necessary solutions be found. Unfortunately, an aspiration to avoid joint analysis of economic issues together with developing countries and to abandon the present privilged positions, still prevails. We therefore invite developed countries to show more realism and responsibility toward the attitudes and proposals of the nonaligned and developing countries.

We are sure that the forthcoming conference in Harare will have at the center of its attention these issues and concern for the successful development of the world community as a whole. So many crisis spots in various parts of the world constitute a dangerous and constant source of broader and even global conflicts, a threat to peace in the world. At the same time these conflicts are the cause and result of preventing progressive social trends in certain countries, negating the right to self-determination and stamping out the people's aspiration for freedom.

From that point of view it is seen that the struggle for progressive social transformations and socialism is inseparable from the struggle for peace and new international relations. The creation of the broadest social awareness of the existence of the principles of sovereignty, independence, territorial integrity, and the right to a free and independent development, the inviolability of borders and noninterfernce in international affairs, as well as the creation of an international atmosphere where any excuse to breach these principles is unacceptable; constitute one of the basic tasks of progressive forces.

Calling for the full realization of these principles and the creation of such a consciousness, the LCY and the SFRY will firmly follow Tito's sure foreign policy course, develop equal cooperation with all countries of the world, and more actively support progressive parties and movements of various orientations with a view to strengthening world peace and peacefully resolving all problems and disputes facing the world.

The framework of that course should be, above all, our constant and active involvement within the Nonaligned Movement in the global questions of peace, security, and development in the world and in actions and initiatives for resolving accumulated world problems, as well as our activity in the United Nations and other international forums and organizations. We will continue to press for the development with all countries of all-round relations, consistently respecting and applying the principles of the UN Charter, the final document of the Conference on Security and Cooperation in Europe in Helsinki, and all international and bilateral postwar agreements which we have signed and accepted. We also demand that all our partners adhere to these principles and agreements. The development of active and all-round relations on an equal footing with the great powers, regardless of the differences which exist between us; with the countries of Europe and the Mediterranean, to which we are linked by many joint tribulations and a common fate in this vital strategic area of international relations; is the SFRY's lasting orientation.

We are particularly interested in the stable and all-round development of relations with all neighboring countries. Even though we have inherited difficult historical experiences, we have firmly and lastingly applied the principle of good-neighborliness on the basis of strict respect for equality, independence, sovereignty, territorial integrity, the inviolability of borders and noninterference in internal affairs. In this regard, the equality of those individual peoples who are national minorities in neighboring countries should show understanding mutual cooperation, and friendship.

Any limitation of their basic national and human rights, especially the negation of their very existence, and the denial of the national identity of any nation can only make more difficult the development of good-neighborly relations and the establishment of an atmosphere of trust and stability in the Balkans and its transformation into an area of peace and all-round cooperation, free from nuclear weapons and bloc confrontation.

We are deeply interested in peace, stability, and cooperation in the Balkans. It is the commitment of all political factors in this area to help overcome the inherited burdens and confrontations, solve the outstanding problems, and promote international relations more vigorously.

We will continue making the necessary efforts to strengthen our bilateral cooperation with nonaligned and developing countries. We will especially strive to step up mutual economic exchange, scientific-technical cooperation, and strengthen relations of trust based on the identity of our joint interests which have become a rich tradition in our overall relations with many countries of Asia, the Middle East, Africa, Latin America and their liberation movements.

All democratic and social forces, irrespective of their political, ideological, and religious convictions, must make a contribution to the development of new democratic international economic and political relations. Never before has the world felt such a need for the involvement of overall creative potential and collective wisdom.

In all this, the greatest contribution is expected from socialist and other progressive forces, and from communist, socialist, social democratic, and other workers and national liberation parties and movements. The anticommunist, antisocialist ideology and propaganda of conservative right-wing parties was promoted to the level of state policy with their attacks both domestically and internationally on democratic institutions, as well as on the achievements of the working class' historic struggle, and on the people in general. This weighs heavily on international relations and poses a threat to peace in the world.

Of course, the challenge of the new technological revolution and the struggle for peace and social development in today's conditions place many new issues and dilemmas before all progressive social and political forces. Social progress has not yet been automatically ensured on this occasion either. It all depends on the ability of the democratic and social forces to provide adequate answers to these questions and provide a more convincing and feasible program of progressive social transformations. In our assessment, despite the not inconsiderable difficulties which they are confronting, today they are fulfilling their historic role and creative ability.

Significant processes of social reforms have been launched in the socialist countries. They testify to the ability of the leading forces of socialist awareness to critically reexamine their own practice and remove the existing shortcomings by strengthening the working class role as a condition to successful economic and social progress. Original experience of progressive social transformations and of the development of democratic relations in many countries of Africa, Asia, and Latin America are at work. The idea is affirmed and the tendency is manifested in the gradual overcoming of the historic division of the workers movement in the West European countries, and so is the need to build up a united strategy of the left-wing parties and of extended cooperation between them.

The circle of workers and other progressive movements which in one way or another accept the idea of self-management as the basis of their political strategy is spreading. In the relations between the workers and other progressive parties and movements, the democratic principles of independence, autonomy, noninterference, responsibility to their own working class and people, and mutual respect for the differences create by virtue of the difference of the conditions in which they operate, are increasingly being asserted. In so doing, more opportunities are available, and the need is also stronger for more intensive cooperation between progressive parties of different political orientation, for a deeper dialogue and better mutual understanding, and for a mutually useful exchange of experience. In the future the LCY will also pay the greatest possible attention to the quality and intensification of its international links and all-round cooperation on an qual footing with communist, socialist, social-democratic, and other workers, progressive, democratic, and liberation parties and movements. We are convinced that in this way too it will make its contribution to the struggle for peace, social progress, and socialism in the world.

The great force of Yugoslav society is standing face to face with the serious difficulties we confront today and with the objectives we must achive. We hae a clear vision of a free, sovereign, and nonaligned socialist self-management community of equal fraternal Yugoslav nations and nationalities who know where they are going and what they want.

We possess enormous untapped material reserves. We have an army totalling in the millions of self-managers, workers, agricultural workers, scientists, cultural, and other people involved in creative endeavors who unswervingly follow the LCY program and policy.

With their ability and readiness with the results of their work and creative endeavors, they help the development of the material and production forces, increase labor productivity and quickly pave the way for us to get out of economic and other difficulties, and to defend and further develop the achievements of our revolution along Tito's path of socialist self-management and firm brotherhood and unity. We have a social climate which is characterized by the mature awareness within the LCY and in our community that we can and must more speedily overcome the present difficulties. The communists and the working people of all our nations and nationalities, with their preparations for this congress, have confirmed their resolve to strengthen the self-management unity of the economy, science and culture, and our system and our society as a whole, so that the period between this and the next congress may become a period of new strong breakthroughs of socialist self-management into our relations and our life and work. These breakthroughs will increase the initiative and the hard work of our working masses to an unmatched extent.

The creative potentials of our system and of our community are such that by using them optimally, the contradictions and the trials we are now experiencing can be overcome, and all the essential tasks of this phase of our revolution can successfully be carried out. Both ideologically and politically the LCY can measure up to this challenge.

I hope I am expressing the sentiments of all the participants in the 13th Congress and of the LCY as a whole when I say: We are going to win this big battle too, the president of the LCY Central Committee Presidium said in conclusion.

Belovski Welcomes Delegations

Speakers Address Defense Commission

LD261325 Belgrade TANJUG Domestic Service in Serbo-Croation 0920 GMT 26 Jun 86

[Excerpts] Belgrade, 26 Jun (TANJUG) -- Our all-people's defense and social self-protection concept can provide successful answers to all the challenges and dangers threatening our security and independence, stressed Branko Mamula [federal secretary of national defense] who was the first person to take the floor in the discussion today in the commission for all-people's defense and social self-protection. Speaking on the military-political situation in the world, he stressed that all the dangers and possible forms of application of military force against our country were studied comprehensively and adequate answers sought within the framework of the all-people's defense concept.

The fundamental values of our revolution and our socialist self-management construction are no doubt the premise on which our defense must be based. They are the integrity of our country; brotherhood, unity, and equality; the sociopolitical and the socioeconomic system of socialist self-management; and our independent foreign policy. Branko Mamula stressed that the Armed Forces were outside the inter-republican-provincial debates, keeping away from nationalism which could exercise and organize a significant influence, and from all forms of sociopolitically unacceptable conduct. However, LCY organizations in the JNA [Yugoslav People's Army] and the leading Army cadre feel in full measure all the difficulties implicit in keeping the purity of the Army.

We consider, stressed Branko Mamula, some attempts to deny the Army the right as a social factor to be on par with all other forces of our society and participate in the quest to devise paths to extricate ourselves from the crisis; to be harmful, socially and politically unacceptable. The JNA grew from the national liberation, the revolutionary movement, and war conducted to liberate the country and establish a new Yugoslav socialist and social community. Only by always being the center of revolutionary processes, neither separated from society nor shut off from it, can the JNA be and remain the backbone of our all-people's defense protecting our society, defending the country, and keeping its deep-rooted people's and progressive character.

Unfortunately, there is a great deal of naivety and misunderstanding about our defense, the role of the Armed Forces in general, and the JNA in our society in particular. This is skillfully taken advantage of by various enemy forces in pursuit of their antisocialist and antiself-management activity. Let us take the example of the so-called "peace movement," the demands to stop arming ourselves, and the demands that the so-called "military service as a civilian" be introduced; not to mention the views and demands designed for all intentional purposes to wreck the unity of our Armed Forces.

This includes the so-called thesis about national armies and the thesis that the JNA presents a brake on the socialization of the defense business. In an independent and nonaligned country such as ours one can quite justifiably ask the question as to the purpose of the internal "peace movement," particularly if this movement surfaces and waxes strong in the conditions of intensified threat to Yugoslavia's security. "The peace movement" surfacing in our country could be in the direct service of the implementation of the interests of those external and internal forces who are bothered by our Yugoslavia and who wish to threaten our security and independence.

Mamula went on to stress that he saw no possibility of our all-people's defense and social self-protection concept, such as that formulated by Tito, in our lasting orientation. For all intentional purposes -- he stressed -- this means that we will resolutely work for the maintenance of all its social requirements without which, in fact, this concept would not exist.

Speaking on the issues pertaining to the further build-up of our Armed Forces, Mamula drew attention to certain misconceptions as to the role of our territorial defense, although our orientations are very clear -- each of the two component parts of our Armed Forces, both the JNA and territorial defense, has its place and role to play in our armed struggle doctrine, which is a united doctrine.

The moral-political situation in our Armed Forces as a whole has been preserved; we have not had any problems shaking the JNA and creating difficulties for our society, said Branko Mamula. We could say the opposite, that with our activities and overall state of relations we in the JNA have contributed to the sociopolitical stability of our country, which is what we did during any previous period and during this latest one which in many respects was exceptionally difficult. Our assessment has been that only a clear and absolutely irreplaceable spirit of Yugoslavia can be our line with the Armed Forces of all the nations and nationalities of Yugoslavia. I must say that along that line we have been and we continue to be exposed to sharp attacks and it seems to us that these attacks were increasingly conspicuous preceeding the 13th LCY Congress. Implicit in all these attacks is the attempt to prove that because some other factors of the cohesion of our society have weakened we have become a serious threat to usurp social authority and in the final analysis to impose ourselves on others. It is not difficult to guess from which internal and external forces these ideas originate or the perfidious nature of such a message, stressed Branko Mamula.

Slavko Sorsak stressed that ideas have been expressed recently which do not coincide with, or are opposed to the LCY program, and that we are increasingly and frequently witnesses to differing views in many areas. Controversial ideas are proposed that encroach on the basic principles of all-people's defense and social self-protection.

Seen as a whole, Sorsak stressed, the socialization of this sphere is positive. We have an increasing number of nonArmy cadres who are involved with this problem and it is thus not surprising that new ideas are being proposed. In the case of Slovenia, new alternative groups are also increasingly concerning themselves with the problems of all-people's defense -- ecologists, pacifists, feminists and so forth. Here certain ideas are also being proposed which cannot be entirely accepted, or cannot be accepted at all.

Here, however, we must distinguish hostile stands from those that are well-intentioned.

Theories relating to the Army have been well-intentioned, Sorsak said, and have not had a hostile character. Their authors were not fully aware of the ideological values of such views, but I consider that this is no reason for replying to them with repression. We must defeat them in an argued manner; and we have done this when the theories that we do not need the Army, or that the concept of all-people's defense of some other countries is better than ours were proposed within the pacifist movement.

I wish to stress, Sorsak said, that some of the ideas of the Slovene youth are wrongly interpreted by the Yugoslav public. For example, the demand that signs in Slovene barracks should be in Slovene, and those in barracks in Macedonia in Macedonian, are proclaimed as nationalistic, but that is not the case. Thus, the wrong impression is created that public opinion in Slovenia is against the accepted concept of all-people's defense. We must be prepared to accept different views in this area because there is no reason why we should not also accept the view that nothing is so sacred that it cannot be superseded.

Franc Krajnik spoke of the need for improving and modernizing the system of telecommunication links in the country, noting that this is an important factor in defense capability both in peacetime and in the event of war.

Speaking about national relations in Bosnia-Hercegovina, Dusko Zgonjanin stressed that the working people of this republic are very sensitive to phenomena of nationalism, and that all declarations from unacceptable positions are very firmly branded as such. Enemies of various hues attack us unscrupulously, count our numbers and attempt to divide us but will certainly not succeed. Thus, some say that Serbian and Croatians are moving away from this republic under pressure from Muslims, while Muslim nationalists, on the other hand, disseminate the idea that Muslims are persecuted in Yugoslavia. Virtually any natural migration is attributable to duress, Zgonjanin said, advocating more positive action by the LC.

Dane Petkovski stressed the great importance of the information media in strengthening all-people's defense and social self-protection. Two thousand papers in the country write about this topic among others, and about 5,000 articles are written on the subject each year. The information media have performed their tasks in this sphere honorably and honestly, Petrovski said.

2d Day Defense Session Held

LD271422 Belgrade TANJUG Domestic Service in Serbo-Croatian 0953 GMT 27 Jun 86

When it comes to preventing attacks on social ownership the system of self-protection does not yield the expected results, according to Petar Paljkovljevic, first participant in this morning's discussion in the commission for all-people's defense and social self-protection. Having said that different measurements were used to measure some phenomena of antisocialist and anti-self-managing behavior, he outlined as a priority task the standardization of criteria in all the environments.

Stressing that between the two congresses the organs of internal affairs successfully carried out their part of the duty within the framework of the system of social self-protection, Milutin Marinkovic recalled that they could realize their role only with the assistance of the other subjects of this system.

He illustrated this by producing statistics which showed that about 4,000 people died in fires and road accidents, about 50,000 were lightly or seriously injured, while material damage caused by explosions, fires, road accidents, and economic crime amounted to more than 128.5 billion dinars. He added that in 1985 a total of 610 criminal charges were brought against political offenders, that is, between 0.2-0.4 percent of the total number of charges, refuting claims by certain circles abroad and individuals in the country that the freedoms and rights of citizens in Yugoslavia are restricted.

After the 12th LCY Congress socialist forces in the Socialist Autonomous Province of Kosovo waged a broad struggle to preserve the gains of the revolution, to break up counterrevolutionary activity from positions of Albanian irredentism and nationalism, and to oppose other aspects of hostile activity in the province, said Rahman Morina. However, despite this broad activity, there are still instances of illegal activity of irredentists whose aim is to break up Yugoslavia, to encourage the emigration of the Serbians and Montenegrins, and to create an ethnically pure Kosovo. There are various commentaries on measures taken against irredentists -- they are assessed as either too severe or too mild. Morina said the measures taken were adequate, because all those who attack the foundations of our social system must bear the full force of the law.

The emigration of Serbians and Montenegrins under duress was seen by Morina as the most serious consequence of hostile activity, because it has led to the cooling of international relations in Kosovo. It is high time, he noted, to deal with this problem in a more concrete fashion, because we cannot be satisfied with the results achieved so far in halting emigratin.

Winding up his speech, Morina said that there are some environments in which a lack of trust is being expressed in overall measures taken in order to stabilize the situation in the province. This lack of trust, as he put it, should be overcome, because it has negative consequences for the ideological and action unity of communists.

The LC and other progressive forces of Kosovo need support, he added, because apart from the struggle againt the exponents of Albanian irredentism and nationalism, we must also oppose the exponents of other types of nationalism. It should no longer happen that someone, whose work reflects ideological deviations, gets a better post or function, as has been the case in Kosovo as well as in other environments.

In Savka Djakovic's opinion, the conclusions of the SFRY Presidency and the LCY Central Committee Presidium on Kosovo should be passed, together with adopting the political platform of the LCY on Kosovo. According to her, although about 4,000 members of illegal organizations have been arrested in the province, they did not form an educational system or change the names of streets and schools or import Albanian text books into the country or use the Albanian flag. This was done, she added, by the party and state leaderships in Kosovo whose work was therefore quite "legal". Because of such activities, which caused the counterrevolution in 1981, many from the Provincial Committee, the Presidium, the Executive Council, or the leadership of other sociopolitical organizations of Kosovo avoided criticism and were not called to account legally, politically, or in any other way although there was sufficient ground for this. One gets the impression that some people enjoy privileges and protection, said Savka Djakovic, and this is basically an aid to counterrevolution and separatism. Those who advocate separation from Yugoslavia must not be protected, because while this is done there will be no end to the counterrevolution, illegal organizations will flourish, and the conclusions of the Presidency and the Presidium will be called into question.

We expect that the consistent implementation of this document, she concluded, will put an end to the counterrevolution and the activity of irredentists in Kosovo, so that 1981 is never again repeated and in order that brotherhood and unity should reign.

Speaking about attacks on the Yugoslav People's Army, which have not been infrequent in recent time, Tihomir Vilovic recalled the attitude of Comrade Tito at the meeting in Karadjordjevo in 1979, when our supreme commander explicitly demanded that we should preserve and consolidate the Army, in order to be ready at any moment to oppose any kind of pressure. There were such pressures in the past 6 years and there are certainly going to be others in the future. However, some communists seem to try and do completely the opposite, Vilovic said.

The time has come to call things by their real names. When I say that, Vilovic stressed, I also have in mind theses which are infiltrated about the Army and commentaries in some of the press which greeted them as "fresh winds". Can we allow the Yugoslav People's Army to be identified with imperalist and conquering armies and also the demand voices at the youth congress for soliders to throw away their guns and leave their generals in order to become their own commanders?

Lojze Briski said he does not agree with the view that Slavko Sorsak tried to minimize the problems in question. He pointed out the causes of such ideas and behavior of a minority of Slovene youth and saids that some theses from the youth congress should not be over-exaggerated, particularly the fictitious ones.

Dragisa Drljevic, Hisen Hisenaj, and Zivojin Jovic also took part in the discussion.

After exhuastive discussion, Semeon Buncic submitted a report on the commission's work. Several amendments to this report were submitted and therefore the proposed document will need to be altered. The final report should be adopted tomorrow morning, before the plenary session of the congress.

Delegates also requested that more attention should be devoted to the integrational role of the Yugoslav People's Army, a resolute struggle of the LCY for the unity of the country, and the settling of accounts with opportunism in the party and society.

27 June Proceedings

LD271220 Belgrade TANJUG in English 1123 GMT 27 Jun 86

["Pool" item]

[Text] Belgrade, June 27 (TANJUG) -- The 13th League of Communists of Yugoslavia Congress, now in its third day, has made it clear that the development of socialist self-management on which Yugoslavia has based its economic and social system for almost 40 years, remains the two-million-member organization's main line of activity.

Yugoslav communists see self-management the way to ensure the unity of this multinational country, and the common interests of workers in overcoming the present economic crisis.

The six commissions of the congress, which started work on Wednesday, were scheduled to close their debates at around noon today. However, the commission for socio-economic development, in whose work almost one third of the 1,740 delegates are participating, will resume after a brief plenary session this afternoon so as to formulate the planned documents by tomorrow.

This party congress is the ninth since the country's liberation in 1945 and the second to be held without Josip Broz Tito who led the party from 1937 to his death in 1980.

Both the introductory report and the debates emphasized the determinaton to follow Tito's path, both in internal development and in fundamental premises of the foreign policy he laid out — independence and nonalignment.

The fact that the 13th Congress is being attended by representatives of 113 parties and movements from around the world is confirmation of the independent foreign policy of both Yugoslavia and its party. The congress closes tomorrow when the results of this evening's elections for top bodies will be announced. The new Central Committee of 165 members will elect the 22-member Presidency and its president tomorrow.

Zarkovic Chairs 27 June Session

AU271706 Belgrade Domestic Service in Serbo-Croatian 1300 GMT 27 Jun 86

[Excerpts] The second plenary session of the 13th LCY Congress concluded about 30 minutes ago. Vidoje Zarkovic, president of the LCY Central Committee Presidium, who chaired the plenary session, first recalled that it is 27 June today, Self-Managers Day, and then said:

[Begin recording] Our working people and citizens expect that the 13th LCY Congress, proceeding from the experiences gained in the development of the socialist self-management, will provide answers to questions concerning the further development of our society, which should be faster and more successful. I therefore propose [applause]...[Zarkovic repeats himself] I therefore propose that we continue the further work of the congress in this spirit. [end recording]

Further in the session the delegates of the 13th LCY Congress adopted the report on the work of the LCY organs between this congress and the preceding congress, and then embarked upon electing a new leadership. The results of the voting will be announced tomorrow at the third plenary session.

At the second plenary session, Vidoje Zarkovic, president of the LCY Central Committee Presidium, spoke on the 36th anniversary of Self-Managers Day. He then greeted the representatives of the parties and movements that arrived during the sitting of the 13th LCY Congress. He informed the congress about the greetings and letters which have been received from the organizations, working people, and citizens from the country and from abroad.

Having noted that the discussions in the commissions fully accepted the positions of the report by the president of the Presidium and the reports of the LCY organs, President Vidoje Zarkovic proposed to the congress to adopt the reports on the activites of the LCY and the work of the Central Committee, the Commission for Statute Questions, and the Control Commission since the last congress.

The delegates adopted the reports unanimously and approved the work of the Central Committee and the two commissions, and voted that these be relieved.

From the second plenary session, let us first hear the words of remembrance which Vidoje Zarkovic spoke on the occasion of Self-Managers Day:

[Begin Zarkovic recording] In the past 36 years, despite all the difficulties and contradictions, socialist self-management stood the test of the challenges of the time. In our practice, socialist self-management has been confirmed as an irreplaceable factor of our social and economic development and of a democratic solving of social contradictions and problems.

It became an inalienable achievement of the workers class and all the working people of and peoples nationalities. Thanks to the development of our socioeconomic and political system on the foundations of social self-management, regardless of all the difficulties and shortcomings, the socioeconomic position of the workers class in our country has been radically changed.

By all yardsticks, this period was the most fruitful in the entire history of the Yugoslav people and nationalities. [end recording]

Ali Sukrija, president of the Commission for the Election of New LCY Organs, further during the session explained the details connected with the procedure of election and voting, both up to now and in that part of the procedure which the delegates of the 13th congress are to carry out. In this connection he stressed:

[Begin recording] The reports of the central committees of the LC's of the republics, the LC provincial committees, and the Committee of the LCY Organization in the Yugoslav People's Army stress that the entire election activities for the election of candidates for members of the LCY organs were conducted fully in an open and democratic atmosphere and with an active participation of the widest party rank-and-file. [end recording]

In the nomination and election procedure, a large number of candidates were proposed for LCY organs, and the central committees of the republics, the provincial committees, and the Committee of the LCY in the Yugoslav People's Army were mutually consulted about these candidates in a democratic procedure. Of course, the rank-and-file also said their word about the candidates. The candidates for the new LCY organs, Sukrija went on to say, are much younger, and the class-social and the gender structures have also been improved. For instance, 35 percent of the candidates are between 35 and 50 years of age. About 30 percent of the candidates are direct production workers. As many as 127 candidates are new persons, and some 40 are from the present organs. The new LCY Central Committee will have 156 members.

Sukrija also explained some details of protocol connected with the voting for new organ members. The delegates then began voting, and in a few minutes the commissions which still have to conclude their work will meet in congress halls. Some of them will work all afternoon, for there are still some delegates who wish to speak in commissions.

The third plenary session of the 13th LCY Congress has been convened for tomorrow morning.

Closing Session 28 June

AU281704 [Editorial Report] Belgrade Domestic Service in Serbo-Croatian at 0630 GMT on 28 June carries jointly with other Yugoslav radio stations the live relay of the plenary session on the last day of the 13th LCY Congress at the Sava Center in Belgrade.

Radisa Gacic, chairman of the plenary session, opens the session by saying: "Comrades, I am opening the third plenary session of the 13th LCY Congress. Let me greet most warmly the representatives of parties and movements who arrived at the 13th LCY Congress during its work. I am greeting the representative of the Democratic Party of Senegal, Diek Endiak, Politburo member."

After applause, Gacic lists movements and parties which sent messages during the congress: "Mariam Haile Mengistu, president of the Republic of Ethiopia [applause]; Ivory Coast President Felix Boigny [applause]; Kenenth Kaunda, president of the Republic of Zambia [long applause]; Arturo Delvalle, president of the Republic of Panama [applause]; the Tupak Revolutionary Movement from Bolivia [applause]; the Sudanese Communist Party [applause]; the Free Bolivia Revolutionary Movement of the Left [applause]; the Socialist Party of Bolivia [applause]."

Radisa Gacic then says that Cvijetin Mijatovic will speak about revolutionary Djuro Djakovic on the occasion of the 100th anniversary of Djakovic's birth. Mijatovic takes the floor at 0633 GMT and speaks for 24 minutes about Djuro Djakovic's life and his role in the history of the Communist Party of Yugoslavia.

After Mijatovic concludes his speech, Chairman Radisa Gacic asks Ali Sukrija, president of the Commission for the Election of the LCY Organs, to announce the results of the elections of the members of the LCY Central Committee, the Commission for Statute Questions of the LCY, and the LCY Control Commission, which were held yesterday.

At 0658 GMT, Sukrija reports that the Election Commission noted that the elections had been carried out in conformity with the 13th LCY Congress rules of procedure and that out of the 1,715 delegates and members of the LCY organs entitled to vote, 1,694 had voted; 21 delegates, or 1.23 percent, failed to vote. Sukrija reads the names of the elected members of the LCY Central Committee and the two commissions, with the number of votes each received. Sukrija adds that 14 additional names were written in on the ballots for Central Committee members, of which 2 got 2 votes each and 12 got 1 vote each. He does not name them.

Chairman Gacic calls for the reports of the six congress commissons in which discussions were held on previous days. At 0716 GMT Stefan Korosec reports on the Commission for the Development of Socialist Self-Managing Socioeconomic Relations and Economic and Scientific-Technological Development; at 0748 GMT Ivan Brigic reports on the Commission for the Development of the Political System of Socialist Self-Management; and at 0813 GMT Jakov Lazaroski reports on the Commission for the Ideopolitical, Organizational, Action, and Cadre Building and Activities of the LCY and for the Statute Questions.

After each of these reports, Gacic asks if anybody wants to speak. Nobody asks for the floor, and each report is, in turn, adopted without any votes against.

At 0838 GMT, Chairman Gacic grants a break, and reopens the session at 0920 GMT. More reports by commissions are submitted and adopted. At 0921 GMT, Silvija Zugic-Rijavec submits the report on the Commission for Ideological Questions of Education, Upbringing, Science, and Culture. At 0948 GMT, Stanislav Stojanovic submits the report on the Commission for Questions of International Cooperation of the LCY and the Foreign Policy of Yugoslavia; and at 1007 GMT the congress, at the proposal of the commission, considers a statement on the situation in southern Africa.

Gacic says: "You see from the draft statement which has been distributed that it is a matter of expressing solidarity and unreserved support for the struggle of the peoples of South Africa for the abolition of the apartheid regime, the elimination of colonialism, and for freedom and equality of the peoples of this region." After applause and no dissenting votes, Gacic declares that the congress has adopted the statement.

At 1009 GMT, Simeon Buncic submits the report on the Commission for Questions of All-People's Defense and Social Self-Protection. Like the previous reports of the congress commissions, this report is adopted without a vote against and with no one asking to speak on it.

At 1030, Pal Benak submits the report of the Commission for Proposals and Petitions, which again is adopted without any discussion and without a vote against. Gacic then closes the session at 1046 GMT.

The fourth plenary session of the 13th LCY Congress opens at 1126 GMT with Milanko Renovica in the chair. He calls on Milan Kucan to submit his report on the resolutions proposed to the congress, which had been distributed to the delegates. After Kucan speaks Renovica puts the nine resolutions, one after another, to a vote. Nobody asks for the floor and each resolution is adopted unanimously.

At 1207 GMT, Jure Bilic reports on the amendments to the LCY Statute. Following his speech, chairman Renovica asks if anybody wants to speak. Danica Milosavljevic says she wants to raise "a question which is very important. It refers to Article 2 of General Principles, where it says that LCY members and their leagues in the republics and provinces are united in the LCY. An amemdment has been proposed, but it has not been adopted."

She says that the wording suggests that "the basic idea of the LCY is federalistic, which historically is absolutely untrue for the LCY has never united from parts. The LCY was formed in 1952 at the Sixth Congress and adopted the name of LC because the Communist Party, analyzing its role in the conditions of the development of workers self-management, found that it should be the leading force of the workers class, within the class rather than above the class; therefore it adopted Marx's name, the name of Marx's League of Communists." Milosavljevic then states that the Communist Party of Yugoslavia was formed in 1919 as a united party.

"Considering that the public discussion decided, as if by a plebiscite, against federalization and a federal spirit in the LCY," Milosavljevic proposes that the passage be deleted.

The next to ask for the floor is Djuro Bilbija, who welcomes the democratization of the cadre policy that the Central Committee is to propose to the next LCY congress, as Bilic said. He refers to Article 42 of the Statute, which in Section 3 states that "the electoral body decides on the number of candidates for election to LC organs," while an amendment proposed would add the phrase "which as a rule is larger than the number of candidates to be elected."

Bilbija suggests that this is opposed to the position adopted at the 16th LCY Central Committee session which imposed the obligation to have more candidates than posts to which they are to be elected, without the qualification implied in the phrase "as a rule." Bilbija says that the amendment proposed "unfortunately does not enhance the principle but opens the door to an extremely wide avoidance of the principle." He therefore proposes that "the esssence of the 16th plenum position be built into the text of the Statute."

Bilbija says: "I think that without a clear, resolute position on several candidates for all the offices, without any exception, including the exceptions allowed by this as a rule, we shall miss the opportunity to democratize the cadre policy to such an extent that the LC may be the decisive factor of democratization of the situation and relations in society as a whole." Some applause is heard from the hall at these words.

Bilbija says that the elections in the LC of Croatia have shown that even when several candidates are proposed, the proper national composition of the bodies need not be jeopardized. The example of Bosnia-Hercegovina strengthens his argument. He also thinks that if an underdeveloped commune lacks the number of cadres need for several candidates for each post, one should not, for the sake of such a commune, adopt a principle that is "harmful for Yugoslavia or the LCY."

Chairman Renovica interrupts and asks for the wording of his amendment, but Bilbija continues to wonder aloud how the old Central Committee members and the delegates from Croatia will vote on this point.

Another delegate asks for the floor at 1247 GMT: "My name is Milois Provic and I will be brief. I ask that the congress adopt amendments connected with party membership fees so that the party membership fee will be uniform in the LC and that we do not entrust this to the Central Committee but to this congress, so the fee will be uniform. Thank you." Applause and murmurs follow.

Chairman Renovica sums up the amendments proposed, which he says refer to Article 2, Article 42, and Article 140 of the Statute. He asks Jure Bilic to comment on behalf of the commission.

Bilic says that these amendments were expected. As to the first amendment, he says that the commission proposed that the preamble of the Statute be amended at the next congress to contain a historical outline of the formation of the party. "In this way we would avoid all the misunderstandings that may arise from Article 2 and the term united. There is no sense in my advancing views countering the comrade while in front of the congress. We would resolve this quandary in this way."

Renovica questions Bilic about his position on the amendment and Bilic says he stands by the original proposal. "All right, let us go on. Explain now," Renovica urges. Bilic continues to say that the amendment is not acceptable.

"All right. You heard the opinion on the first amendment. Please, Jure, go on," Renovica says. Bilic says that a vote should be taken. Renovica puts the Milosavljevic amendment to a vote and declares it to be rejected, which is accompanied by applause.

Bilic then talks about the amendment concerning several candidates for each post, says that the 16th LCY Central Committee adopted a position on this, and adds: "I suppose that matters will be more difficult in this respect, but we have been talking about it for a year." He says that the congresses of Croatia and Montenegro and the Yugoslav People's Army conference had several candidates to start with. "One could not say not that a congress with several candidates or a congress that decided to propose as many candidates as there were to be elected is more or less democratic. It is the will of these delegates and consciousness was greater here than there."

Bilic says that it was left to the republican congresses and conferences to decide, "for positions differed in the preceding discussions.

"We had 10,000 registered discussions in connection with the 13th Central Committee session. Some comrades made an analysis of the proposals made and this question of several candidates was not dominant, as it was presented to the public. Comrade Kucan said that the question of public opinion is also the question of the one who creates this public opinion.

"Therefore, leaving the matter to the republican and provincial conferences and LC's, we believed that the LCY is carrying out its duty following its precept of several candidates; for various reasons, as well as some national reasons, we leave it to the committees and the congresses to explain it to their members and to their delegates. We therefore adopted the position that we keep to as a rule. I am talking about the position of the majority. How I would decide is another question, but it serves no purpose to state it. The majority, the majority was in favor, and the congresses and the conferences that were held showed that the majority is in favor of this position." Bilic says that leaving it to the republics and provinces is also democratic, his remark is greeted with applause.

Renovica says: "This means that the commission insists on its position and does not accept the amendment." He then puts the Bilbija amendment to a vote.

An indistinct voice is heard from the floor and Renovica asks whether it is another explanation of another amendment. "There is no need for it," he says. "We have heard the amendment and we have heard your explanation. Does the congress agree that we hear it again?" A chorus of "no" is heard from the hall. Renovica asks for the vote and declares that the majority is against the amendment.

He then asks Bilic to explain the commission view on the Perovic amendment. Bilic says that the question of the party membership fee was discussed and that the positions of the LC of Serbia and of Macedonia, "if I am not wrong," were taken into consideration. It was decided that the Central Committee should deal with this problem. Bilic explains that personal incomes differ in the ratio of 6 to 1 from one republic to another and that this affects the membership fees.

Renovica notes that the commission stands by its proposal, puts the Perovic amendment to a vote, and says the chair thinks the majority is against. "Should we have a count of votes?" he asks and is answered by a chorus of "no" from the hall. He declares the amendment has been rejected.

Snezana Pesic asks for the floor at 1304 GMT. She refers to the 15th amendment proposed by the Statute Commission, which would delete the word "more" in Article 40, Section 4. She explains that this refers to nominations for party posts, in which "more young people and women" should be represented. "This means that more would be deleted from this more young people and women; how would this then sound?"

Bilic says: "I propose that this more be left in." Laughter is heard, then applause.

Renovica says that the commission has accepted this amendment, and when nobody else asks for the floor, he puts the statute amendments as proposed by the commission to a vote. He declares that the statute is adopted with two votes against.

At 1307 GMT, Renovica makes his concluding speech and closes the congress at 1326 GMT. A choir sings "Comrade Tito, We Swear to Thee," and the relay ends.

CEMA MEETING ON NUCLEAR POWER BEGINS IN BERLIN

LD242340 Warsaw Television Service in Polish 1730 GMT 24 Jun 86

[Excerpt] A meeting of the inter-governmental commission for coordination of cooperation of the CEMA states and Yugoslavia in production and supply of equipment for nuclear power stations has commenced in Berlin.

Stoph Meets Delegation Heads

AU301236 East Berlin NEUES DEUTSCHLAND in German 25 Jun 86 p 6

[Text] Berlin (ADN) -- On Tuesday [24 June] Willi Stoph, GDR Council of Ministers chairman, received the delegation heads of the multilateral CEMA government commission for nuclear power plant equipment who are staying in Berlin on the occasion of their 14th meeting.

Willi Stoph discussed fundamental tasks for continuing the tested course of the unity of economic and social policy in the GDR that was adopted by the 11th SED Congress. The ever more efficient linking of the advantages of socialism with the achievements of the scientific-technological revolution and the achievement of top performances in science, technology, and production are decisive prerequisites for guaranteeing further dynamic economic growth. In the talk he referred to the great efforts to develop and use key technologies in the national economy and to the close cooperation between combines and research institutions of the GDR and the partner institutions in the USSR and the other countries of CEMA in this field. He stated that the most economical, most efficient use of all energy resources, raw materials, and fuels, as well as the constant improvement of the basic and advanced education of those working in research, development, and production are essential factors for further increase in performance.

Willi Stoph stressed that, in the peaceful use of nuclear energy, the GDR is guided by the highest safety demands in line with the advanced international standard. He expressed full agreement with the proposals of the CPSU Central Committee general secretary, Mikhail Gorbachev, for increased international cooperation, in particular regarding an increase in technical safety.

The chairman of the commission, Ivan Silayev, deputy chairman of the USSR Council of Ministers, reported on the commission's work to meet the demand for equipment and facilities on the basis of international specialization of production and cooperation (in production), and through cooperation in research. The participants at the meeting unanimously expressed the need for close international cooperation in the peaceful use of nuclear energy. They supported the initiatives taken by the IAEA board of governors.

The meeting, that took place in a friendly atmosphere and was marked by the spirit of fraternal cooperation, was attended by Guenther Kleiber, deputy chairman of the Council of Ministers and permanent representative of the GDR to CEMA, as well as by the members of the multilateral government commission A. Lukanov, deputy chairman of the Council of Ministers of the People's Republic of Bulgaria; L. Kapolyi, minister of industry of the Hungarian People's Republic; W. Mitzinger, GDR minister of coal and energy; Z. Szalajda, deputy chairman of the PPR Council of Ministers; K. Dumitru, deputy minister of heavy equipment industry of the SR of Romania; A.M. Petrosyants, chairman of the USSR State Committee for the Utilization of Atomic Energy; L. Gerle, deputy premier of the CSSR; and R. Pavlovic, chairman of the Committee for Economic Development in the SR of Croatia.

50TH CEMA NUCLEAR ENERGY SESSION OPENS IN POLAND

[Text] Warsaw, June 24: Representatives of Bulgaria, Czechoslovakia, Yugoslavia, Cuba, the GDR, Poland, Romania, Hungary, Vietnam and the Soviet Union are taking part in the 50th session of the CMEA's permanent commission for peaceful use of nuclear energy which opened in the northern city of Torun today. Also participating are representatives of the CMEA's Secretariat and two international economic conglomerates the "Interatomenergo" and the "Interatominstrument".

The session will discuss the details of the programme of cooperation within the CMEA in stepping up the development of nuclear power industry, utilization of radiation techniques in the different areas of economy as well as expansion of cooperation with the International Atomic Energy Agency .

Opening the session, chairman of Poland's state atomistics agency Mieczyslaw Sowinski said that questions discussed by the commission were at present in the focus of attention of the world public opinion as peaceful use of buclear energy was an indispensable condition of the development of civilization.

"The present session will examine the current issues, above all those connected with priority directions of a complex programme of scientific and technological progress of the CMEA countries up to the year 2000," he said.

Draft Plan Approved

LD272104 Warsaw PAP in English 1700 GMT 27 Jun 86

[Excerpts] Warsaw, June 27 -- The commission reviewed, among other things, the detailed programmes of cooperation in the accelerated development of nuclear energy which is contained in the complex programme of scientific-technical progress of CMEA member-states till the year 2000.

The prospects for using radiation technology in the preservation of foodstuffs and non-destructive testing of industrial equipment were also analyzed in the course of the debates. The commission also approved the draft on "The Principles of the Safe Transport of Waste Nuclear Fuels" from nuclear power plants of CMEA member-states.

Chairman of the debates, president of the State Agency of Atomistics Mieczyslaw Sowinski stresesd in an interview for PAP that the discussion unequivocally pointed to the necessity of further deepening international cooperation in the field of more broad and safe use of nuclear energy.

CPSL CENTRAL COMMITTEE ELECTS OFFICIALS

LD262210 Bratislava Domestic Service in Slovak 1630 GMT 26 Jun 86

[Excerpts] The CPSL Central Committee met today in Bratislava. The proceedings were opened by Comrade Jozef Lenart, member of the CPCZ Central Committee Presidium and first secretary of the CPSL Central Committee, who welcomed Comrade Mikulas Beno, secretary of the CPCZ Central Committee.

Delivering a report of the CPSL Central Committee Presidium on the implementation of the resolution of the CPCZ Central Committee on the further development and improvement of the Slovak party's membership base following the 17th CPCZ Congress and the CPSL Congress, Comrade Jozef Lenart stressed that one of the basic conditions for carrying out the increasingly taxing tasks of building socialism is to enhance the party's ability to act and to strengthen its leading role. A key issue in this process was the development and improvement of the membership base, Comrade Lenart stated. However, it is still vital, he continued, to strengthen the working-class character of the party, and especially to enhance the party's influence on young workers in the production sphere and on young people in general. It is an important task, he continued, to strengthen the membership base in those sectors which are crucial from the viewpoint of implementing party policy and intensifying the national economy, above all in the preproduction stages, and in the whole area of science and research.

Comrade Lenart pointed out that today, as has been the case throughout the 65 years of the CPCZ history, when we are tackling truly revolutionary tasks of speeding up socioeconomic development, it is the quality of the party ranks that determines the party's ability to act.

A number of comrades and representatives from the sphere of science, practical life and youth organizations spoke in the discussion, stressing the importance of putting into effect the resolutions adopted by the 17th CPCZ Congress.

Comrade Lenart, winding up today's session of the CPSL Central Committee, emphasized that at the current stage of building a developed socialist society the leading role of the party is objectively growing and its vanguard role in elevating society to a qualitatively higher and newer stage of its development is increasing. In particular, he stressed, it is necessary to continue to develop the party as the party of the working class, taking into account is qualitative changes arising from social progress.

Eleven discussion contributions were made at today's session of the CPSL Central Committee.

The CPSL Central Committee also discussed some cadre proposals. It elected Comrade Ivan Gonko member of the CPSL Central Committee Presidium, and Comrade Jozef Durica member of the CPSL Central Committee Secretariat.

It released Comrade Pavol Hrivnak from the post of member of the CPSL Central Committee Presidium in connection with his assignment to another post.

It elected the chairmen and members of the CPSL Central Committee Commissions as follows:

Ideological Commission: Chairman Ludovit Pezlar
Economic Commission: Chairman Miloslav Hruskovic
Agriculture and Food Commission: Chairman Jan Janik
Youth Work Commission: Chairman Jan Janik.

At the end of its session today, the CPSL Central Committee unanimously adopted a resolution. The session ended with the singing of the Internationale.

HONECKER CONTINUES VISIT TO STOCKHOLM; MEETS KVIST

LD261419 East Berlin ADN International Service in German 1210 GMT 26 Jun 86

[Text] Stockholm, 26 Jun (ADN) -- THe SED Central Committee general secretary received the secretary of the Party of the Left (Communists), Kenneth Kvist, for a friendly meeting THursday morning at his residence in Haga Castle. Current issues in the struggle for the preservation of peace and relations between the SED and the Party of the Left (Communists) were discussed.

Erich Honecker and Kenneth Kvist both agreed that in view of the Reagan administration and its closest NATO allies' adventurist policiy of arms escalation and confrontation, the struggle for preventing a nuclear inferno and for a switch to disarmament and an improvement in the international situation, represents the most urgent contemporary task. The communists, it was underlined, are prepared to cooperate with all forces that display reason and realism. Here a further increase of the activity of the workers' movement, the cooperation of communists, social-democrats and trade unionists in the peace struggle is particularly important.The historic opportunity offered by the Soviet proposals for freeing the world from all nuclear and mass destruction weapons by the year 2000 and the Warsaw Pact's new initiative for a marked reduction in conventional armed forces and arms from the Atlantic to the Urals must not be wasted. Above all, it is important to immediately halt nuclear weapons' tests, prevent the development of space offensive weapons, and prevent a new round of the chemical arms race.

Kenneth Kvist praised the contribution made by the SED and the GDR through their active policy of businesslike dialogue and mutually beneficial cooperation to overcome confrontation and tensions. He stressed that the Party of the Left (Communists) actively supports the further development of good-neighborly cooperation between Sweden and the GDR.

Erich Honecker expressed recognition for the work carried out by the Party of the Left (Communists) with the Social-Democrats and other political forces for strengthening security in northern Europe, particularly for the creation of a nuclear weapons free zone. He wished the Swedish Communists best success in their struggle for lasting peace and the preservation of the Swedish people's vital interests.

Erich Honecker and Kenneth Kvist underlined the usefulness of the contacts and exchanges of experience between the two parties which are being further deepened on the basis of the universally recognized and proven principles of relations between communist parties.

PEOPLE'S CHAMBER GROUP CONTINUES TALKS IN FRG

AU291359 East Berlin NEUES DEUTSCHLAND in German 26 Jun 86 p 2

[Text] Bonn (ADN) -- The delegation of the Youth Committee of the GDR People's Chamber, presently in the FRG, met with the working circle for youth policy of the SPD parliamentary group in the North-Rhine Westphalian Landtag in Duesseldorf on Wednesday [25 June].

The delegation, headed by Hans-Joachin Willerding, chairman of the FDJ parliamentary group, was briefed about the problems of vocational training and youth unemployment and its consequences. A talk with Hermann Heinemann, North-Rhine Westphalian minister of labor, health, and social affairs, concentrated on possibilities of further developing the cooperation between both German states, above all in the fields of youth policy, environmental protection, and culture.

On Tuesday [24 June] evening at a reception given in honor of the delegation and attended by Bundestag deputies of the SPD, FDP, and the Greens, Horse Ehmke, deputy chairman of the SPD Bundestag parliamentary group, welcomed the meeting of People's Chamber and Bundestag deputies dealing with youth policy as a useful opportunity for an exchange of experiences. The talks between the SED and SPD on a zone free of nuclear weapons and the successfully concluded consultations on a zone free of chemical weapons are important contributioned to detente, Horst Ehmke stated.

Hans-Joachim Willerding stressed that the GDR youth attentively follows the development of East-West relations and tries to constructively contribute to improving the international climate and achieving peaceful coexistence.

The delegation visited the training workshop of the Cologne Ford works and the Essen vocational advancement center and used the opportunity for talks with trade union and youth representatives on the social situation and the rights of the young generation.

AGRICULTURAL POLICY OUTLINED AT EXHIBITION

LD261531 East Berlin ADN International Service in German 1432 GMT 25 Jun 86

[Text] Leipzig, 25 Jun (ADN) -- The GDR's economic strategy also fully applies to socialist agriculture, forestry, and food economy. This was stated by Werner Felfe, member of the Politburo and secretary of the SED Central Committee at a seminar with leading cadres and practical workers of socialist agriculture today at the GDR agricultural exhibition Agra 1986 in Leipzig-Markleeberg. "It is a matter of shaping agriculture into a branch of applied science, deepening the process of the acceleration and broad use of scientific-technical progress and, above all, or increasingly applying key technologies in practice." This was part of the two systems' peaceful competition.

"Our 11th Congress make clear, in full agreement with the 27th CPSU Congress, that only peace guarantees the safety of our planet and that war cannot be a means of deciding the historical conflict between capitalism and socialism."

In this 5-year plan, too, it is a case of "ensuring the production of food and agricultural raw materials in quantity, structure, and quality that meet the population's and industry's needs from our own output in a stable manner and at a constantly higher level," Felfe stressed. This meant consistently implementing the comprehensive intensification of agriculture and giving this process a lasting character.

"In the reproduction process in agriculture there will be far-reaching changes through the application and utilization of microelectronics, computer technology, biotechnology, the cultivation and breeding of new and the improvement of existing types of plants and breeds of animals through gene technology. It can already be seen today that future industrialized agricultural production will be based on the integrated use of mechanical, chemical, electronic, and biological means of work and technologies."

In connection with the long-term development concepts, it is necessary to elaborate integrated programs for implementing scientific-technical progress to the year 1990. In this connection, the commitment entered into to harvest by this date average per hectare yields of 50 decitonnes of grain, 300 decitonnes of potatoes, and 400 decitonnes of sugar beet was a realistic goal.

Werner Felfe, stressed that there also were high demands in the animal production sector. The required growth is to be achieved primarily through raising the performance per animal, with beef farming playing an increasingly central role in animal production.

"The comprehensive intensificaton of agriculture requires that emphasis be even more strongly placed on increasing the efficiency of production. High yields and performances are and will remain the pivotal point for ensuring high production efficiency," Felfe said. This also set new yardsticks for lowering production consumption per product. The even more effective implementation of the performance principle plays a decisive role in this connection.

He described modernization as the main direction of the reproduction of fixed assets. "This requires, in the process of maintenance, the purposeful undertaking of modernization of key machines and, through the further development of in-house construction of rationalization equipment, the noticeable raising of the technological level of the work processes."

The agricultural production cooperatives (LPG) and the state farms (VEG) for crop cultivation and animal production were and would remain the basic units of social organization of production, Werner Felfe stated. "The present concentration, specialization, combination, and cooperation of work in and between them is comprehensible for the cooperative farmers and workers.

"Cooperation has proved itself as a characteristic of our agricultural policy. The deepening of cooperation will also be a main concern of our party in the future. It makes the collaboration of publicly owned and cooperative property possible; it has helped to overcome the temporary separation of plant and animal production."

"We continue to regard the capacity of the preparatory work sector as an important manpower reserve for mastering work peaks in primary production. The agroindustrial associations are a developed form of cooperation. The agricultural production cooperatives and the state farms are and will remain the basic units of production in them also," Felfe stressed.

He continued: "We see individual production on the personal plots of the cooperative farmers and workers and in the Association of Allotment Holders, Gardners and Small Animal Breeders and also of other small producers as a useful and necessary complement to agricultural production in the agricultural production cooperatives and the state farms in the future as well." Above all, there must be greater success in directing initiative to the production of those products and produce which will ensure a more varied level of supply regionally.

"The 11th SED Congress stressed that the development of the socialist village as the center of agricultural production and country life is a firm part of our agricultural and alliance policy. It is part of the principle of our agricultural policy that the LPG and the VEG increase their political and economic influence on the development of the villages. This includes taking over local services, creating children's facilities, communal kitchens, dining rooms, restaurants, sports facilities, and constructing roads and water mains.

The LPG and the VEC must increasingly help in the establishment of supply services such as fruit juice production, bakeries and butchers' shops." Felfe said. Also it is a matter of well-kept villages characterized by good living conditions, an active social, intellectual, cultural, and sporting life, and a close community of village inhabitants.

HONECKER CONGRATULATES BRANDT ON REELECTION

AU301622 East Berlin NEUES DEUTSCHLAND in German 27 Jun 86 p 2

[Message from Erich Honecker, SED Central Committee general secretary and GDR State Council chairman, to Willy Brandt, president of the Socialist International]

[Text] Esteemed Mr Brandt, on the occasion of your reelection as president of the Socialist International I convey to you cordial congratulations, combined with the wishes for successes in implementing the resolutions of the 17th Congress of the Socialist International aimed at limiting and reducing the nuclear, chemical, and conventional arms, at preventing the militarization of space.

In the interest of averting a nuclear catastrophe, the SED and the GDR will also in the future be prepared to communicate and cooperate with all forces of peace, realism, and reason.

We regard it as a requirement of our time to make an efficient contribution to improving the international situation and returning to detente through a policy of dialogue and cooperation.

Yours respectfully, Erich Honecker, SED Central Committee general secretary and GDR State Council chairman

GREETINGS SENT TO 13TH LCY CONGRESS DELEGATES

AU281644 East Berlin NEUES DEUTSCHLAND in German 25 Jun 86 pp 1-2

[Text] Berlin (ND) -- The SED Central Committee has sent the following greetings to the delegates of the 13th LCY Congress in Belgrade:

Dear comrades, the SED Central Committee conveys fraternal greetings to the delegates of the 13th LCY Congress and to all Yugoslav Communists.

We are pleased that the SFRY working people, under the leadership of the LCY, are working with great industriousness and energy to advance the socialist construction of the country and to actively contribute to the peoples' struggle for peace, disarmament, and international understanding. Thinking of the historic achievements of their pioneers, the Yugoslav Communists are advancing on the path of Tito in order to preserve and augment the revolutionary achievements.

We wish the 13th LCY Congress, which will discuss the comprehensive and complicated tasks that have to be solved in the coming period, successful deliberations.

Linked by long-standing ties of traditional friendship with the LCY and the SFRY, the SED and the GDR are determined to further universally expand relations.

The foundations agreed upon in the coexistence of our peoples are marked by stability.

During the friendly talks on the highest level in October 1985, they were enriched by new aims and possibilities of cooperation. Thus, the trustful cooperation between our parties is resulting in broader prosperous contacts between our states and peoples.

The views which move both of us, which are in agreement with each other or are becoming more and more similar, are increasingly reflected in our international activities, as here the responsibilty for preserving peace takes first place.

We are concerned about the growing dangers to peace and the future of the peoples caused by the most reactionary circles of imperialism. The militarization of space and the nuclear catastrophe, a threat that is becoming all the more clear, must be prevented. The world needs a new approach to safeguarding peace, mutually guaranteed security for all states and peoples, increased efforts to solve other global issues in order to be able to survive. No one can close one's mind to that.

We fully support the peace initiatives of Comrade M.S. Gorbachev, which point out an acceptable way for all people toward a change for the better in the world; at the same time, we undertake everything in our strength to contribute to improving the international situation through a policy of result-oriented businesslike dialogue and cooperation.

In the struggle for world peace we rely on the joint action of all forces of peace, reason, and realism. This also includes the Nonaligned Movement as an important international factor.

With the resolutions of its recently concluded 11th Congress, the GDR Communists have set themselves demanding tasks aimed at consistently continuing the course tested in life and directed toward the well-being of the people, the strengthening of socialism, and the securing of peace. We are prepared to consistently utilize the achievements of the scientific-technological revolution to strengthen socialism and to link stable dynamic growth of the national economy with social progress in the future as well. This course is based on the trust and the performance readiness of the entire people.

We express the deep conviction that the Yugoslav Communists, the revolutionary vanguard of the peoples of Yugoslavia, will take new significant steps along the path of socialism and peace in implementing the resolutions of its 13th Congress.

With communist greetings, SED Central Committee, E. Honecker, general secretary.

BILD REPORTS FUGITIVES KILLED IN SUBWAY SHOOT-OUT

DW010825 Hamburg BILD in German 1 Jul 86 pp 1, 2

[Unattributed report: "East Berlin: Flight, Bloodbath in Subway Tunnel?"]

[Text] Twelve young people from the GDR wanted to flee through a Berlin subway tunnel: The most risky attempt to flee since the construction of the Berlin Wall in 1961 has obviously ended in a bloodbath. Six fugitives are said to have been killed in a shootout, and six are said to have been executed later. Among the fugitives was the son of a major general.

Details of the attempted flight leaked out when Deputy Paetzold (SPD) had asked about "rumors" in the Berlin house of deputies: According to them a subway train began to burn between the East Berlin stations Klosterstrasse and Alexanderplatz in a shootout between fugitives and GDR security forces.

According to various sources in Bonn and in both parts of Berlin the following has happened: The 12 fugitives -- all of them reservists, among them six paratroopers and two sons of high-ranking state security officers -- had hijacked an empty train of eight cars.

They picked a route where two subway lines were running parallel: one for the East Berlin traffic, the other for transit trains of the West Berlin subway running through the East without stopping. Prior to the construction of the wall the tracks were connected by a switch that is now blocked.

The fugitives wanted to release the switch, blow up a wall 24 cm thick between the tracks and reach the West Berlin station Marienplartz at a distance of only 800 m with their train.

It was said that the plan has been betrayed. On a day in May GDR citizens heard shots at 1200: Six fugitives are said to have been killed in a hail of bullets. The flight train was burned.

The SED newspaper NEUES DEUTSCHLAND reported the fire on 9 May -- without a word about the attempted flight. The involved fire brigade men were decorated with medals.

The surviving refugees are said to have been sentenced to death by the East Berlin Supreme Court and executed in Frankfurt/Oder.

Paper Reports Fire, No Shootings

AU010800 East Berlin NEUES DEUTSCHLAND in German 8 May 86 p 8

[Text] On Wednesday [7 May] at 1145 a fire started in the overpass tunnel in the subway between Klosterstrasse and Alexanderplatz in an empty subway train consisting of eight cars on its way for a techical inspection. Through the great personal engagement of the firemen, several fire trucks succeeded in extinguishing the fire by approximately 1430. Staff members of the Berlin transportation service (BVB) that were in the tunnel were taken away by the fire brigade or were able to save themselves through an emergency escape route. Eight BVB members that suffered injuries from smoke were given immediate medical aid. Five of them were able to leave the hospital after outpatient treatment. The other three are on the road to a fair recovery.

Due to the fire lines A and E of the subway were temporarily closed and relief buses [Schienenersatzverkehr] were introduced.

At 2030 subways were again operating on the section Alexanderplatz-Tierpark and on the Alexanderplatz-Pankow section. Repair work is still continuing on the Alexanderplatz-Otto-Grotewohl-Strasse section. Due to the intense heat and smoke, it was necessary to close Grunerstrasse temporarily to traffic including the autotunnel for safety reasons. Shops in the vicinity also had to be temporarily closed. The causes of the fire are being investigated.

West German Reports Denied

AU010801 Paris AFP in English 0753 GMT 1 Jul 86

[Excerpt] Berlin, July 1 (AFP) -- East Germany on Tuesday categorically denied West German press reports that from 12 to 15 East Germans were killed in a shootout as they attempted to escape to the West on a hijacked underground train on May 7.

A spokesman for the East German Foreign Ministry called the reports a "shameless lie", and refused further comment.

The West German newspapers FRANKFURTER ALLGEMEINE and BILD reported on Tuesday that a group including East German reservists and the sons of two East German senior intelligence officers seized an eight-car underground train and headed for West Berlin.

Repair Work Said Continuing

AU010857 East Berlin NEUES DEUTSCHLAND in German 9 May 86 p 8

[Excerpt] In the overpass tunnel of the subway between Alexanderplatz and Klosterstrasse, in which a train of empty passenger cars caught fire on Wednesday [7 May] the repair work that started immediately after the fire had been extinguished continued on Thursday. Members of the Berlin transportation services and working people from the steel construction VEB and the plant for signalling technology and safety regulations are working to clear the burned out cars from the rails to repair signalling and safety facilities, and to prepare to restart operations. They have also started to clean the soot from the stations. According to findings so far the repair work in this section also calls for comprehensive construction measures. Due to the intense heat build up, the loadbearing capacity of the floor construction is restricted in a section of the tunnel. Therefore, in some parts steel beams and concrete elements must be replaced. This work is being carried out round the clock and will probably continue till 12 May.

[Text] Budapest, June 27 (MTI) -- Istvan Buda has been released, as of June 30, of his post as under-secretary of state by the Hungarian Presidential Council, and as president of the National Office for Physical Education and Sport by the Council of Ministers, on account of retirement and with recognition of his merits.

The Presidential Council appointed Gabor Deak, as of July 1, under-secretary of state, and the Council of Ministers as president of the State Office for Youth and Sport.

The Presidential Council has awarded the Order of Merit for Socialist Hungary to Istvan Buda for decades of successful work, on the occasion of his retirement. The medal was presented by Lajos Czinege, deputy chairman of the Council of Ministers, on Friday.

LOSONCZI ADDRESSES PRESIDENTIAL COUNCIL SESSION

LD271608 Budapest MTI in English 1345 GMT 27 Jun 86

[Text] Budapest, June 27 (MTI) -- The Presidential Council of the Hungarian People's Republic met in session on Friday.

President Pal Losonczi informed the council on the official friendship visit to Hungary of Canaan Sodindo Banana, President of the Republic of Zimbabwe, and on the official visit to Hungary of Kenan Evren, president of the Republic of Turkey, which took place recently.

The Presidential Council established that the visit of President C.S. Banana was useful, successful, and an important stage of the system of high-level meetings and rapidly developing political relations. The visit created a good opportunity for the parties to exchange views on the issues of international peace and security, with particular regard to Africa, mainly to the latest developments in the southern region of that continent. The recent high-level talks also reflected that Hungary and the Republic of Zimbabwe maintained identical or similar views on the most important international issues. Relying upon the favourably developing relations there are further opportunities for the development of bilateral cooperation, mainly through the expansion of the reciprocally advantageous economic and commercial forms. It was also reflected by the agreements signed by the authorized representatives of the two countries during the visit.

In cordial talks with President Kenan Evren of the Republic of Turkey views were exchanged on the most important topical international affairs, the need of averting the dangers threatening international security and peace, and the possibilities of cooperation between the countries with diverging social systems. The parties surveyed the relations between the Hungarian People's Republic and the Republic of Turkey, and possibilities of the further development of cooperation. The sides expressed their common intention to develop reciprocally beneficial relations. As a result of the visit and talks the high-ranking authorized representatives of the parties signed some agreements on cooperation.

The Presidential Council noted the report with approval.

The Presidential Council passed a law-decree on the foundation of a state office for youth and sports which will exercise state control over youth and sports affairs and act as a national authority under the direct supervision of the Council of Ministers. The new form of management is to promote the physical training of young people and a healthy way of life of the population.

The law-decree is to take effect on July 1 and the State Youth Commission and the National Office for Physical Education and Sports will cease operation simultaneously.

Another law-decree passed by the Presidential Council comprehensively regulated the liquidation process of economic organizations. The new regulation more efficiently reflects the interests of creditors, and promotes the objective evaluation of the causes of liquidation and the assertion of interests related to the security of contractual relations. Under the new regulation liquidation belongs to the scope of courts. With regard to the importance of such cases, proceedings are instituted by the Budapest metropolitan court on first instance, and by the supreme court on the second. The rules of rehabilitation by the state will be set down by the Council of Ministers. The law-decree and the relevant rules are to take effect on September 1.

The Presidential Council passed a law-decree on the state registration of the population. In compliance with the present development level of the registration of the population the law-decree stipulates the requirements of the development of this activity, and sets tasks in the management and control of state registration of the population.

MARJAI, KARPATI, HETENYI BEFORE NATIONAL ASSEMBLY

LD271530 Budapest Television Service in Hungarian 1625 GMT 27 Jun 86

[Speeches by Dr Istvan Hetenyi, minister of finance; Jozsef Marjai, deputy chairman of the Council of Ministers and chairman of the Economic Policy Commission; and Ferenc Karpati, minister of defense to the 26 June National Assembly session; no video available -- passages within quotation marks recorded]

[Excerpts] [Correspondent] Having analyzed the difficulties and problems, Istvan Hetenyi discussed the measures planned by the government.

[Hetenyi] "Esteemed National Assembly. The difficulties do not in any way change the fact that the programs approved at the 13th Congress of the Hungarian Socialist Workers Party and legislated by the National Assembly in the 7th 5-Year Plan continue to be the direction set down for us for our work. For that reason, the government regards it as its duty to facilitate efficiency and the acceleration of the transformation of the structure, to improve the equilibrium, with measures beyond those in the plan. In this framework, we are providing tax and credit concessions, to be awarded by tender, to enterprises capable of development, to those which fulfill the requirements of today and the future with improving performance. With that we are directing both existing capacities and extra investment to increase exports to a greater extent than before.

"The discussion with CEMA members first and foremost the Soviet Union, aimed at the mutual expansion of economic relations beyond that contained in the plan, also serve the goal of strengthening the basis of development. The underpinning of the greatest priorities with better performances at the enterprises capable of development facilities the achievement of higher incomes. For that reason as well, to restrict inflation, it has become indispensable to regroup incomes from those who create small incomes, that is, to reduce the budgetary and other subsidies precisely in the case of these enterprises.

"The reduction of subsidies must be applied to enterprises and to public expenditure, without affecting the social, cultural and health expenditures. Some of the elements of these measures are temporary and include such steps as the exclusion of the reserves of the planning and budget from the realization of new targets and the reduction during the year of support given to central administrative, management and other organs and to certain enterprises.

"We must accept the seemingly forceful measures, which, however, serve the overcoming of the problems and the achievement of rational thrift, because, even so, it unfortunately appears inevitable that in the course of the year, and perhaps until the end of the year, the budget will develop unfavorably in comparison to that which was planned."

[Correspondent] With this contribution, we now recall through the remarks of Jozsef Marjai his statements, on occasion self-critical, which relate to the work of the administration.

[Marjai] "The 1986 people's economic plan has taken into consideration the characteristics of the economic operation in 1985 only partially, primarily because -- and this must be spoken about in a self-critical manner -- during 1985 we accepted one after another optimistic prognosis which life has not justified. This meant measures fully in harmony with the situation and the objectives could be incorporated into the plan itself, and in the regulations, only to a limited extent. This too played a role in the fact that the unfavorable tendencies of 1985 continued at the beginning of 1986 and in that the government had to take several, supplementary and additionally assisting measures immediately after the start of the year.

"Criticism of the administration's economic direction work may be sensed in public opinion responsive to economic issues recently. These criticisms -- if it may be described as such -- come from different directions and often with conflicting contents. While according to some the administration intervenes too often in the economic process, others urge more active intervention; both opinions have truth in them. Enterprises -- particularly those operating better -- take justifiable exception to the excessively frequent change of regulators and particularly to changes which result in taking incomes away from them. Enterprises -- whose economic operation is weaker or in fact lossmaking -- consider as small the administration's measures which they think necessary and which result in the improvement of their situation. The real contradictions of our positions are expressed in these views, because our people's economy has no such resources out of which we would be able to satisfy even the justified demands or that the development of balanced economic conditions could be left to simple automatic processes. Therefore selectivity must prevail in the more thoroughly thought-out usage of resources and in the interest of this we must tie the regulations to the other tools of central direction in a rational and necessary fashion.

"No plan or regulation exists which would create conditions favorable for everyone at any time. Our programs are realistic, they are possible to materialize but demand the decisive concentration of means in the realisation process and a strict setting of priorities regarding the objectives. In this we are not sufficiently consistent, which warns us that in planning and in all economic management there is need for greater flexibility, a more thorough consideration of the real processes and increased practicality."

[Correspondent] Then Jozsef Marjai, relating to the 1986 people's economic plan and budget, familiarized his audience with the measures already introduced and designed to promote the implementation of the plan and budget. He mentioned that as a result of the comprehensive system of competitive tender, enterprises have already undertaken the obligation to expand their production and export by several tens of billions of forints, part of which will be materialized as early as this year. Another part of the measures aims at providing incentives for export which may be produced with existing capacities. There was also a need for the introduction of measures to limit wages and redeploy resources in the people's economy.

[Marjal] "All these measures are compatible with the wishes laid down in our government plan and in the 5-year plan. International experiences show that countries with capabilities similar to ours can ensure the resources necessary for advance only with the expansion of economic export based on a selective development policy.

"It is raised on occasions that the government was too late with measures. True, a number of measures should have been introduced earlier. However, I think it was not the measures expanding resources which were late. On the contrary, we rather provided them in advance. This advance provision, acceptance of a risk with full knowledge, is true even in such a sensitive area like the hard currency import because the import of advanced technology in the first 5 months [of 1986] is more than $150,000,000 higher than in the same period last year.

"It is clear from the account that 1985 tax returns and subsidies to the enterprise management and economic organs -- at a time when the national income was decreasing -- exceeded by some 13 billion forints the envisaged sum, which was already high in any case. We cannot allow this to happen constantly. In the coming period we must return to the policy of cutting and regressing budgetary subsidies.

"It becomes clear from all this that our belatedness has been true rather of those difficult, but in the end unavoidable, decisions to redevelop resources, increase savings and change inefficient economic activities.

"Esteemed National Assembly. We can already say that our measures introduced in recent weeks do not provide generally greater allowances to economic organizations but expand the financial and management maneuvering room of the efficient, competitive economic units whose production means technological renewal. However, it remains a valid requirement that incentive and compulsion must be tied stronger than before to one another; that we should make selectivity prevail in stiffening and in the taking money away and that we should set stricter conditions for the enterprises of low efficiency and low profit when preparing the regulations."

[Correspondent] Following this Jozsef Marjai spoke about an issue much debated nowadays; his theme is the question of work discipline.

[Marjai] "We cannot postpone further the strengthening of work discipline. Several government decrees have been born -- as is known -- for the protection of the work time reserve; for the expansion of the possibilities of consuming services outside working hours, for the placement of office hours of organizations dealing with the various affairs of the population outside working hours. The implementation of these is taking place continuously. At the same time it has been proven that only by a series of more comprehensive measures it is possible to effect appropriate changes in this area. The consequences of the looseness of the discipline of the citizenry cause serious damages, both directly and indirectly, in economic building work as well. It is our duty to take a more determined stand -- if this cannot be solved by economic means alone if the need arises, via the employment of administrative measures as well -- against the phenomena of corruption, gaining income without work, money grabbing and profiteering."

[Correspondent] We must treat expenditures in a stricter manner too regarding all institutions, offices and economic units. This is how Jozsef Marjai continued his contribution analyzing our economic problems. Improvement of internal economic cooperation links is indispensable and so is more disciplined and honest cooperation between enterprises. In closing, the deputy premier dealt with issues of further economic development.

[Marjai] "We are rather well advanced in the process of further development of the management system from the point of view of standpoints, legal regulations and the institutional system. At the same time, practically speaking, we are still rather at the start of the process. It was partly our situation -- the meagerness of the necessary resources -- and partly subjective factors which failed to make possible a progress at the rate envisaged. New and old live simultaneously in the practice of today."

Although the role of the new tools and methods should not be held in low esteem the comprehensive development of our direction and our methods need, at the same time, a certain amount of time and expense which cannot be neglected and with which we shall have to calculate in a more thorough fashion in the future.

"We must speed up the implementation of our program to develop the economic management system in a manner rationally possible. Where it is possible to start there might be a need for bringing forward some steps which earlier plans envisaged to be implemented at a later stage, so our financial system, price system and methods of direction should function as a system of signals more comprehensible from the point of view of the economy and which provide a better foundation for our economic policy priorities as well as working with a greater compulsive force. This should be coupled with our eliminating at the same time those ill-matched situations which weaken the degree of effectiveness of management, our inconsistencies; and where the mechanisms do not prevail or can do so only to a limited degree we must strengthen the influence of the administration on the processes.

"Our economic organizations, enterprises and the various enterpreneurial forms must be provided with equal treatment and equal conditions in such a way that in the competition and cooperation between them their really existing particular advantages should be able to prevail."

[Correspondent] Following the debate Istvan Hetenyi replied to questions, then the National Assembly adopted unanimously the draft budget.

[Correspondent] The deputies then went on to the next point on the agenda and Ference Karpati, minister of defense, rose to speak. In his introduction he stressed the report he has submitted came about for one and only one reason. The national defense law is 10 years old and here is just one proof of how good this law has been: In the past 10 years it had to be modified only once -- and even that was a pleasant modification, perhaps you remember it: The 24-month compulsory military service was reduced to 18 months. The law, therefore, has turned out a success and changes are not planned in future, either. One thing that could be considered, perhaps, is that students admitted to university might be permitted to choose whether to fulfill their military service before or after their studies. After this the minister spoke in detail about the results and problems connected with young soldiers.

[Karpati] "We devote a lot of care to the development of young people's general and professional training. Within the Army there is a significant system of skilled and semi-skilled worker training and special machine-handling courses. Annually, some 3,500 young people obtain skilled and semi-skilled workers qualifications during their military service. Many of them, who enlist with 8 years of general schooling behind them, pass out of the Army as railway or road gangmen or perhaps as brigade leaders. In the case of those who for some reason have not completed the 8 years in general school, we make it possible for them, in addition to their military training, in the system that has been developed jointly with the Ministry of Education of Culture, to study during their military service, to make up for their backwardness.

"We devote special attention to developing the intellectual values of the young people enlisting for compulsory military service. This is guaranteed by a network of youth clubs, amateur artistic groups, study circles, including large numbers of linguistic, video and computer study circles, as well as the variously equipped troop libraries.

"My esteemed fellow deputies. No doubt the question occurs to many of you: Do we have any problems in the training of the soldiers. Yes, there are. We have to speak honestly about these, as well. Although the bigger proportion of our enlisting youth have adequate education and professional training, all the same today's young people in their twenties have not much life experience. For this reason their education demands a well-thought out, serious task, attention and a high degree of competence on the part of the educators.

"Unfortunately, a growing number of new recruits have already committed illegal acts. Dealing with them makes many problems for the professional staff, in any case already considerably strained. Even in spite of the rules of law brought into effect so far, even in spite of health instruction, there is frequent drinking and the troubles arising from this are causing problems.

"This occurs mainly outside the service period, on leave and travel, which naturally gives rise to a bad reaction among the population. We have not yet been fully able to overcome phenomena which have their roots in bygone days, such as the so-called rags which occur between old soldiers and recruits -- that are in bad taste. If these are rarer nowadays, they remain harmful. For this very reason we take a determined stance against them. I would also raise here our other problems, such as the state of health of the soldiers.

"A significant number of young people, already when they are ranked, are unsuited for service, or are suitable only to a limited degree and have to be exempted from training and physical training occupations that demand a heavy physical burden. In the course of service a further 3 to 4 percent of them have to be discharged for health reasons. With these young men the illnesses take the form mainly of nervous or mobility disorders, cardiovascular, digestive complaints. This causes serious problems which are social and at the same time also have an effect on national defense."

[Correspodent] Well, just as it does everywhere in society. Apart from this, the minister mentioned that concessions in the period of service continue to be possible basically only for social reasons. On the other hand, it is conceivable that after the nineties, when as a consequence of the demographic situation, there will be considerably fewer soldiers on compulsory military service, the circle of those fulfilling shorter periods of compulsory military service will have to be narrowed. It was an endearing gesture on the part of Ferenc Karpati, defense minister, when he thanked the families bringing up their soldier sons and all those who have fulfilled with honor their national defense duties.

[Text] Budapest, June 25 (MTI) -- The members of the suite of Turkish President Kenan Evren, currently on an official visit in Hungary, held talks with their Hungarian partners in Budapest Wednesday.

Foreign Ministers Vahit Halefoglu and Peter Varkonyi exchanged views on several international political issues of importance, including the proposals contained in the Budapest appeal of the Political Consultative Committee of the Warsaw Treaty member countries and the situation of the Middle East hotbeds of tension. They surveyed current tasks related to the development of bilateral relations between Hungary and Turkey.

Laszlo Kapolyi, Hungarian minister of industry, and Ahmet Selcuk, under-secretary of state at the Turkish Ministry of Energy and Resources, discussed possibilities for energetics cooperation between the two countries, with special regard to the provisions of the Hungarian-Turkish general energetics agreement signed in Budapest Tuesday, and they agreed on the exchange of experts.

Husamettin Celebi, general director of the ANATOLIA NEWS AGENCY, and Sandor Burjan, general director of the Hungarian News Agency, signed a cooperation agreement calling for the expansion of news and photo exchanges, under-secretary of state Rezso Banyasz, president of the Information Office of the Hungarian Council of Ministers, met Husamettin Celebi.

Losonczi Toasts Evren

AU301146 Budapest NEPSZABADSAG in Hungarian 26 Jun 86 p 4

[Report on toast by Pal Losonczi, president of the Presidential Council, at the gala dinner in honor of President Kenan Evren of the Republic of Turkey in Budapest 25 June: "Gala Dinner in the Parliament -- Pal Losonczi's Toast"]

[Text] In his introduction Pal Losonczi expressed greetings to head of state Kenan Evren and members of his delegation and emphasized it was the first time we had the pleasure of welcoming a president of the Republic of Turkey to our homeland.

Pal Losonczi said, "Both in Hungary and in Turkey people treasure joint memories from some related chapters in history, and the fostering of the memories of the past contributes to increasing our present relations. As an example of successful cooperation between states with different social systems, Hungary and Turkey are increasing these relations on the basis of mutual advantage. That there are no unresolved or disputed political questions between our countries helps the expansion of relations. Evidence for this can be found in high-ranking meetings in recent years and the agreements concluded there. These present talks will open up further prospects for expanding relations between the two coutries. The talks reflected the mutual political will for seeking opportunities to explore not fully exploited areas.

"The agricultural and energy cooperation agreements just signed by the responsible ministers created new opportunities for expanding economic cooperation, and the talks on expanding legal and consular relations are also evolving satisfactorily. Active work is also taking place in the field of expanding cultural relations: This year film festivals and exhibitions will be mutually organized in both countries; steps have been taken to renew the working plan for cultural cooperation; and there is an active cultural exchange taking place between Baranya County and Kutahya Province, as well as between Sarospatak and Tekirdag. Apart from these achievements, there are further opportunities to establish cooperation between scientific institutions and to bind their relations closer."

Pal Losonczi stressed, "The development of Hungarian-Turkish relations provides a good example of how countries with different social systems can conduct successful cooperation with each other on the basis of mutual respect and advantages. This is beneficial for our peoples and, at the same time, it contributes to building the confidence required for the political settlement of disputed international questions. It has been established at our talks that both Hungary and Turkey are in favor of preventing a world war, limiting the arms race, and continuing the process of detente. Our views are also similar on several other important issues concerning the international situation." Pal Losonczi pointed out, "The Hungarian People's Republic will seek to contribute to reducing tensions and providing a guarantee for equal security on the lowest possible level of arms. For this reason it is ready to hold dialogues and to cooperate with all realistic political forces which feel responsible for the fate of mankind."

He stressed further, "We are convinced the initiatives by the Soviet Union and the socialist countries, taking into account the other side's legitimate security demands to a great extent, will provide a good starting basis for reducing the danger of war and consolidating international security.

"The Hungarian People's Republic will continue to make efforts to further develop the manifold and fruitful relations between the two states for the benefit of our countries and our peoples and for the advantage of the European process of security and cooperation," Pal Losonczi said in concluding his speech, and raising his glass, he drank to the health of Kenan Evren and his delegation, to the flourishing of the Republic of Turkey, to the friendship and cooperation of the Hungarian and Turkish peoples, as well as to the peace of Europe and the whole world.

Evren Departs

[Text] Budapest, June 26 (MTI) -- Concluding his official visit to Hungary Kenan Evren, president of the Republic of Turkey, left Budapest on Thursday. The formal farewell ceremony took place on the square in front of the Parliament building where Kenan Evren and his party arrived in the company of Pal Losonczi.

Present at the ceremony were Rezso Trautmann, deputy president of the Presidential Council, Janos Peter, deputy speaker of Parliament, Imre Katona, secretary of the Presidential Council, and several other leaders of Hungary's state and social life. Present at the event were several leaders and members of the diplomatic corps accredited to Budapest. After the ceremony held with military honours the guests and their hosts drove to the Ferihegy Airport where Pal Losonczi, Peter Varkonyi, foreign minister, Lajos Szalai, ambassador of Hungary to Turkey, and Asaf Inhan, ambassador of Turkey to Hungary, bade farewell to President Kenan Evren and his party.

PALESTINIAN DELEGATION MEETS LEADERS, DEPARTS

LD271751 Budapest MTI in English 1610 GMT 27 Jun 86

[Text] Budapest, June 27 (MTI) -- A delegation of the Democratic Front for the Liberation of Paletine, headed by General Secretary Nayif Hawatmah, paid a visit to Hungary from June 19 to 27 on the invitation of the Hungarian Solidarity Committee.

Nayif Hawatmah met Matyas Szuros, secretary of the Central Committee of the Hungarian Socialist Workers' Party, and held talks with Imre Pozsgay, general secretary of the National Council of the Patriotic People's Front, Sandor Jakab, chairman of the Hungarian Solidarity Committee, Gabor Nagy, deputy minister of foreign affairs, and Maria Duschek, president of the National Council of Hungarian Women. He met Robert Ribanszki, secretary of the National Council of the Patriotic People's Front, Ivan Szandtner, secretary of the Central Committee of the Communist Youth Union of Hungary, Gyula Suto, secretary of the Hungarian Solidarity Committee, and representatives of the Hungarian press.

Discussions were held on the work of the two movements, major international issues and the situation of the Middle East and the Palestinian people. Talks with leaders of the Hungarian Solidarity Committee covered further possibilities for the improvement of bilateral links. It was stated that the Hungarian Solidarity Committee continues to support the just struggle of the Arab peoples against the elimination of Israeli aggression, and for the withdrawal of Israeli troops from all Arab territories occupied in 1967, as well as the just struggle of the Palestinian Arab people for their inalienable national rights, including the right to independent statehood. The parties urged the organization of an international conference for a comprehensive, just and lasting settlement of the Middle East crisis, with the participation of all interested parties, including the Soviet Union and the PLO, the sole legitimate representative of the Palestinian Arab people. The Hungarian party stressed that the PLO should continue to be important in the struggle. They pointed out that the prime Palestinian concern today is the formation of a united PLO on anti-imperialist bases, and the coordination and strengthening of action with all progressive patriotic forces of the Arab world.

FURTHER REPORTAGE ON 10TH PZPR CONGRESS

Jaruzelski Gives Political Report

LD291009 Warsaw Domestic Service in Polish 0728 GMT 29 Jun 86

[Political Report delivered by Wojciech Jaruzelski, first secretary of the PZPR Central Committee, to the 10th PZPR Congress in Warsaw -- live]

[Text] Comrades delegates, esteemed guests: 5 years ago the extraordinary Congress was deliberating in this hall. Today the ordinary congress has begun work. The vast amount of tension and experiences, toil and achievements is behind these two words. The memory works selectively; it softens many things and puts them at a distance. However, the outline of not so distant times when our country was in a deep crisis and in the utmost danger is still clear in our memory. We do not hide with silence anything that in the recent years was shared by the party, the working class, and the nation. The collapse of the strategy of the past decade, full of mistakes, the large wave of social and workers discontent, and the offensive of counterrevolutionary forces preying on that -- all these coincided with a serious sharpening of the international situation, and with a subsequent imperialist attempt to turn the course of the history.

On the coast of our nation, on its actual territory there were attempts to use the internal strife in Poland to undermine the balance of forces in Europe; to destabilize its peaceful order.

The situation was dramatically difficult, but the party did not lose faith in the instinct and reason of the working class, in the feeling of patriotic responsibility of our nation. It was invariably guided by the conviction that one has to see an essential difference between the extreme, its inspirers and leaders, and millions of honest people who, most often unwittingly, were involved in the dangerous game. We gave the widest circles of society time to see the essence of antisocialist ideas; time for disenchantment with demagogy, and actions and intentions harmful to Poland. We resorted to extraordinary measures in the time of utmost urgency, in order to defend the state from disintegration, the economy from devastation, and society from fraternal conflict. We used these measures not to reconstruct the old, but to defend the new -- to pave the way for the idea of socialist renewal: I declared that solemnly on 13 December 1981. It was confirmed with full strength by the Central Committee at the memorable seventh plenum. We have been following this path consistently. The speed and the extent of overcoming the difficulties vary. We still connect the satisfaction over what we have been able to achieve, with the awareness of the shortcomings. We still continue to struggle with the difficulties of everyday existence, and there is still a legacy of ill-feeling, disappointments and lack of confidence. We are fully aware that the barriers, both in the material sphere and in social awareness, can only be overcome gradually.

In this situation a question arises. Are we not uncovering weaknesses, revealing cases of neglect, giving material to our opponents? Such an impression may arise, but in fact in this way we take the initiative away from our opponents. The truth, even should it be bitter, is our weapon. Boldly using it, we are acting in the spirit of Leninism which draws its unquenchable strength from the class nature of reality, from the open and bold facing of the hardest problems. The party has undergone a severe trial. It has overcome its defensiveness, ideological confusion, organizational weakening. It has given battle to him who makes difficult the full exploitation of the possibilities of socialism, who affronts the principles of the system, slows things down and pulls it back into the past, who gives birth to the bitterness of unfulfillment. Seeing, undertaking, and solving our internal problems, we are conscious of their external conditioning and mutual dependence.

We are living at a turning point of history. At the end of our century fundamentally deep processes are increasing in force and intertwining. These include revolutionary, transformatory social changes and also the dynamic development of science and technology, the enormous changes formed by the genius of man and also the unfathomable, indeed fatal, threats. How to take advantage of this opportunity, overcome these threats? This question concerns everyone who thinks responsibly. The road can be indicated only by socialism, as it showed the way in the question of social justice, crucial for the liberation of working people; as, during the World War II, in Poland and many other countries it tied the question of national liberation to social liberation; as the idea of the equality of all nations was inspired by the great anti-imperialist and anticolonial movement. So also today, socialism is in a condition to reply to the basic dilemmas of the world at the end of the 20th century. We find it in the subject matter and historical achievements of the 27th CPSU Congress. Its nature is the unity of the three most important matters of today: Social progress, scientific-technical revolution, and peace. It constitutes a call to the activity of the masses. Our party solidarizes itself with the Leninist, innovatory achievements of the CPSU, Comrade Mikhail Gorbachev, with your creative and consequential activity. [applause]

It is precisely with this long-term trend of socialism for which you are boldly paving the way that we join the path of socialist renewal mapped out by the Ninth Congress which is being implemented by our party. In this trend we see the basic mainspring for the speedier growth of the material and spiritual strength of our community, a fact which has also been well underscored by the congresses of the fraternal parties. Nevertheless, the tasks facing Poland are particularly difficult and complex. Whereas other socialist countries have in past years been going forward at varying rates but even so in a resolute manner, and have invested and modernized their economies, and have been increasing their national income, we have sustained tremendous damage and have lost much valuable time. Some of the difficulties have a deeper foundation.

In our country the process of socialist and civilization-based transformations is both advanced and delayed at the same time. This stems partially from our particularly complex conditions and historical interdependence. This confirms the Leninist thesis that all nations will reach socialism -- this is inevitable -- but that they will not all reach it in the same way. Each will contribute something original to this or some other form of democracy, to this or some other variety of dictatorship of the proletariat and to this or some other rate of socialist transformation of various spheres of public life.

Revolutionary changes to the political system have been carried out in Poland. Great material and spiritual things have been achieved in our 40-year period. The country's economic potential has been increased manyfold, and the country's social structure has been deeply altered. The civilization-based and cultural standard of living of the nation has increased. In the majority of spheres, strong and durable foundations of socialism have been created. The socialist method of production is predominant. State power is of a socialist nature. A Marxist-Leninist party is carrying out the leading role.

Socialist processes in the sphere of people's rule, self-government at various levels of social and civic activity are at an advanced stage. However, if one measures them against universal principles of socialism, it turns out that in Polish reality front-ranking and sometimes unique solutions which are looking to the future are found side by side with the remains of previous formations. The year 1986 and sometimes even the embryos of the year 2000 are to be found side by side with 1945, 1939 and even with the legacy of considerably earlier eras. The old deep division of Poland A and Poland B has been really overcome.

However, in another sense, particularly in the sphere of human attitudes, modern thought, a feeling of civic responsibility; good management and efficiency, literal and moral purity clash with mental and physical idleness, incompetence and waste, and parish, in the same street and often in the same enterprise, school, and institution. We are aware of all the blocks and barriers but at the same time we have enough energy to not only overcome them but also to lengthen our stride and strive to climb higher and further.

The party draws the optimism which we bring to the 10th Congress from its faith in the working class, from its link with that class. History has confirmed Ludwik Warynski's words that the liberation of the working class from economic political, social and moral oppression has to be done by the workers themselves. Indeed, it was first and foremost they who were the causative force of our revolution, built the new system, and strengthened and defended it. Even in moments of greatest embitterment the working class retained the idea of socialism. It is collectively striving for a harmonious bonding of the principle of social justice with speedier economic development and progress in living conditions, with greater factual participation in governing the country. The 10th Congress should provide a clear reply to these strivings.

We base our optimism on the strength and performance of the worker-peasant alliance. Polish peasants have made a great contribution to the building of People's Poland which has opened a wide road for social advancement for them. Today their most important task is to ensure self-sufficiency in food for the country and their objective is higher social, material, and cultural standards of living in the countryside. The party will actively support all efforts in that direction.

The optimism of the party comes from its confidence in the Polish intelligentsia. Decimated by the aggressor and torn apart by various orientations, it took an active part in the birth of the new reality, joined in the building of the socialist homeland. Today its obligation is to pave the way for scientific and technical revolution and progress in civilization and culture. Our party will create conditions conducive to this.

An inexhaustible source of party optimism is the fervent patriotism and the creative strength of our people who want the homeland to be rich, well-managed and secure; and who want it to strengthen its proper place among other countries of the socialist community, Europe and the world.

These, comrades, are the most important premises on which we base the formulation of the program for the further socialist development of Poland, a program of tough tasks and vast work.

The materials prepared for the congress and tomorrow's report by the chairman of the Council of Ministers, which are devoted mainly to economic topics, illuminate comprehensively the entire subject matter of the congress. With your permission therefore, comrades, the Central Committee report will first and foremost be devoted to commenting on that which, in our view, is of greatest importance, that which requires special emphasis. At the same time, it is an attempt to summarize the abundant achievements of the precongress discussion. Many valuable observations and suggestions were conveyed by members of party echelons, numerous party and nonparty representatives of science and practice, as well as from voluminous correspondence addressed to the Central Committee and the first secretary. The report, therefore, has a very wide circle of coauthors. I pay cordial thanks to all of them.

Comrades, the Supreme, national task is to intensify developmental processes, make up the lost time, shorten the distance separating us from the scientific-technological and economic leaders. We will be valued in the world to the extent of our measurable value.

No country is really valued just for its historic fame. The fundamental issue is the ability to mobilize all forces and reserves in aid of a modern, effective development. In socialism, the economy should serve the people, their material prosperity, the comprehensive development of the human being. The fulfillment of this primary aim can be seen in our country with particular clarity. Under the influence of the collapse, the gap between needs and the degree of their fulfillment has deepened. Their leveling demands a significant increase in the economic capacity.

During the precongress discussions, two very significant trends manifested themselves. The first expressed fears about whether the socioeconomic intentions presented are realistic. The second emphasized that they had little ambition, that they do not measure up to expectations. The demand was made to raise tasks and accelerate the rate of growth. The Central Committee shares the realistic intentions of the first trend and the bold, aggressive nature of the second trend. We must go forward more quickly. Acceleration is a historic necessity. It constitutes the primary concept of the draft party program, its strategic assumptions. It is at present being realized in the perspective plan, whose draft is being directed by the government for social consultation.

Acceleration, however, is not simply the pursuit of quantative indicators. It is a complex process of deep qualitative transformations in all spheres of life, in the material sphere and in the social consciousness. The conditions for this are being created. The economy is moving onto the tracks of development. The selfless work of the miners, the effort of the whole working class, the farmers, the intelligentsia, the fundamental reform and social stabilization, contrary to the calculations of hostile centers and contrary to the predictions of pessimists, have brought tangible results. If, then, we take into account that the point of departure is the depth of the economic crisis, the obstacles put in our path, we will have achieved enormous progress.

However, weaknesses of various kinds occur, phenomena which hold us back and even drag us backward. The task for the immediate years ahead is to consolidate the developmental foundations, to restore equilibrium, to alleviate the most acute disproportions. This is the first phase of the acceleration. I will not illustrate the tasks connected with it in figures, because they are included in the draft 5-year plan, which has been given to delegates. It outlines the scale of the general growth trend [dynamika]. At the same time, it assumes that the sectors which contribute to modernizing the economy must develop more quickly than others. For example, the production of the electronics industry, the electrical engineering industry, the precision engineering industry, the engineering industry, and some artificial fiber industries will grow 1 1/2 to 2 times as rapidly as industry as a whole. It depends on our work, on a fundamental breakthrough in efficiency, when the rapid development pace spreads to the whole economy, when it enters a new, higher phase of acceleration.

The vital need to go over from extensive to intensive methods is a rule of the current stage in the building of socialism. In the past too, this will was often declared; however, with the increase in employment, raw materials and materials at that time, an increase in the national income and the standard of living was possible, although improvement in efficiency occurred very slowly. Today, when resources are shrinking, when we work shorter hours, when we are paying off our debts, efficiency is our economic sine qua non -- the fundamental condition for us to live better as a nation.

We have emerged from collapse, utilizing -- not even fully -- simple resources. We have hardly begun to tap the complex resources. This is a very difficult matter. Efficiency is not obtained for nothing. Those who give of themselves more effort, more discipline, more initiative will forge ahead. Those who stand still must lose; they must come out poorly, in order for the whole of society to do better. Those are the realistic conditions of this kind of new social accord, which the party presents to the nation.

Acceleration is a means to the fuller meeting of society's needs. Much attention in the precongress discussion was paid to what to achieve and how. Various kinds of interests and postulates clashed in this field, in fact; those of different branches, plants and milieux. Summing up the results of this discussion, the party recognizes the most important things in the immediate years ahead to be: feeding the nation better; improving housing; modernizing education and expanding its material base; progressing in health and environmental protection; just division and consolidation of the principle to everyone according to the results of his work.

Comrades, conditions are being created to improve the feeding of the nation. The degree and pace of improvement depend upon progress in agriculture, in industries that serve agriculture, and in food processing. The party confirms the special importance of the whole food complex in the country's developmental strategy. A stable agricultural policy that has been adopted by the party together with the United Peasant Party has been tested in practice and will be continued. That memorable slogan -- a green light for agriculture -- remains in force. There are more and more people to be fed every year, but the amount of arable land continues to decrease. Thus, the matter of better utilizing this national wealth is becoming acute. The enormous range of production results achieved in identical or similar conditions point out how vast the reserves are, and realizing these depends upon economic incentives, supplies of means of production, and above all, on improving the qualifications of farmers and on agrotechnological progress and the speeding up of land integration. The complete execution of these tasks calls for, apart from central support, social support including the backing of the party members in rural areas. The food industry is a bottleneck of the food economy. This causes great losses of agricultural products, particularly milk, potatoes, and fruit. People's councils and local administration bodies must more vigorously undertake to establish a network of storehouses, cold stores, and processing plants. Mature ventures will be supported by the state investment and credit policy. Thanks to the revolutionary changes achieved by the party, a historical act of socioeconomic liberation of the peasant has taken place. He received land and full civil dignity, and we are currently approaching a new stage of further progress in the countryside. By equipping the countryside with better means of production, machinery and household equipment progress is taking place, and the present is being liberated from the hardest drudgery. Our party's inalienable class obligation also concerns improving the conditions of access to education and culture, supporting farmers in their struggle to be freed from bureaucratic burden, cliques, and bribetakers. Agriculture must be a strong link in the whole of the economy, as there will be no modern Poland without a modern countryside.

Consequently, the party favors family farms being productiviely efficient and culturally mature, and for them to achieve a higher level of productivity and social engagement, through organic ties with the whole socialist economy and through the development of rural self-government. The leading role in the creation of progressive organizational-productive solutions in the countryside must be played by strong, socialized farms; specifically, state farms and agricultural production cooperatives.

The lack of home ownership is a severe problem for thousands of Polish families. The National Socioeconomic Plan sets a considerable, nearly 20-percent increase in the number of homes to be built and also a 50-percent increase in modernizations. This will bring a certain improvement in the housing situation toward the end of the 5-year period, which will be a good starting point for a fundamental acceleration in the 1990s. However, progress has been a little too slow thus far. It is necessary to admit that we have not been sufficiently effective in solving this problem.

Discussions last rather too long, ideas chase ideas, prescriptions follow prescriptions and yet we are still building too few homes. It would, however, be a great simplification if the matter were reduced to subjective brakes. Home-building cannot be isolated from the whole economy, unfortunately. It cannot be separated from the level of national income, from the development of materials production, from the acquisition of land, and the exceptionally costly social infrastructure. These factors decisively influence the number of homes constructed. At the same time this does not absolve the situation in the building industry itself.

Numerous negative phenomena are manifested here: waste and idleness, low discipline and labor productivity, and simultaneous with all this, quickly rising earnings. For this reason, too, construction is expensive, even more expensive. The elimination of these sicknesses lies in the hands of the building industry workers. The profession of the building worker had an exceptionally high status in the initial years of Peoples' Poland. It was a model of tempo and diligence. This profession's ethos must be restored. This is exceptionally necessary for the country. The costs of a home are rather too high for the average family to afford, which makes the state's help essential. At the same time, we share the opinion of experts and the representatives of society that the principles of rendering this aid must be more variegated, according to the area, technical standard, and form of ownership. The proposals enunciated by PRON, trade unions, youth organizations, which seek a full use of the initiatives, energy, and enthusiasm of young people in particular, also deserve support. Those who want to purchase a home, whether individually or through a cooperative, or in the workplace, should be given help in every respect and not forced into positions of faithful expectation. The housing problem will be at the center of the party's attention. Fundamental, coordinating, and dynamic initiatives are being sketched out, which are patronized by the Housing Council, and personally directed by the premier.

The next priority, a great social and moral obligation, is to assure the conditions for a many-sided, physical and mental development for the exceptionally large number of young people. The needs are enormous. It is assumed that 3,500 new school buildings will be built each year during this 5-year period.

At the same time schools have to be constantly better equipped with modern educational equipment, including computers. More nurseries, sports and recreation establishments have to be built, and the holiday, sports and tourist base must be expanded. It will be easier to meet these tasks by merging state financial means with public ones. That is why the national deed of helping the school undertaken on the PRON initiative deserves wholehearted support and the widest dissemination.

The protection of health is one of the great tasks of social policy. Even in the recent most difficult period, we expanded its material base by commissioning for use more hospital beds than in any previous 5-year period. In the present 5-year period we shall commission even more. Also there will be considerable improvement in supply of medicines and medical equipment. At the same time a comprehensive approach is indispensable, as is consolidation of all links of health protection, prophylactic, medical care and rehabilitation. In particular what is extremely important is the improvement in health culture of the society. Still, there are sharp contrasts. In the age of heart transplants, the diseases of dirty hands remains. The most urgent tasks are the implementation of a program of mother and child care, care for the elderly and disabled, the combatting of civilization diseases, alcoholism, and drug addiction.

In recent years there has been an extensive discussion of the health service. Internal -- both material and personnel -- reserves were pointed out. Better use of the medical base, rational relocation of professional personnel, freeing doctors from bureaucratic burdens, care for the good name of this noble profession -- these are all matters of great social importance.

Wide and costly measures have been taken to prevent the degradation of the natural environment, which is a secondary consequence of the development of civilization. The 5-year plan raises outlays for this goal by almost 50 percent. Their share in the national income increases threefold in relation to 1980. This is a lot in this difficult time for the economy.

We all share the responsibility for the state of environment, for its present condition and the condition in which we shall leave it. Investments alone are not decisive, but also complete observance of the law, and everyday general respect for nature. I talked about it extensively during the recent precongress conference in Warsaw. The issue also has a wide international dimension. Poland expressed it at the United Nations General Assembly forum, by suggesting inter alia, the adoption of the principle of free flow of experience, licences and technologies in environmental protection. It would be conducive to more efficient counteracting of ecological threats to humanity.

Comrades delegates, there are no more clear indicators of the implementation of the principles of social justice than wages, their level and interrelations. The general level of wages, people's incomes, have to be strongly related to social labor productivity. The attempts to avoid this law, in the seventies and in the beginning of the eighties in particular, are well known. We feel their severe effects still today. The practice frequently abuses the principles of socialist distribution. In our country, there can be found high profits from low work effort and efficiency. Conversely, genuine effort and recognized achievements do not always ensure that ends can be made to meet. If a less productive worker, and at times even an idler and a waster, gets the same or a similar wage to that of a disciplined and efficient worker, then frequently the waster acquires more in practice than he produced, and this is deeply unfair. In essence, this constitutes a characteristic form of exploitation and outright parasitism.

Many completely unfounded, frequently glaring disproportions have grown out of the shaping of wages, their relation to professional groups and specialities. They often hurt those people bringing great advantages to society, people of high qualifications and recognized status. This arouses dissent. The so-called -- the method of so-called work evaluation should aid in creating the awareness of wage disparities. Its initiation is an important task of the economic administration and of the trade unions. The promoter of its dissemination should be the party. The guarantee of order in wages is not only an economic but also a social problem, a moral problem.

Workplace incentive systems are the way to creating order in wages in enterprises. The conditions have been created, possible, incidentally, only in socialism, for the workforce itself to construct the most appropriate principles of remuneration. A number of enterprises have taken this road -- for example, the Feniks works from Lodz which introduced new regulations, also achieved an increase in employment, a 44-percent increase in work productivity and an economically justified improvement in conditions. Unfortunately, thus far not everyone is making use of this opportunity. To this day, enterprises which, in total, employ around 40 percent of workers have not introduced this system. A number of enterprises, with the approval of passivity of ministries, have treated this operation as a way to the increases of wages without a real growth in results. In many cases, work norms have not been brought up to date, nor has this been done formally. Frequently, the inappropriate proportions are maintained or are corrected only to an insigificant degree. It is clear that it is easier to brandish a concept of justice than to consistently fulfill socialist principles at home. This demands a decided opposition to particularism and, in essence, the interests of those who work less well.

One must expect, and quite simply demand, such boldness from members of the party and from party organizations. Collective consumption is of great importance to socialism.

This is one of the fundamental conditions for equality of [word indistinct] in the most difficult years we have tried to defend them, among others at the expense of production investments. Nevertheless, considerable shortages and difficulties remain. The necessity to more strongly stimulate the motivation for work in present conditions justifies a somewhat higher dynamism of individual consumption. This does not mean that the level of collective consumption will be reduced. What is more, the resources allocated to spheres of particular social importance, such as education and the protection of health and natural environment, ought to increase more rapidly than before. It will be possible and necessary in the next stage to extend the scale of collective consumption and to enrich its form.

The equitable allocation of social services is a very important and sensitive matter. The origins of many of them go back to other times and to other conditions. They continue their existence thanks to inertia even though they have lost their meaning and have become an anachronism. In addition, certain legal ways of doing things make it easier to obtain services by cheating or by encouraging people to avail themselves of assistance instead of doing it themselves. In particular, instances of people abusing sickness benefits and various kinds of unjustified privileges meet with public criticism. This needs to be put in order. For obvious pieces of a fundamental nature the government ought to work out a comprehensive draft of changes. Following wide-ranging consultation, especially with the trade unions, the draft of such changes could be submitted at the second national conference of PZPR delegates.

The principle of less for those for whom benefits are of marginal importance and more for those who truly need them should chart the general direction of activity. In a nutshell, one should narrow the list of benefits in order to deepen and augment their effectiveness. War and labor veterans are the first ones to merit assistance. It is our moral obligation to ensure worthy conditions for those who have done so much for the country. The annual boosting of old-age and other pensions will halt the reduction of their real value, but the problem will not disappear with this. The elimination of the so-called old portfolio will be continued. The party is all for carrying this out as quickly as possible. Concern for the elderly cannot restrict itself solely to payments of money.

There are never enough efforts to ensure that our recent comrades in work not only are, but also have a feeling that they are respected and needed. The works have to ensure conditions of professional reactivation for those who want and can work. In addition, party organizations self-governments in housing districts, and youth and social organizations should derive benefits from the veterans' vast experience to a greater extent than before. Socialist social justice is, on the one hand, honest awards for work performed today or efforts during past professional activity, and on the other, the prevention of taking into possession the results of someone else's efforts. A considerable number of people in our country are of a bourgeois mentality -- greedy, fanciers of easy income cynically neglecting duties and public interests. They do not create goods, do not offer services, but are making their income on profiteering, money-dealing, pseudo-tourism, and theft of public property. These are alien bodies in socialism. They must not feel at ease in our country. Their dealings are and will be fought with increased severity. [applause]

We confirm the principles of a policy worked out together with the Democratic Party, which guarantees stable conditions to honest craftsmen who, in effect, are the allies of the working class. There are examples of getting rich beyond a socially acceptable extent in the private sector as well. In many cases it is the result of violating rules and various wheelings and dealings.

Such practices are and will continue to be punished. Also, other extensive and flagrant incomes in this sector have to be more effectively and efficiently controlled by, among others, the system of recording incomes, the taxation policy, and the adaptation of the employment level to the specific needs of particular industries and the kind of social needs they meet. However, it is indispensable that there exists stronger competition from medium and small state and cooperative enterprises. Their development requires acceleration. They do not have to be less effective and less flexible in activities; they can meet the needs of the moment. There are good examples of such competition and there should be still more.

Fairness in income would have been illusive and the improvement of living conditions impossible had the market been poor and unbalanced.

The present situation, while significantly better than a few years back, causes the public many severe difficulties and troubles. In the current 5-year period there will be an improvement in the supply of food and improvements in its range and quality. It is also necessary to balance the industrially manufactured staple goods market. Broadening the range and eliminating the situation where goods just appear in shops instead of always being available there depends on increasing production for the market, on changes in the structure of production, and on raising its standard. The development of the trade and services network and improvement of its operation should be accelerated. We appreciate the hard work of the trade employees, but it has to be organized better. This is a task not just for the central administration but first and foremost for local authority bodies -- that is, for party councillors and our comrades in self-governing bodies also.

Comrade delegates, national income, its level and rate of growth, determine how demand is met. That is the foundation. It is not possible to get around the dialectical relationship between creation and distribution. The reform is making this truth gradually gain public understanding. Its strengthening forms the essence of shaping the economic ethic in society, as there continues to exist specific asymmetry between the general knowledge and its application, especially in respect to self, and between pronouncements and practice. Everyone agrees with the general interdependences but logic falters at the moment of applying for social resources. Then every investment is justified, postulated pay rise deserved, imports indispensible, and subsidies necessary. Everybody supports the reform and calls for it to be done more quickly, but they most readily spur someone else in the flank. Demagogy frequently overcomes economic reason and even common sense. Separated from economic possibilities, pressure for corrections in distribution inevitably transforms into egoistic scooping towards self and increasing one's own share at any cost. But what of it, if the national income is less if it is greater as a percentage while in real terms being smaller.

For this happened at the beginning of the eighties. Hence, the close relationship between distribution and generation can never be underestimated. One ought to demand from government and executive bodies, but also help them. One should demand a clear concept, efficient organization, and correct decisions. One should help with respecting economic laws and efficiency and discipline.

The connection between abundance and efficiency is a rigorous and an unquestionable one. Its execution in practice is the basic function of the reform. However, it cannot be ensured solely by mechanisms and systems. It must also be present in the everyday practice of the party's work, in all areas of social life, in ideology, propaganda, science, and culture -- everything for this front, everything for intensification and efficiency! Its chief levers are the acceleration of scientific and technological development, structural changes, the elimination of waste, an improvement in the quality of production, and an extension of participation in the international division of labor.

A new, higher quality of economy depends to a decisive degree on scientific and technological progress. We share the opinion of the third congress of Polish science about the need to concentrate on frontline spheres such as microelectronics, computer sciences, comprehensive automation, material engineering, biotechnology, and atomic science. The party emphasized at the same time, the class motivation of scientific development. Mechanization, automation, robotization should also enter areas where conditions are particularly arduous and dangerous, including areas of hard physical labor.

There is no shortage of spheres in which Polish science and many representatives of it are the forefront of the world. We have great potential in scientific centers, in schools of higher education, and in the research and development base of industry. We also have an economy that calls, in many areas, for an outright and radical modernization. Hence, scientific and technological development should occur quickly, and in a way, naturally. However, this is not happening. Only recently some changes for the better have emerged. The crux of the matter is receptivity and the need of enterprises for innovations and organic integration between science and industry. Economic mechanisms and organizational solutions must serve this aim better than they have so far. Apart from other things, they should take into account an indispensable amount of risk connected with the undertaking of bold and innovative ventures.

The basis for a positive assessment of a man cannot just be that he has not done anything badly if he does not try to do something better; most depends on the engineering and technical cadres in enterprises, on the activeness of inventors and rationalizers. It is they who have made an outstanding contribution to Poland's economic advance and, in recent years, to overcoming the effects of the restrictions and import curtailments. We appeal to them from the 10th Congress platform to accelerate the modernization of our economy by creative activity. This is today a great, patriotic task; its implementation creates a particularly attractive opportunity for young people. Youth organizations should become the inspirers of a great social movement in support of the scientific-technical revolution. Inventions -- even the most valuable, unfortunately -- meet various fates.

Two years ago, the report that an original fiber optics technology with high utility parameters had been worked out at the Lublin Center for Optics and Telecommunications Technology received great publicity both in Poland and abroad. The achievement of the Lublin inventors did not, however, arouse the appropriate interest or support from potential producers and users. Time has passed and progress in mastering production is small. As has happened many times in Poland, the purchase of a license has begun to be considered. The obstacles piling up before inventors and inventions are a lively subject for public opinion. Alongside inefficient machinery, obstacles are created by a play-safe attitude and red tape, also by puffed-up pseudo-authorities blocking solutions that are not their own, or by taking the credit for someone else's achievements. Whatever the cause, the result is the same: irrecoverable losses, delays.

In the face of these facts, the party will not be indifferent to this particular kind of harmful activity. No rational idea or invention must be squandered. We will fulfill this obligation, for the doors of party committees will always be wide open to innovators, to the creators of technologies, to the precursors of progress. Party organizations and echelons will be their friendly protector and go-ahead promoter.

The situation in the exchange and popularization of all kinds of leading experiences is not good. We have in the country many superb, modern, and effectively functioning enterprises and outposts, many splendid organizational and technical solutions.

Guests from the whole world come to know them and they evaluate them highly; meanwhile, literally next door in the neighboring enterprise, parish, or town, nothing or almost nothing is known about them, or in any case, the idea is not taken up. An operational, wide popularization of the best experiences resting on knowledge of the matter is a party obligation, a grateful field for the work of our comrade scientists, engineers, and economists.

In the precongress discussion the need for the acceleration of structural changes in the economy was especially stressed. It was indicated that its structure is not modern, not very effective, and does not assure competitiveness in overseas markets. It is often felt that these changes should find expression only in a fast radical limitation of the production of the means of production for the first sector and an appropriate increase in the production of the means of consumption, sector two. Generally, that is correct, but currently our greatest difficulty rests on the fact that the branches producing the means of production do not supply the economy with sufficient quantities of modern machines and equipment, materials necessary for, inter alia, precisely the production of the means of consumption.

This then constitutes the fundamental limitation of development. Structural transformations must then have a deeper dimension than just the relations between the sectors of production. They can be carried out by the acceleration of scientific-technical progress and the technological rebuilding of the economy, also by an increase in participation in the international division of labor. Fundamental structural changes cannot be introduced from day to day, but they cannot be deferred either. We must start with the means that we already possess, modernize existing potential, create the conditions for an accelerated development of the branches and enterprises that are already producing modern products, and decide about progress. Structural changes are not just a matter of decisions from above. The obligation of the center is the specification of the directions for transformations and adapting investment and credit policy to them. The task of enterprises is implementing changes in the profile of production, modernizing it, accelerating the process of renewing products, and adapting to the needs of the market and of export better.

Thus, this process is meant to harmoniously link up undertakings on both a macro and micro scale. They must all fulfill strict effectiveness criteria. One can manufacture (?well) and in a modern manner not only steel but also microprocessors. It is not only important what one manufactures, but, above all, at what cost and whether the article really is modern. The government -- with the coparticipation of the Supreme Technical Organization, and of other organizations and associations -- must urgently carry out a thorough examination -- a kind of certification -- of development programs, technologies, and goods from individual sectors from this point of view. One must eliminate everything from them that does not meet the criteria of modernity, including everything that does not ensure a decidedly lower consumption of materials and energy.

A true reserve lies in the better exploitation of machinery and equipment. Enterprises carry out barely half of the technologically required preservation work on an average. They are loath to spend money on the prevention of corrosion, which causes tremendous losses. It is necessary to expand the services repair base and the training of teams responsible for the running of machinery and equipment, and to tighten up on the nature and implementation of sanctions against persons not observing the regulations. Wasting resources is not an inconsiderable reserve, if one can put it this way at all; people point to ravaged railway wagons, to concrete spoiling in the rain, and to street lamps that remain lit during the day. There is also great wastage due to incorrect investment decisions, out-of-date projects, low-quality goods, the nonexploitation of production assets, and excessive employment.

It transpires that it is easier to put one's finger on those guilty of losses amounting to thousands [of zloties], but as regards millions, often big millions, responsibility goes to the wind and bureaucratic anonymity takes the place of people with precise names. An increasing quantity of low-quality goods is the same as acceleration, but in reverse gear. The poor quality of output causes huge losses. This is of particular significance in a situation in which some enterprises are not working at full steam as a result of material shortages. The social losses are not any smaller in size -- demoralization, getting used to the notion of botched work, and agreeing to do things any old way. The statute on quality is not functioning effectively, but it is not only a question of regulations. It is correctly stressed that concern for quality must be demanded at every work station. In this it is not only those -- who tolerate botched work who are guilty of defective output. The consistent application of financial sanctions; of price, taxation, and credit instruments; and the pointing out by name of those responsible must result in poor-quality output not being worth anyone's while.

The party makes it incumbent upon the government to act firmly in this matter. But in this matter, too, we must start with ourselves. The list of those producing defective goods cannot contain party members. The achievements of the work done by whole generations contained in the production assets store up great reserves. In many branches of the processing industry, machinery is exploited by barely one shift.

We cannot allow this, particularly in modern branches, where the maximal exploitation of potential is a condition for keeping up with progress in many spheres of the economy; the accessible source of labor for the next shift may be the transfer of workers from outdated and inefficient enterprises. This is possible particularly in great conglomerates. The state administration and party echelons should pave the way for these processes.

However, the fundamental issue is to make use of work time. In industry, around 1 and 1/2 days of work time in every week are lost for various reasons. So, there are reserves. Their exploitation cannot, however, take place in accordance with one pattern. Where cooperation is at fault, one works more effectively with instruments of agreements and economic mechanisms. Where regulations are violated, where there is terrible work organization and discipline, it must be implemented with full consistency. Incompetent and indulgent directors and all guilty parties must be made strictly liable.

A necessity and, simultaneously, a great opportunity, is the growth in export. The current situation is highly unsatisfactory. We play an exceptionally small part in world trade, one of the main barriers to our development. With the current systemic solutions -- even if they are not all perfect -- enterprises producing for export may achieve tangible advantages, greater resources for development and for wages. Despite this fact, a number of them, instead of making export efforts, are following well-trodden paths. The duty and, simply, the question of honor for worker collectives must be to guarantee that Polish products are competitive on foreign markets. This occurs, for example, at the Polkolor Works in Piaseczno. The proper development of color television picture tubes production has ensured the enterprise a strong position among exporters; foreign orders are even overtaking production capabilities. The growth in work productivity and, following this, in wages confirms to the work force that it is following the correct path. Securing new markets in conditions of ever intensifying competition and maintaining [one's position] in them demands many-sided, comprehensive activities calculated for the long term -- namely, proper state investment, credit, and licenses policy.

The rules of the game for exporters, established by the center, must be stable. The promotion of our export must be done not only by specialized organizations but also by the whole diplomatic service, by all those who participate in international contacts.

We are carrying out an extensive economic and scientific-technological reorientation in the direction of our natural, socialist partners. This demands keeping pace with transformations in technology and production being achieved in the USSR and other socialist countries. Cooperation within CEMA is, and will remain, the bastion of our foreign economic relations, the fundamental source of the advantages stemming from this.

This truth is eloquently confirmed by the experiences of the last years, when the fraternal help of the Soviet Union and also the good-natured attitude of the other countries of the community made it easier for us to overcome the severest difficulties.

Poland actively participates in the process of making efficient the mechanisms of socialist integration. The strong foundations of the deepening of cooperation within the bounds of CEMA constitute two-way, long-term programs reaching to the year 2000. This is an important collective achievement of the countries of our community. We are actively looking for the decisions contained in these programs to find a full reflection in concrete agreements and contracts in economic practice.

We stress with satisfaction the successful development of direct, working cooperation by Polish enterprises and scientific and research institutes with their equivalents in the CEMA countries. Cooperation with Soviet organizations is developing particularly intensively and fruitfully. The close links of enterprises, including the exchange of labor brigades -- especially of youth -- is a particular example of the introduction of the idea of internationalism into life.

Poland seeks the development of economic cooperation with all countries of the world on the basis of equality, partnership, and mutual benefit. We categorically declare ourselves in favor of the elimination of political pressure in the character of illegal restrictions, embargoes, and other discriminatory practices. Life, development, cannot be shut up in a cage of protectionist duties and other barriers. We regard as necessary in international economic relations the working out of and adherence to principles of economic security. We gave eloquent expression to this from the platform of the UN organization.

Our indebtedness is a very serious problem, especially in the capitalist countries. It arose as a result of a policy that was erroneous, both as to the scale of the credits drawn and, above all, as to the methods of their exploitation. We lived beyond our means. The then cheap meat today costs us very dear. An export potential that would enable a fast repayment of credits and awaken the economy to intensive development was not created on the basis of the credits. An important influence on the current level of indebtedness and also the possibilities of regulating our obligations came from the breakdown of the economy at the start of the 1980's, the significant increase in interest payments on the credits, and the restrictions placed on Poland. The losses that we suffered for these reasons constitute a sum equal to half our indebtedness.

This was the greatest economic blow ever dealt to any country in conditions of peace. At the same time, it was a case unique in history, where the creditor deliberately made it difficult for the debtor to pay off his debts. In recent years, we have gone from taking out credits to partially repaying them. However, as a result of the incomplete regulation of interest, the debt continues to grow. We face the dilemma of stopping this process at all costs or recognizing that the most important thing is to create conditions for the development of the economy, to agree to a limited increase in debt for a few more years.

The PPR Government has many times declared that Poland wants to respect its financial obligations, but paying off the credits cannot take place either at the expense of a drop in the standard of living in society or by halting development. The long-term interest of society is served only by such an approach. It does not conflict, either, with the well-conceived interest of our creditors. Of course, the fundamental solution of this problem can occur only by way of a decided increase in the export capabilities of our economy. Nobody will do our work for us here.

Comrade delegates, a fundamental condition for mobilizing all levers of efficiency is the economic reform -- undertaken on the party's initiative with the creative involvement of the Economic Reform Commission. In an extremely difficult situation it has contributed to a considerable extent to overcoming the crisis, to initiating developmental processes. It is defining the profile of the economy with ever greater clarity and also people's behavior in the work process. There are many enterprises and work forces that have understood and are putting the reform into practice in an absolutely model way. This is proof that its fundamental assumptions are correct, that it yields results, and that it is proving itself. Unfortunately, this does not occur everywhere. As a result, a breakthrough in efficiency has not occurred. There are many reasons that have contributed to this. We introduced the reform under conditions of a violent drop in production and a profoundly disturbed equilibrium.

For social reasons the economically justified price increases have not been introduced. In an imbalanced economy, the mechanisms to set wages and prices appear not to be efficient enough. They have made it possible for some enterprises to achieve favorable financial results without making a proper work contribution, reducing costs or implementing technological progress.

These weaknesses were made worse by giving in to the pressure of demand. All these, apart from objective factors such as even more expensive methods of obtaining raw materials, the surplus of import over export, and import price increases contribute to inflation that is still high. It has wide and destructive effects. It strikes particularly the weakest groups, many children, families, senior citizens, and retired people. This is the source of many social, and particularly, market troubles. Speculators are preying on inflation and those benefit who manipulate prices on goods and services produced by them.

A sharp struggle against inflation is in the best interest of the working class, all working people. A strong currency is a condition of a healthy economy and efficient functioning of economic reform mechanism. A weak currency means the weakening of motivation for work, the dissipation of social energy, and a rampant foreign currency cult. The zloty may only be strengthened as the result of comprehensive action. A draft of an appropriate program should be prepared by the Polish National Bank. However, most important of all in the struggle against inflation is the restoration of economic balance, linking wages to production, increasing market production, reducing costs, and putting price relations in order. Solving these problems and creating a balanced market for consumer goods and services is a priority of economic reform in the present 5-year period; this is the main substance of the second and decisive stage of the reform. The government will undertake necessary actions in this direction.

Competent groups and authoritative social forces generally support the radical acceleration of reform. We have to answer this question: What precisely is involved? Is it the increasing number of legal regulations? No. Sufficient regulations are now in force. Is it the speedier access of reform to working brigades and working posts? Surely, yes. Is it the dissemination of experiences of best enterprises, a general education about reform? Undoubtedly, yes.

It is very important that all enterprises benefit from the experiences and reform achievements of the best enterprises. But most of all, the issue is to be more consistently effective. This is the essence of the matter. This has been demanded by experts and a considerable part of the public. However, that means an extremely important and responsible choice must be made. That is, either we reach the balance more quickly while accepting consequences related to it -- a radical reduction of subsidies, the rationalization of prices, the strict observance of the self-financing principle, the strict regime of saving and labor discipline; receiving in exchange a good market, increased motivation to work, and therefore quicker growth in national income -- or, by not accepting these rigors we will live longer with the burden of market shortages, the producer's advantage over the consumer, a permanent threat of speculation, weakened work incentive and reduced prospects for rapid development.

So, should it be more difficult today so that it will be easier tomorrow? Or should we prefer to accept not only half-means but also partial results? No doubt, the congress will express its opinion on this matter.

The effectiveness of economic mechanisms and the pace of restoring equilibrium depend closely on the quality of central planning. Its role in formulating strategic goals for socioeconomic development, defining the pace and proportions of growth, and balancing the basic resources is obvious. At the same time, independence and self-financing of enterprises and their responsibility for results must be consolidated. This is inseparably connected with the consolidation of employee self-management. It is a host of an enterprise, as a part of the national property. The choice -- with or without self-management -- can only be answered unequivocally: with self-government.

It is the party's duty to take care of complete utilization of self-managing rights of the workforce and to support and aid their activity which is compatible with the reform combining interests of the employee collective and the whole of economy. It is an important task of the party organizations to take care of harmonious and creative cooperation among management, the employee council, and trade unions, as the specific composition of a socialist work enterprise.

The party was the initiator and promoter of reform. It will continue to outline the main directions for its improvement, control their implementation, and strengthen efficiency -- the factor that determines the country's future.

Comrade delegates, since the first postwar years, Poland has had a record birthrate in Europe. In 1946 we were less than 24 million. In 1986 there are 37 1/2 million of us. According to credible forecasts there will be 40 million in the mid-1990's. Since the beginning of this decade an average of 700,000 children have been born every year. This is an optimistic fact, but also a great duty and a great responsibility. It requires great means. During the period 1980-85 Poland's population increased by almost 2 million but employment in the socialized economy decreased by 325,000. One cannot count on its perceptible increase in the next few years. Such are the objective demographic trends. Many enterprises report workforce shortages. Some even say that this is a barrier that cannot be overcome. On the scale of the whole state, however, there are enough people. The problem is that they are utilized in an extravagant fashion.

The rationalization of employment is therefore essential: A fundamental streamlining of organization; the guaranteeing of the functionality of all structures of social life. There are workplaces and institutions where what two or three people are doing could be done by one person. Many units are duplicating the work of others. For example, in the Building Construction Plant in Stalowa Wola, with basically unchanged overall employment, the number of engineering and technical staff has dropped in 4 years by more than 20 percent. In the Building Construction Plant in Zielona Gora, overall employment dropped by almost 10 percent but office staff increased by 13 percent. We observe such phenomena not only in production plants. One can move many administrative and office staff to the front line, to serve the customer, in trade and services.

There is a sizeable number of full-time posts linked with no substantive activity in cooperative and social organizations, in scientific research establishments, in publishing houses, in editorial offices -- even in the theaters. Either subsidies or prices are increasing in the light of this, often both. As a result, the costs boomerang back on society in any case. True, Parkinson didn't concern himself with Poland's affairs, but it turns out that the laws he discovered operate strongly here too.

Organizational weaknesses, sometimes outright anomalies, also contribute to squandering the capital of human knowledge. It is estimated that one in every five engineers is doing work unconnected with his education. For example, in one of the coalfields, a metallurgical engineer is the inspector of sports facilities; someone with a degree in agriculture is the deputy director of a materials economy plant; and a musician is a mining machinery inspector. [laughter] In another plant, a Master of Arts is a senior economic inspector; a Master of Evangelical Theology is a senior organizational and legal inspector. There are considerably more examples of this kind in different branches of industry and ministerial departments. And a broader comment: Too many engineers are employed in supervising current production. Technology, which has already been mastered, often no longer requires their participation on such a broad scale. It is, however, essential to expand the machinery for preparing new technologies, products and solutions; that is, a staff which is thinking of the future.

One of the causes of the growth in levels and people in the hierarchical management ladder is a paresis of horizontal promotion. In order to reward somebody, raise their earnings or satisfy them men are promoted vertically. So far, in general, people are not asked what they have achieved but what office they have held. There is even the bitter saying that in order to be right, first you have to get a position. We have to reverse this. Frequently obsolete and nonfunctional structures, expanded beyond the real needs, cause quite a few good specialists to work below their professional and intellectual capacity. And if they are wasting their time and effort and getting into bureaucratic habits, that is frequently determined not by their predisposition but by organizational conditions which do not allow them to use fully their knowledge, intellect and energy, and to find creative satisfaction.

The Ninth Congress initiated a deep economic reform. The Central Committee proposes that the present congress initiate a general review -- a kind of x-ray -- of organizational structures and work posts throughout the state. [applause] This great, comprehensive undertaking should support the economic reform, reveal loopholes and shoals and release various brakes.

Good organization is also an essential condition for the efficient and fruitful introduction of new technologies and for raising the efficiency of management. This concerns:

First, completing the reform of the central level through finally adjusting its functions to the modified system of management and shaping the role and the structure of the ministries as executors of government policy in respect of particular areas. The process could culminate in passing an act on the Council of Ministers.

Second, optimalization of organizational solutions, depending on the technical and economic characteristics of particular branches of the economy. This especially concerns the problem of the so-called above-enterprise structures which have to be differentiated in a justified way and based on clear criteria of economic accounting and efficiency.

Third, rationalization of employment and correct deployment of forces inside enterprises and cooperatives, starting with management, through departments and teams, right down to the work stations.

Verification has already commenced in some enterprises. This has proved both useful and effective. The experiences of, among others, the Radom Radoskor indicate how much can be gained in this way. The ally of verification will be the team subcontracting organization of work, also called the team of partnership groups. Self-management teams constitute a constant pressure arising from the rank and file for improvement, for the growth of work discipline and as a result, also, the improvement of its results. For example, in the Hydrobudowa Slask Jeden engineering works enterprises, after the introduction of the principle of the signing of agreements between the enterprise directorship and teams formed voluntarily, work productivity rose by 50 percent and the project completion time was shortened by over 30 percent.

Partnership groups also aid in the humanization of work, in nurturing a feeling of collectivism, of worker comanagement and coresponsibility. This is a very good road for deepening the socialist character of production relations. We spoke of these matters at the 16th worker-plenum; and at the 23rd plenum, this was set as a task. Yet there are still few work teams. Experimentation is lasting a little too long. We were also sluggish in this matter in the Central Committee, in voivodship committees, in the government. We need more consistency in breaking down objective difficulties and above all, the subjective resistance accompanying this so very necessary process.

A no less important aim of the review would be organizational improvements; that is, organizational and functional improvements from top to bottom in the state administration bodies, in communal services, in trade and services, in education, culture, in health protection and also, the correct and economic situation of the personnel apparatus in public organizations, financed or assisted by the state budget.

We do not present ready-made solutions. They should be worked out during the review. But we already know today that some are understaffed and others are overstaffed. Thus, along with the removal of redundant structures, offices and posts, the need for the strengthening of others, for example in the services area, will no doubt manifest itself. The essence of the review is not mechanical cuts or apparent savings but the greater efficiency of the solution in force as regards the requirements of social life, the economic reform and scientific-technological progress.

If the congress approves the concept of a general review, all levels will be faced with an exceptionally difficult and complex task.

After all, this is an area of great social sensitivity. Resolution and a firm hand and at the same time tact, a discriminating approach and objective concern for all those to whom it is not only necessary to suggest, but also for whom it is necessary to ease, and sometimes to quite simply prepare the transfer to another position or to different work corresponding with their capabilities and qualifications, will be needed.

In these matters we are counting on the cooperation and assistance of self-managements and of the trade unions. Above all, the active participation of the milieux involved, openness of work and the freedom of discussion, and broad consultation, especially in the press, which will enable everyone to have his say and to put forward proposals, suggestions and initiatives will be needed, however. We appeal in particular to the leadership cadres to carry out honest self-assessment. This will without doubt reveal various spheres and areas where changes are necessary and will suggest appropriate solutions as well.

Success will depend on how consistently we, starting with the Politburo and departments of the Central Committee and ending with primary and section-based organizations, are able to influence the correct course and effectiveness of the review both at ministries and factories. In this matter we should start with ourselves, from the level of the Central Committee.

The appointment of an authoritative party and government commission on the pattern of the commission for matters of economic reform but having, however, the necessary decisionmaking and executive authority will be necessary to properly direct such an extensive and complicated undertaking. We are counting on appropriate participation in these activities by the Patriotic Movement for National Rebirth, people's councils, workers' self-government, trade unions and also on the help of men and learning from the Polish Academy of Sciences, educational establishments and industry-related institutes. The involvement of the scientific society [as heard] organization and leadershp of the Polish Economic Society, of the Supreme Technical Organization will be very helpful. Their representatives, above all, should enter the composition of the party and government commission.

Those enterprises and institutions which will carry out an authentic and not superficial attestation, or have already carried out one, will become valuable allies. There are, and will be available, both the materials and also the experiences and potential of the Supreme Chamber of Control and of the Workers-Peasants Inspectorate. We do not expect a lightning breakthrough or an immediate overcoming of the deformations which have been building up in layers over the years. A review of such an extensive scale will require persistent work.

Its results, the evaluation of the degree of the introduction of recommendations, the particular report on the organizational state of the state and the economy could be one of the key points of the deliberations of the second national delegates' conference.

Comrades, most management cadres, especially at higher levels, hold their functions on the recommendation of the party. This increases manyfold our responsibility for cadre decisions. Correct ones give the party more trust; erroneous ones undermine its credibility. People's Poland has created new structures of management. The cadres functioning therein have brought in a priceless, truly historic contribution: socialist transformations, the advance of the country's civilization. In this process, they educated themselves, developed, matured.

There were also, however, errors. Some cadres had their heads turned by being leading powers. The leading role of the party in the state was sometimes conceived as a personal right to undertake arbitrary, voluntaristic decisions.

The weakening of the democratic mechanisms gave birth to arrogance and self-will. The time came to pay a painful political, and moral bill for this. Despite this, the predominant group of cadres passed the hard examination. They tempered themselves and grew strong.

Great changes also took place. At all levels, up to the leading functions in the party and state, there came many new people seeing their tasks anew. New does not automatically mean a person can work in a new fashion. The condemnation of rooted bad habits does not automatically mean they are overcome. The good do not just displace the bad. One can sometimes notice the appearance of new people but old practices.

The main principles of the PZPR cadres policy have been in force for nearly 3 years now. We evaluated their implementation at the 25th plenum. We supported the Politburo resolution passed in May. New principles indicate a comprehensive approach, to link the selection of cadres with their periodic assessment, their constant education, and rightful rotation, overcome the hermeticism of cadres policy, bring them out from offices in to the light of day, and attain social approval for the decisions undertaken.

Personnel policy is not just moving pieces on a chess board. It is a duty of the party to catch those that are best and push development especially of young. ideological, prospective personnel; that is to observe the principles of rewarding innovation, efficiency, and dynamic action. Subordinates are or become as their superiors. People with low qualifications are not going to advance those that are highly qualified, those afraid of risk will not attract those that are bold, those rooted in their habits will not promote innovators, and those devoid of ideals will not seek support in the ideologically-motivated. Therefore, the higher the post -- the higher consistently-observed demands.

We have several categories of managers. The first group is that of excellent professionals and efficient organizers situated in the right place. They are our guards -- those who are pulling the country forward. They should be firmly supported and their solutions and experiences disseminated. In particular we must strengthen the positions of managers. Of those, the most valuable are the ones who cooperate well with the party organization, employees' self-management and trade unions while not losing any of their exactingness and consistency. Their field of initiative, right to innovation, and sensible risk should be expanded. It is better to correct the impatient than to permanently prod the ossified, passsive, and indolent. There should be no attitude of let nothing happen. The point is, above all, that as many good and new things as possible should happen.

The second personnel group consists of people who are frequently equally superb but who are not utilized to the maximum in their offices, are often undiscovered, blocked in, and working at only half their potential energy and strength. We should uncover these people promptly and efficiently, promote them and give them opportunities.

Finally, the third category of managers are the mediocre, sluggish, and lacking initiative. They should be moved without delay in accordance with their true capacities.

Such are the criteria and objectives of managerial review that should form an inseparable part of the verification. We count on the founding bodies, along with party organizations and self-managements, to formulate in the course of the review thorough and fair assessments. Managers, after all, are a particularly valuable command cadre of our economy.

Personnel reviews constitute a new quality -- practical achievement of the new personnel policy. They play a significant educational role. However, the evaluating teams are not infrequently characterized by softness and indulgence positive assessments are formulated in excess. Negative ones, and especially disqualifying ones, come with difficulty. Therefore, the reviews must be greater in depth, more thorough and more unequivocal in their conclusions. The selection of management personnel in the economy through competition has verified itself. Managers appointed in this manner in their decisive majority pass the test. It sometimes also happens that only one candidate enters, that the competition is sometimes resolved prior to its official start, and that own people, in an unjustified manner, are treated preferentially. Distortions of the idea of competition should be eliminated and the method itself spread to other walks of life -- that was the decision of the 25th plenum.

In the last few years many personnel powers have been transferred from higher to lower echelons, first and foremost to the basic party organizations. We emphasize once again: In the party, in the state, and in the economy no one has the right to reduce these powers. As for party members, the situation is perfectly clear: No one can take a leading post without a positive reference from their parent basic party organization which has also been consulted as widely as possible among respected nonparty members. The new powers of the basic party organizations mean both greater coparticipation and greater coresponsibility.

There can be no room for the assessment that he may not be a very good manager, but he makes up for this by being a good comrade. Only those who work conscientiously, manage effectively, and achieve good results can be said to really belong to us. Recommendations are given but can also be taken back. Everyone who has had one withdrawn has an obligation to the party to resign immediately from his post whether he works in the state administration, the economy or the cooperative movement. Nevertheless, each change must take place in a clean and cultured atmosphere. It will always be the case that not everyone will be up to the requirements and that not everyone will be able to cope with them as time passes. A change is sometimes a punishment, but more often than not it takes place during the natural course of things and is connected with a transfer to another position, retirement, state of health or personal reasons.

The manager Poland requires is one who combines knowledge, innovation and organizational and executive skills with a sound ideological attitude and high personal standards. There is no shortage of such people in Poland: They are in the party; they are also in the allied parties; and there are many of them who do not belong to any party. It is our task to resort to them on an increasingly broad scale and to promote the best ones. A nonparty person who is devoted to People's Poland must have every opportunity. We have nothing to fear from this. This will only serve to strengthen the party and Poland. Lenin wrote that, rising from the ranks of the mass of workers, peasants and intelligentsia, are many able and honest nonparty people with whom one must fill some of the more important positions in economic construction, while retaining for the Communists the right of necessary supervision and determining the direction.

On the other hand it is also necessary to have supervision by nonparty persons over Communists. This is a guideline the party should heed with firm consistency. [applause] [At 0915 GMT the congress takes a 30-minute recess, after which Jaruzelski resumes his speech]

Comrades, the socialist state is the widest plane of the collective existence of the Poles. It is a common work and common good -- the only real base for the sovereignty of our homeland. These truths in recent years have indeed assumed a burning topicality. The whole dramatic nature of the situation, numerous weaknesses and threats concerned the state most of all, directly and tangibly. We have defended our common home.

We have undertaken multifarious efforts in order to make it strong, modern and efficient. Only the law-abiding and democratic state can be a state that is really healthy and strong. A model of socialist democracy, which was particularly confirmed by the 17th plenum, has not been shaped once and forever. Recent years have brought plenty of new solutions. It is our desire, that these initiatives materialize, that they become a useful contribution to the international practice of building socialism. In the past it was declared many times that we all had to learn democracy. Today, indeed we all are learning it, though with different fervor and effect. This is not easy learning but gradually it brings results.

The PZPR's allied cooperation with the ZSL and the SD is characterized by political culture. In the hard test of recent years cooperation has materialized and hardened. There was a considerable increase of the role and authority of the Sejm, its legislative activities. The PZPR Parliamentary Club had its considerable share in that. Future development and the consolidation of functions of the socialist parliament now require the stepping up of efforts for widely understood control of the implementation of the laws, executing state discipline. There is nothing worse than the situation when legislation says one thing and life another. The competences of local elected bodies people's councils, and self-management of urban and rural inhabitants have been considerably expanded.

There are many good examples of using these rights and possibilities. But the created potential still has considerable reserves. A survey has shown that a majority of people's councils are using only part of their statutory rights. Now they should want to use all their statutory authority. Various bad experiences bore fruit here. These are the effects of formalism and paternalism, of which underestimating and directing people's councils and other bodies was the practice for many years.

It does not seem that this was only history in some cases. The authority of the councils is a value of state, system significance. The party should consolidate it consistently, taking particular care that the superior role, in relation to the administration, of representative organs, expressing itself, inter alia eloquently in the institution of the vote of acceptance of accounts [absolutorium] should be fully respected. Chief attention will be directed to the nearest rung of authority to the citizen: The People's Councils [RN] and administrative bodies at the basic level.

The concept of additional powers is taking shape, for those cells that have worked to deserve them by their initiatives and good management. In turn, Voivodship People's Councils [WRN] should be assured greater financial independence and a responsibility for the economy commensurate with it, especially for local industry, including for the much-desired construction of small industrial and service plants in rural areas.

The slogan: A self-governing republic was an anarcho-syndicalist, counterrevolutionary nonsense. The idea of local, worker, professional self-government is a great, vitally important norm of socialist democracy. Tenants' self-government has gained considerably wider potential to influence the solution of the problems troubling local communities. Its bodies -- estate and house committees, parish elder's councils -- are becoming the extended arm of the People's Councils. Together with the development of worker and cooperative self-government and other self-government institutions, this means the broadening, as never before, of the possibilities of developing social initiatives and the participation by citizens in cogovernment of practically all spheres of social, economic and cultural life.

Full and fruitful use of these possibilities creates the broadest plane and the best school for the functioning of socialist democracy. This goal is being achieved in practice in a fairly uneven process. Local party organizations, to which many experienced, socially sensitive comrades belong, should play a stimulating role in it more effectively than hitherto. Self-government does not in itself safeguard against autocracy. There are cases of its organs serving as a smoke-screen for lawlessness. Inter alia, this relates to some of the branches of the cooperative movement. We express ourselves in favor of a strong position for and permanent development of this movement, closely associated with the workers' tradition. With this aim, one of the important acts of the renewal was introduced, a wide-ranging, democratic cooperative law. Recent years show a clear growth in the cooperative movement, its serious, useful achievement.

We cannot not but notice deformations that also occur, cases of bureaucratization contrary to its purpose and essence, the deprivation of the members of certain cooperatives of a factual influence on their activity. Sometimes the cooperative law is applied so that the chairman is sated and the supervisory council gains.

The increase of the social factor role, action to counter the abuse of the independence of the cooperative, is a very important function of their self-management. This demands constant support from the party organizations and cells. One of the valuable sides to our situation is constituted by the very widely developed [words indistinct], circles, and clubs. They tie in to the best Polish traditions, social activistic passion, and group work.

Conditions are maturing for particular associations to acquire wider rights, among others taking on or supplementing certain tasks fulfilled previously by the administration. So, for instance, the League for the Preservation of Wildlife [LOP] could possibly act as a side in cases involving environmental pollution; or Consumers' Federation could have further rights in quality control. In socialist democracy, the strength of workers' participation, voice, and influence on all social processes has a fundamental significance. It was not a case of coincidence that the recent political conflict flowed to the surface of life in the costume of a union and so the greater significance to the development and systematic growth of class trade unions. The party is and will remain faithful to the principle expressed in 1982.

The trade union movement cannot and will not be either an extension of the administration or an antisocialist political grouping. The new unions must be independent and fully self-managing. A strong, authentic trade union movement is imperative to the working class, to working people, and to Poland. A partner who openly tells the truth, who criticizes, who even protests -- but also protects the state's interests -- who is concerned about increasing the national income, and who takes on the burden of coresponsibility for unpopular decisions when they prove to be necessary suits the socialist authorities. We will cherish the ideological-political unity of the trade union movement like the apple of our eye. Its division is to put working people at odds with each other, to manipulate them under the guise of defending their interests. We expect party members active within the trade unions to set an example of active and effective trade union work. The duty of party echelons and organizations is to seek the opinion of the professional movement, to take its views into account, and to strengthen the position and prestige of this most popular organization [pol-najbardziej masowa organizacja] of the Polish working world.

Diverse possibilities for participation in public life are created by consultations, by their universal and public character; this is the seeking of opinions and discussion, social education, and the shaping of attitudes and opinions.

Behavior must ensure that every participant in the consultations is convinced that -- even when he finds that the decisions do not reflect his opinions -- he has not wasted his time, he has not been neglected, and he is needed. Opinions that are not accepted do not remain without influence because they are visible signals. Of course, it is not possible to debate every matter endlessly. What is important is not, after all, for the bodies of the state authorities to avail themselves of consultations to find in them an alibi against responsibility. Consultation should be an element encompassing all of society in the decision-making process, a characteristic form of self-control of the specialist factors. The ideal of consultation and its extensive application constitutes a valuable achievement of the socialist renewal. It is necessary that, strengthened by the popular legislative solution, it should take deep and permanent root in our political system. This concern for the permanent influence of social opinion on the activities of the bodies of authority was a duty placed on us by a resolution of the Ninth Congress. It is served by soundings of public opinion conducted by specialized centers.

With this idea in mind, a public opinion poll center has been founded. Some voivodship party committees have set up their own teams to conduct research and make analyses. Together with the centers already in existence, a whole scientifically shaped system has been established. A valuable source of information has been added on citizens opinions, assessments, and feelings. It is a duty of party and state authorities to learn about the better and better utilization of the new, extensive possibilities this research provides.

Now, having introduced in recent years abundant, political and institutional instruments of socialist democracy, it is most important to implement what has been discussed, coordinated, and decided. We need both more democracy in collective thinking while reaching decisions and more consistency in implementing discipline.

In order for such a policy to succeed, direct contacts of representatives of authorities with society are of serious significance. Recently, the readiness for open and direct talks with the work force, with various social milieu, and simply with the working people seems to have weakened. For this, genuine discussions, including the ones disseminated by mass media, and a polemic is unceasingly needed. We successfully went to meet it halfway in a situation incomparably more difficult. Consequently, we should return to these experiences even more today. One must talk to the people, patiently explain, or even argue, but be among the people, act among them, as well as listen to them time and again.

The Central Committee estimates that conditions are now ripe for the further development and enrichment of instruments for socialist democracy. First, before the coming elections to the people's councils and the Sejm, we should analyze on the basis of the experience so far, the possibility of further extension of the democratism of the electoral law. Second, to strengthen the protection of citizen rights [spoleczny rzecznik praw obywatelskich] proposed by the PRON, appointed by the people's councils and cooperating with the prosecution offices. Third, along the lines of positive experience of the Sejm socioeconomic council, the purposefulness of appointing an identical body at the voivodship people's councils should be considered. The socialist renewal finds wide-ranging reflection in the changes of the structures of our state organization and the legal system. In this process relevant constitutional amendments will be needed. If it is possible to achieve this following relevant research in 1991 on the 200th anniversary of the historic 3 May, it would be very good.

Comrade delegates, the law in Poland expresses and protects the interests of the working class, the working people, and the socialist state; it ensures the social order and equality of citizens.

That is why the rule of the law has to be treated with utmost seriousness and must always constitute the object of the special care of the party. Law-making and its application must correspond to the principles of rationality, democratism, and socialist justice equal to all with no exceptions. There must be nobody beyond control, evaluation, and criticism. The law and the rule of the law are the mainstay of the Republic. Our legal system has been modified in depth in the recent past.

The setting up of the Constitutional Tribunal and the State Tribunal was of great significance, as was the strengthening of the Supreme Administrative Court; the restoration to its due place and strengthening of the quality of work of the Supreme Chamber of Control [NIK]; the setting up of the Council of Ministers' Committee for Observance of the Law, Public Order and Social Discipline; and the strengthening of the Prosecutor's Office control over decisions by state organs. The usefulness of the amendments made in many spheres of the law is being proved worthwhile in practice and in its adaptation to today's requirements. Socialist law and order is obtaining increasingly broad, social and civic support. Social workers, people's assessors, court guardians, members of People's Militia Volunteer Reserve [ORMO], deserve special recognition. The Worker-Peasant Inspectorate [IRCH] is functioning effectively. The working class has obtained, thanks to it, a new sharp weapon. Previous experience dictates: Behave with respect and recognition toward the activities of the IRCH, to the comrades who devote their effort to it -- extend their powers and view the assessments and proposals presented seriously.

The Central Committee thinks it essential to strengthen the authority of the organs of administration of justice and of prosecution and also to improve the legal system. The goal is a stable law, undergoing only absolutely essential, fully mature changes. At present, the surplus of regulations in force is to be eliminated. The lack of cohesion of acts of an executive nature with some acts with the rank of statutes must be overcome and that of regulations from the period of the reform with regulations of the mandatory-allocative system. This is a simplification of the highly bureaucratized, excessively complicated and burdensome procedures of settling citizens' affairs.

All institutions and their activities serving law and order must fulfil the supreme goal: To strengthen the observance of constitutional principles of the system of government; to guarantee the unity of rights and obligations; to work in the service of the state and the citizen, both being able, always, to get their due rights. The construction of socialist law and order would be brittle without a general knowledge of the law. With this intention, a program of legal and civic education of society has been drawn up. Various forms of educational, training, and preventive activity have begun.

This should significantly contribute to an increase in legal awareness and ethics. These issues are being introduced to a wider extent in party training. Law abiding activity by state bodies is of decisive significance. This activity builds up credibility and creates patterns of social behavior. Adherence to this principle must be resolutely demanded from all links of state authorities and all distortions from it must be fought against with full strictness. The party is concerned about the authority of administration. It also has its share in the socialist renewal. Significant structural and organizational changes have been made in the state administration. They should contribute to the higher and higher efficiency of offices and institutions.

Fighting against bad habits and eliminating formalism and sluggishness in dealing with citizens' matters is the inalienable duty of party echelons and the basic party organizations in institutions and offices at all levels.

The Polish Army has its beautiful pages in the history of our homeland as a cocreator and defender of achievements of the people's state, its independence and the inviolability of its frontiers. The traditions and the present day of the Armed Forces are filled with the service for the nation. Under the ideological leadership of the party they perform their defensive duty. At the same time, they participate actively in the economic life, cocreate scientific and technological development and educate and train highly qualified cadres. The trust of the nation is a priceless value to a soldier. This has found its proper confirmation in the very responsible fulfillment of the tasks of martial law and in the fulfillment of the historical duty to save the country. Our Armed Forces and their devoted staff, as well as all soldiers deserve words of cordial appreciation. [applause]

The Civic Militia and the Security Service officers have properly performed and are conscientiously performing the duty of defending the socialist state. The Central Committee has highly assessed their devoted, difficult and responsible service. It also expressed the conviction that the Ministry of Internal Affairs will continue to perform its duties conscientiously, guarding state security, abiding by the law, guarding public order and effectively guarding citizens' peace. The party has initiated the stepping up of the struggle for the purity of social relations and for the full respect of law. A wide front of legal pressure, as well as of preventive, educational and up-bringing actions against crime, deviations, including above all, drunknness, as well as antisocial behavior that prevents people to live normally, is being established.

These issues have recently found full reflection in the Sejm debate and resolution. Intensified combatting of pathology is already bringing about noticeable effects. There will be no light treatment in these cases. The party counts on rigorous actions of the responsible institutions and on the assistance and support of the working class, the opinion-shaping circles and the men of science and culture. We should continue to march along this road, consistently and resolutely.

Comrades, for the Marxist-Leninist party there is no more important case than the trust of the working class, credibility and authority in the eyes of the working people. This, above all other things, has been under the attack of the enemy, aware that the bond of the party with the masses is the decisive and sensitive point of our political system. Here too, we encountered particularly painful losses. The sociopsychological effects of the errors made have accumulated and the difficulties of everyday life also cast a shadow. The patiently and consistently implemented line of the accord and struggle does bring, however, expected results. This is proven by the course and results of the elections to the people's councils and the Sejm and this is also confirmed by the research of the public opinion. The most significant thing is, however, the practice, the active participation of the masses in the daily work, in the social activity, for the sake of the realistic socialist Poland. The evolution of moods and views and behavior is taking place gradually, but in the right direction. This is, however, a complex process determined not only by general factors but also by differences in climates in different milieus. Frequently it is decided on by individual situations, even accidental events. Hesitation and disappointment, lack of trust and passiveness -- these are often transitory states from the already perishing internal emigration to the various forms of participation. It is impossible to win them all, but it is necessary and possible to win the overwhelming majority.

Every gained person means a victory for us. A man who has been pushed away is a mistake. Without the conviction that people can change one cannot be a communist. The concrete state of the social consciousness is a reality, and one must not turn one's back on reality, one must transform it actively and wisely. The authentic transformations of human attitudes and views are hundreds of times more precious than the appearance of the unity proclaimed too much.

During early years of the people's authority, in conditions of deep divisions, and with the threat of them consolidating the then far-seeing policy of the PZPR paved the way for people of various outlooks to join the side of socialism. In retrospect this policy can be assessed much better, both the costs of sectarian departures from this policy, and its permanent favorable results.

During the dramatic test of recent years, on the side of the people's authority and socialism there were thousands of former soldiers of the Home Army [AK], Polish formations that fought in the West, representatives of the prewar intelligentsia, and even members of political parties which were then on the opposite side of the class barricade. The permanence of the state, the good of the Polish PR they considered to be the highest value.

The appraisals carried out by the party of complex phenomena and contradicting trends that characterized the former Solidarity movement appeared to be correct. Millions of people placed in the movement their hopes for realization of the slogan -- socialism, yes, distortions no -- for the success of renewal. At the same time it was the stepping stone and the milieux for actions of a multitude of antisocialist gamblers of the old and new generation, leaders and fanatics of counterrevolution, and also various renegades, including those miraculously converted. In one movement, the 21st plenum stated, there was at the same time a potential for socialist renewal, and a potential for antisocialist destruction. The retrograde and adventurist trend which prevailed in the leading bodies of Solidarity and in its rapidly growing apparatus could not be a line for the working class, and the way for the majority of participants in the movement. The extremists suffered defeat because they lost public support, they alienated themselves from the masses. Practice confirms that to the fullest extent: People divided yesterday, today act in unity.

The vast majority of former Solidarity members are active participants in public life. They are in the party, in allied parties, in the Sejm and People's Council and in the reborn trade union movement. They are also present in this hall as delegates to the 10th Congress. The line of accord is not an occasional declaration, not an idea for difficult moments, not a hasty tactical maneuver. This is the continuation of the best experiences of our party. We implement it and we continue to do so with full conviction and consequence.

We are not struggling for power. The power is, and remains socialist. We are tolerant toward views and opinions that are even incorrect and unjust. These can always be corrected and explained. Nobody here is or will be victimized for his convictions. Today, the struggle is on for Poland's future, for whether it will be possible to make up the delays and to prevent the threat of permanent lagging behind, to regain our place in the world, to meet the challenges of the present time.

As a result of this, we cannot, and we shall not, be lenient toward activities harmful to Poland. What did the opposition advocate? Work at a snail's pace, the approval of restrictions, yielding to and steering clear of revanchism, the popularization of internal and external emigration, instilling, particularly in young people, a feeling of hopelessness and pessimism, the paralysis of social activity; in other words, speaking in overall terms, a pernicous philosophy of the worse it gets, the better.

The underground and its various political supporters [kontrahent] were no longer grieving souls and aesthetes fascinated by pure democracy, or inexperienced people led astray. More often than not, they were a political agency in the service of people from outside who inspired and suppplied it. Today, both the harmful nature and hopelessness of acting in this way, are becoming increasingly obvious.

Having defined as broadly as possible the area of accord, we should thus observe all the more emphatically its inviolable principles and its impassable limits. The accord is not the agreement of everyone in everything with everyone. [sentence as heard]

At the present stage of the construction of socialism in Poland there also exist antagonistic contradictions. A barricade separates the exponents of contradictory interests and socialist and antisocialist, proworker and antiworker and progressive and reactionary attitudes. At the same time, differentiation between people striving sincerely toward accord is an objective fact. We acknowledge their identity; we do not blur their differences; we do not simplify the divisions. The thing is that these contradictions should not violate the framework of the constitutional order that is based on our political system and the Polish raison d'etat. Even important divergences can be neutralized through convergence in primary matters. Through the willingness to act together for the success of the sole Polish state -- the Polish People's Republic. [applause]

Accord is a dialectic process which, while altering the situation is in turn subject to the effects of this situation.

The 10th Congress of our party opens up its qualitatively new stage. The program the party presents maps out a historic opportunity for Poland, irrespective of what divided us and still divides us. Responsibility for the program's implementation is shared by the entire nation. Satisfaction over its results will also be common to us all.

In years gone by political accord was pushed to the forefront. Socioeconomic cooperation and accord as regards good work, good management and large-scale tidying up in our homeland are now of particular importance. The PRON builds and extends the platform of accord. Its roots can be traced back to civic committees of national salvation. During the most difficult moments, they provided an example of patriotic boldness and responsibility. Under the policy declaration of the PRON, there are signatures of the party, the allied parties, associations of secular Catholics and Christians. A total of 163 social, trade union, youth and women's organizations as well as various creative associations and unions, denominational organizations and national minority communities have joined. More than 1 million socially-aware people are active in the PRON. The majority do not belong to any party. From this hall we convey to all of them expressions of respect and acknowledgement. [applause]

The election campaign to the people's councils and to the Sejm showed just how many complaints there are and how many problems still have to be solved. At the same time it confirmed just how considerable the reserves are that can often be mobilized even without additional outlay. We are for the PRON patronizing the process of activities which make everyday life easier and for it having a real influence on the activities of both the organs of power and also of citizens. It is with this in mind that the initiative of setting up at the Council of State, with the active participation of the PRON National Council, a social consultative council and its corresponding organs in the form of civic convents at voivoidship people's councils has to be examined.

We also favor the PRON expanding the platform for asking questions and for expressing various opinions and doubts. The question may arise as to whether this is the creation of a kind of opposition. Such opposition to neglect, incompetence, bureaucratic nonsenses and to shortcomings in the state, social and economic mechanism is necessary for Poland. The party ought to be that opposition's driving force, stand at its fore and stimulate and organize it. Creative criticism is a valuable asset. Critical people are useful, if sometimes difficult partners in a dialogue, but they are our potential allies. They must be concentrated in organizations and supported. Not everyone who finds fault with us is against us and not everyone who praises us is with us. Conviction about our own infallibility is the worst adviser. When hearing a critical opinion it is the easiest thing in the world to say it is not true. We know from the past that there were lots of instances when rejected and sometimes even censured proposals and views turned out to be correct after some time.

The opponent is saying that our nation is disenchanted with socialism. This is not true. The decided majority of Polish society is, in its feelings and aspirations, in favor of our systemic aims. It is not necessary to agitate in favor of social justice, the quality of chances, social security, free education, and health care in Poland. The universal condemnation of greedy enrichment of living at someone else's expense witnesses that which is normal in capitalism, which constitutes the source of recognition and prestige, calls forth protests here. Thinking and speech in a socialist language decidedly prevails, though many are not always conscious of this. When they criticize various faults, when they get offended at the waste of the national good, when they want to influence what happens in their own work place or milieux, then that is not disenchantment with socialism, but the other way around. It is dissatisfaction when there is not enough of it, when deviations arise from its ideals. In this sense, the ideas of Marxism-Leninism have entered the national blood circulation, and socialist values and norms have become an undetachable component of social consciousness. This is our victory. [applause]

In recent years, humanitarian decisions were undertaken several times in relation to the perpetrators of certain crimes. With respect to the decided majority, these decisions were correct. They helped regain people who were lost and confused and straighten their life paths. The situation in the country today is characterized by the spread of accord, strengthening public order, and also continuing disintegration and social isolation of antistate groups. This creates the basis for the amelioration of legal measures against those who have carried out certain crimes. We received with attention the latest PRON initiative. The Central Committee judges that it may be possible to create one more chance to return to normal life the perpetrators of specified categories of crime against the interests of the state. Of course, adherence to the constitutional legal order will be demanded from them. In relation to the perpetrators of common crimes, the amelioration of legal rigors could include above all, women raising children, the minors, and the perpetrators of inadvertent crimes. It should not, however, relate to recidivists, persons who have committed atrocities, committed crimes while drunk, or those who are parasites.

Comrade delegates, the complexity and significance of the problems of mutual relations between socialism and Catholicism in Poland were already foreseen by Julian Marchlewski and other eminent activists of the Polish workers' movement. The creators of the PZPR were fully aware of it.

Both worker parties, the whole camp of people's democracy, came out in favor of loyal cooperation by Marxists, Catholics and those professing other religions, from the dawn of the new statehood. This found expression in the July manifesto.

It was at the foundations of the state's religious policy. The choice made at that time was a creative realistic response to one of the most important questions about our country's future: how to bring about socialism -- a system based on ideological and theoretical premises of dialectical and historical materialism -- in a society where the majority is Catholic? We favor a lasting continuation of that line in the future as well. This is expressed in the draft program. The implementation of the constitutional principles of separation of church and state; of freedom to fulfill religious functions by churches and religious associations; of freedom of conscience and belief; of equal rights and obligations of citizens regardless of their attitude to religion -- this is the great humanitarian and lasting achievement of People's Poland. The church is conservative by nature. It adapts itself to a changing world with considerable delay. How often humanity has forged ahead, making progressive transformations, in the face of the church's doctrine! By the same token, the definition and introduction into practice of solutions appropriate in Polish conditions has not been, nor could it be, an easy process without conflict. It did not occur without mistakes on the part of the authorities too but was above all a consequence of the burden of a past in which the church took the side of the moneyed classes. They also wanted to retain their previously occupied place. Before September [1939], Poland has not carried out many reforms typical of the great majority of European states doing away with feudal relics. Toward the end of the classic Soviet film, "The Man With the Rifle," the hero, an illiterate peasant, crossed himself and went to fight the Whites. There were millions of examples of a similar kind in Poland too: at the front, in defense of the people's authorities; during the agricultural reform; on the scaffolding of huge building-sites, up to the recent, hectic time in which the great majority of believers came out on the side of socialism.

If someone finds in religion a motivation for a worthy civic attitude, he is a valuable partner for us. We welcome with satisfaction the growing participation by Catholic associations and those of lay Christians in the country's public life; and by their representatives in the organs of authority. We watch with recognition the activity of those churches and religious associations that shape among their believers attitudes of respect for work, public property and for the state and the laws in force in it. They are finding the correct way to inscribe themselves constructively into the socialist reality. The majority of the Catholic clergy also fulfill their pastoral service in accordance with the laws of the socialist state. Those among them who, by their civic involvement and real participation in the efforts to benefit our fatherland, make a valuable contribution to a positive shaping of church-state relations, deserve particular respect.

This process is, however, coming up against various difficulties. The antisocialist clericalism articulated by some priests casts a shadow on the relations between state and church. It gives rise to calculations by anti-Polish forces on clashes, on conflicts between us. It harms Poland as a result. The fact that the expression of their beliefs by the spokesmen for various world outlooks is accompanied by discussion, polemic and dispute is natural. They should, however, take place on a level worthy of the end of the 20th century, without epithets, incantations and exorcisms. The party comes out unchangingly in favor of a good pattern of relations between the state and all religious beliefs. There is a sometimes difficult but -- and this is very important -- uninterrupted dialogue in progress with the Roman Catholic Church. Poland needs constructive cooperation between state and church. It could express itself particularly in joint undertakings to promote peace; in condemnation of the activation of revisionist forces; in increased concern for the natural environment and for protection of cultural monuments; in efforts to maintain the patriotic link between Poles living abroad (Polonia) and the motherland.

We should also look for possibilities for broad cooperation in combatting socialpathology in the struggle for the nation's moral health. Religiousness, however, very often does not go hand in hand. Unfortunately, with an everyday attitude, with social morality. Not without the influence of church doctrine have we been beating for years now the European records for the birth rate. In this situation, efforts toward shaping a work ethic and civic responsibility and concern for increasing the national wealth and for guaranteeing the material conditions for family life should not be left to the state alone. We therefore support expanding cooperation and, at the same time, reducing the sphere of differences and misunderstandings. We respect the church's identity and its status. At the same time, we expect and shall require respect for the Constitution and the legislation of the Polish People's Republic and for the raison d'etat of the socialist state. [applause] The Central Committee hopes that the 10th Congress will confirm this line.

Comrades, so that man may live better; that is, putting it in the briefest possible way, the objective of socialist development. But what does this better mean? We would not be Marxists if we were to ignore the material side of the standard of living. Raising it is the chief task of the party's socioeconomic policy. But the objective would be a poor one and the conception lame if living better were to mean exclusively the material side. There is also the question of social justice, equality of rights and opportunities and conditions for starting out in life, of a worthy, creative and colorful life. Cooperation with other people, a sense of belonging to a team, strength of ideological and moral motivations, striving to know more, understanding in greater depth, and working more actively are fundamental characteristics of the socialist way of life. These very values determine the great role of culture in Poland's socialist development. We interpret it broadly -- as a fundamental enrichment of humanist motivation, as an essential component of working and living in a community, of word and custom, of creating, nurturing and disseminating works of human talent, imagination and sensitivity. Great historic progress has taken place in every field of culture in socialist Poland. It has been a factor in the advancement of the popular masses and in the changes in civilization in the country. The most valuable works of mind and creativity have become daily visitors to Polish homes. That is an indisputable fact.

But it is not the achievements that we most want to discuss today but disparities, and, at times, contrasts and the most urgent tasks. Negligence that had already made itself felt previously was compounded equally by ideological and moral, psychological and material effects of the crisis. The phenomena of frustration and confusion appeared. A gulf opened between needs and resources. Things even got to the point of closing down some clubs and cultural facilities in the countryside.

We are not passive in the face of these phenomena. The Ninth Congress proclaimed new principles were specified for social codecisions about the shape of cultural life. Special recognition is due to the National Council for the Arts [NRK], set up 3 years ago, for the large number of initiatives and also for the effectiveness of integration activities. Among these are the recently produced report on the state of culture and also the prominent participation in preparing the program for its development.

It is vital that economic activists should show more understanding for the needs of culture, and people of culture more concern for understanding the hierarchy of needs. We are against boredom, and we favor good, mass entertainment and a varied means of spending free time. Resources must be found for especially important and urgent needs such as books, television, cinematography, audio equipment, and in the longer term video technology, but there must also be a greater responsibility in the disposition of money.

It must not be wasted on books and periodicals packed with graphs, or millions spent with a light hand on misconceived films when the number of cinemas is decreasing.

The Central Committee regards as a question of great weight the increase of the influence of works of high artistry on artistic tastes and likes, on life and interpersonal relations, on slowing down of the tide of literary garbage, kitsch, and ugliness. For instance, the weakness of transmission between eminent attainments in the plastic arts, applied art, the decorative arts and industrial production causes the aestheticism of products to play rather too small a role as an economic and cultural value. It is time to reactivate an industrial design council to treat resolutions in this matter seriously. We have the highest attainments in music, famous composers, and players, but on an everyday basis one lacks words for the neglect of music teaching in schools -- the invasion of deafening decibels is an example of disproportion. We have an excellent school of linguistics, great literature translated into many languages, and at the same time a colloquial language poisoned by stiff jargon, saturated by freak words and vulgarisms, offending by its poverty. The protection of the Polish language is not a matter of one action, but of lasting efforts by Polish teachers, schools, artistic institutions, mass media.

Among people connected with culture one generally does not appreciate the often nameless ranks of its activists, the role of work organizers in clubs and community centers, of librarians and booksellers, and finally, of enthusiasts who devote themselves to amateur art and popularize their own collections. Their effort calls for sympathetic attention. We emphasize the importance of the amateur artistic movement and social cultural movement, which create a wave of authenticity and the original color of the national culture. It is obvious that for its development, those who create artistic values are invaluable: writers, composers, artists and film and theater people. We want them to be with us. We want to help to overcome various grudges, mistakes and complications. Objective criteria are and will be in force: the value of a work of art, not the subjective ones -- past twists in the political biography. We have given much way to the opponent in the area of culture. To regain it faster, it is not enough to use great words. By repeating the word socialism culture does not become socialist. The question of how, with the help of culture, to advertise socialism is not relevant, but rather how, thanks to it, to create socialism, and, more actively implement it, experience it and make it more attractive; and participate in processes of spiritual, intellectual and moral development. The issue is that works of art and culture should be beautiful, esthetic and valuable, that they should enrich life and help the people to live. Culture in our history was usually a source of inspiration that brought Poles together around great goals. It paved the way for ideas of progress, and in the long and stormy period of the homeland's enslavement, it fostered patriotism.

Its leading social currents mobilized the generations around the idea of democracy and justice, won minds and hearts for the workers' cause, made a priceless contribution in the building of the socialist homeland. Such are the natural preferences of our cultural policy, and the criteria of actions by socialist patronage. The purpose of culture is to bring people closer together. Its peace mission enlivens international relations and cooperation in all domains. Society and the young generation in particular have to be wisely prepared for that. We are open to receiving from other nations anything that can enrich us intellectually and spiritually. But there can be no free entry for corrupting influences. All those complex issues cannot be solved by administrative methods, the more so in the situation of open circulation of information. A ban on what is harmful can simply make forbidden fruit attractive.

What can be done, to inure people to a contraband of this kind. Let there be a joint answer to this question by party and youth organizations, cultural institutions, and upbringing. We attach particular importance to expanding the presence of Polish culture in life of societies of socialist countries, and the culture of those countries in life of Polish society. With friends our art has the greatest auditorium, it is presented in full and most favorably. We reciprocate that and will continue do so on even broader levels.

Comrade delegates, the scientific and technological revolution and civilization changes, the young age of society and a high birth-rate create great educational challenge for Poland. The recent 24th Central Committee Plenum specified how to meet the challenge. The unquestionable educational achievements of the past 40-year period were compared with the post-crisis situation landscape, with the nature of present and future needs. This is the mission of education to play an advancement role. The direction of activities determines an answer for a basic question: What should a graduate of a Polish school be like? The system of national education from preparatory stages to higher schools, work of teachers and all allies of the schools must prepare for life and work in socialist Poland at the turn of 20th and 21st century. We talked about serious material difficulties for the schools. Ideological and upbringing activity requires a clear improvement. But there are also other occurrences in secondary and higher education in particular which cause concern. It concerns serious differences of social composition of pupils and students to the disadvantage of the children of workers and peasants.

Regional and communal limitations in access to education are also maintained. The party treats the duty of leveling the conditions of the educational start with the utmost gravity. This will be served, among other things, by the introduction of universal secondary general and equivalent education as a longterm precept.

Two approaches present themselves, it appears, in the discussions. Some emphasize the necessity of finding, leading and promoting particularly talented youth. Others emphasize the overcoming of inequalities of opportunity. The correct road is the skillful reconciliation of both. It is difficult to predict where talent will be born. It may just as easily be within the child of a worker as in that of an intellectual. The bard once said: Cursed be the people who murder their own prophets. Today, he would say: Cursed be the states that lose their own talents. A capital of talent is a particularly valuable asset. Our duty is to overcome the barriers blocking the road to studies for all those who are hard working and talented. I repeat: The Polish school must be elevated to the rank of the highest national institution, making this ideal a symbol of the party's particular concern, also because the forces and resources designated for education and for the quality and advancement of education are the most effective investments.

To meet contemporary needs, the school should teach people how to teach themselves for the whole of their lives. Permanent training is a condition of the realization of knowledge, which is devalued by the speedy progress of science and technology.

We must welcome people wishing to deepen their professional knowledge and receive additional education, and also workers who are rationalisers but also workers involved in the humanities. Thus, the initiative of setting up an association of workers' universities merits support. A concept of an open university, which has the chance of becoming an important echelon in the system of adult education, has also been worked out.

Thoughts about children and young people send us off in the direction of the family, the smallest but most important cell of the national organism. I order that respect for Polish mothers be expressed. It is precisely they who bear the main burden of a family's everyday worries, and at the same time they constitute the front line for the cordial work of bringing up children and young people. An improvement in the conditions of everyday life and the elimination of shortages in the market and services sector and of various everyday life inconveniences means above all saving time for mothers and wives, in other words practical steps making upbringing easier. All activities in this direction undertaken by the Polish women's movement ought to be actively supported by the party.

The lofty prestige of the school means above all the lofty prestige of teachers. The party greatly values this profession. It deserves high social acknowledgement. The shortage of cadres is a fundamental problem. We must train as many teachers as possible at the level of higher education establishments. At the same time we must set in motion a sufficient number of post secondary education courses that are organizationally connected with establishments of higher pedagogic training and which open up the way for an academic diploma.

Poland can be proud of a widely developed and multidirectional system of higher education. It has made an exceptionally valuable contribution to the socialist development of the country. It has trained numerous cadres of high-qualified experts. The future places particular demands on higher education establishments. At the 19th and then at the 24th plenary sessions, the Central Committee mapped out directions ensuring socialist upbringing content and the proper rhythm of honest work. Unity regarding the process of research, teaching and upbringing and its high scientific and social effectiveness are compulsory principles for higher education establishments. The directions and programs of studies require that they are adapted closely to the development needs of the country. In particular, effective training for front-ranking spheres connected with scientific-technical spheres is necessary. The matter requires comprehensive examination. During the drawing up of a long-term plan for the country's socioeconomic development, the appropriate body of planners and of representatives of science and practical subjects ought to embark on drawing up a forecast of cadre requirements that is as accurate as possible at least up to the year 2000.

There was a time when there was a key slogan: "Poland is a country of people who study." At the present time this slogan has not lost its topicality. To the phrase,people who study, one should just add, with application. One must not resign oneself to the fact that a great many students do not finish their studies within the time allowed; that as many as 70 percent receive during their exams only the grade of adequate; this is not a private matter: for it is not a matter of indifference to society what measure of knowledge the graduate brings with him when starting professional work, and what use he makes of such socially-costly time. The socialist higher education establishments should prepare and produce ideological citizens, highly qualified experts, people who have wide horizons, who have inquiring minds, who are ambitious and creative, whose passion for innovations has been stirred. The party wishes to share the care for this with all academic teachers.

At the end of the 20th century there is a stronger confirmation than ever before for the Marxist thesis that education is a many-sided element of creative forces, currently the most important source of progress and development. The educational policies have been improved upon. The Central Committee has paid much attention to the situation in social sciences, to the expansion of their role in the solving of political and social problems that exist at present, to the renewal and strengthening of the position of Marxism-Leninism.

The creation of a committee for science and technological progress provides new possibilities for the integration of the research efforts of the Polish Academy of Sciences, of higher education establishments, of educational centers which work directly for the national economy. Funds for research and development work have been greatly increased. The achievements of the third congress of Polish science are significant. Our party supports the full implementation of its decisions; it will watch over the development of science, over the insuring that its results have important social applications.

In 1946 the eminent and scholarly professor Jozef Chalasinski wrote: In the history of Poland there has not perhaps been another such moment which would, to the extent that the present time does, demand from the Polish nation such an intellectual effort and such a moral character. The Polish intelligentsia finds itself, without a doubt, at a turning point of its history. It faces a historic call which places before her new and great tasks, the scale and type of which we are at present still unable to assess.

These words sound as if they had been written today.

Comrade delegations, the leadership of the party is the principle of principles of our system. It is not a usurpation. It stems from unshakeable, historic and class, ideological and moral bases. It is the party that inherits the best traditions of the Polish workers movement. It is the party that has written itself into the glorious pages of the struggle for national and social liberation. It is the party that, for the good of the majority of the nation, led the revolution that gave the peasants land, that nationalized factories, that ensured that millions prospered [zapewnila awans], and that there was a general access to education and culture that made possible the work of renewal and the industrialization of the country. It is the party that organizes the working class to enable it to fulfill its historic mission of building and defending socialism. The party is, at the same time, its spokesman in its alliance with the peasants and the intelligentsia -- the spokesman of the ideal of national accord. It is the party, the force of the Polish left, that is the mouthpiece of the ideal of patriotism and internationalism, the guard of the Polish raison d'etat, the credible guarantee of the independence and the inviolability of the frontiers of our country, of long-lasting and secure alliances -- thanks to which, for the first time in 1000 years, we live in friendly neighborliness. It is the party that had sufficient ideological and moral strength and courage to disclose and overcome mistakes and distortions; to give, in practice; and to speak the whole truth, not to promise to be anything it could not be. It is the party that worked out a realistic program that drew a far-reaching vision of Poland's development, and that confirms in deeds its capability to lead in its implementation.

History teaches us life. The most important thing is that its students should be capable of making use of the whole complexity and richness of past experiences. We return in our thoughts to previous congresses, beginning with the congress during which, in December 1948, the creation of the organic unity of the working class movement came about. All these congresses have become part of history in different ways. How they worked out in practice, how far their resolutions turned out to be correct was decided by the Marxist-Leninist quality of the analysis in the context of the true state of affairs, by the value of their decisions and their conformability to the needs of the time. The majority were congresses whose gaze was fixed on the truth of life with their attention concentrated on the opinions and strivings of working people sounding in unison with the mature needs of development, realistic and far-seeing. But there were congresses which deliberated with muffled signals, cut off from the growing problems, with a partial paralysis of critical perception and innovative courage.

In this way there arose the subjective causes of social conflicts which interrupted and held back Poland's socialist development. The report on the work of the PZPR Central Committee Commission, set up to explain the reasons and the course of social conflicts in the history of People's Poland, tabled at the 12th Plenum, talks about this. The lessons of these must never be forgotten.

The point here is not infallibility, being totally and inalienably right. The party fulfills its role when it avoids mistakes and admits to those which occur, to set them right. The attitude to criticism is an everyday, practical measure of the party's credibility and standing. What hurts people must hurt the party. This is the fundamental condition of society's confidence in us. We have learned this diligently in recent years. Operating in every milieu of working people, the party puts the role and aspirations of the working class in the forefront. Still today, a section of workers is not convinced that its voice is carefully listened to. It is our duty to do everything to make them feel like full comanagers of their factory and country. The increased share of workers in the party's composition, the increase in its workers activeness, criticism, and influence on decisions is a matter of the greatest importance.

In the past term of office, a new quality was born. The workers together with the peasants for the first time formed the majority in the Central Committee. They broadly reinforced its commissions, they came into the Politburo. They are on various consultative and advisory bodies. In the whole party, the scope and authenticity of the worker participation in the authorities, in the aktiv, in the system of management has turned out and turns out in various ways. Let us remember this when we elect the central authorities and also in the course of the approaching accountability and election campaign.

Everything that happens in Poland affects young people. Everything that affects young people is of particular significance to us.

Every idea and political movement has the right of historical existence insofar as it is able to guarantee continuity between generations. We support that which the youth are born with, and, at the same time, the most valuable: the receptiveness of the mind, energy, innovative predispositions, opposition to that which undermines the unity of words and deeds, and what does not correspond to the spirit of the age. Confirming to their fullest extent the principles accepted at the Ninth Congress and the ninth plenum, we expect from the Union of Socialist Polish Youth, the Rural Youth Union, the Polish University Students Union and the Polish Scout Union an independent and not schematic activity coordinated with the aims and directions of activity of the party.

The course of the precongress campaign showed that the slogan of the seventh plenum, The same party, but not the same [partia ta sama, ale nie taka sama], is not a situational decoration, but a programmatic and directional directive that is being introduced into life. The same means: Marxist-Leninist, strictly tied to the working class, deeply grown into the Polish, patriotic-progressive tradition. And not the same: registering like a barometer the changing times, marking out the new boundaries of aims and tasks, setting itself against manifestations of torpor and stagnation, rejecting both bureaucratic centralism and pseudodemocratic anarchization, and so making real democratic centralism, understood in the Leninist way -- linking collegiality with individual responsibility for the tasks one is charged with.

One can direct and lead successfully only when one has a feeling of service with respect to the working class -- people of work and the nation. The role of the party does not become real automatically. It must constantly be confirmed; verified by the attitude of society to the programs and practice of the party, to the attitudes of party members. Without social approval it is possible, in the end, to manage, but it is not possible to successfully lead. At the same time, listening to a variety of opinions, taking them into account, the party must make a choice: support and implement that which is correct; reject and fight that which does not objectively serve the interests of working people. One must not be afraid of unpopular matters. To be in favor of something is at the same time to be against something. Cutting ourselves off from liquidatory, opportunistic conceptions of abdicating from the influence of the party on the functioning of the state and economy, we at the same time oppose tendencies to put it in the role of a superadministration, displacing and replicating the administration. If one does not see in it a live social movement and mainly a hierarchized structure, an organizational machinery, an office for affairs, one looses sight of the whole measure of being in the party. The party is a human community, a voluntary union of people who have one aim and acknowledge one road to it, who have chosen membership in the party as a conception for life, and who give part of themselves to the party and enrich themselves with the party.

The past, especially hard period has created a clearer than ever division between aktiv and the rest. It was unavoidable to work precisely so, through aktiv groups [as heard]. It has verified itself and hardened. Therefore it is tempting to continue working in this manner. The rest will, however, become more and more of a remnant if the parent organization ceases to be the main of activists' political work. A most important task is to strengthen the basic party organizations. Their voice, from those at factories to those at ministries, must be heard aloud. If it is supported with the views of nonparty members, it should count double. The strength of the party is its basic party organizations. More and more basic party organizations are active organizations, gaining support of the commmunity. There are also, however, quite a few of those that function feebly and do not fully implement party resolutions. The task set at the 20th plenum -- to focus attention especially on the weaker organizations -- remains fully topical. Responsiveness toward the basic party organizations should be the leitmotiv of the postcongress conferences, a directive for the whole term of office. The newly-elected Central Committee ought to be obliged to devote one of its early plenary sessions to issues of the basic organizations.

Comrades, the PZPR now numbers 2.126 million members and candidate members. It remains a mass party and is active in all sociovocational milieus in towns and in the countryside. Recent years will certainly be remembered as a period of raising the criteria for party membership. The demands were raised by reality itself -- the political struggle, the need to take up very difficult and often unpopular tasks. Those that did not want to or could not cope with these demands crumbled away from our ranks. We also raised these criteria ourselves, willingly, as experience has taught us what a burden for the party are chance, tottering and cowardly people. A year ago we closed a long and painful period of numerical reduction in party ranks. Their renewed expansion has begun. There is no more sensitive test of party credibility than the natural influx of people wanting to cast their lot with it.

The party wants to recruit new members, particularly workers and young people, but never again for the sake of statistical results, never those who look for a shortcut to a career. We do not need titular members. Speaking briefly, the issue is to become a real party of Polish Communists. [applause]

On a margin of some letter Lenin wrote with anger: "What party has this man really joined -- a communist or a ruling one?" This warning is constantly up to date. There are quite a few believers in our party ranks. They have proved, and every day prove, their devotion to socialism. The party as a whole is guided by historical and dialectic materialism, recognizes and disseminates the scientific world outlook and in this spirit it influences its members and shapes their convictions.

There is much to be done here. Universal talks with individual members conducted as a part of the congress campaign have confirmed great advantages of this method of party work. In order to strengthen the characteristics of the party in dialogue with the people, the Central Committee suggests conducting them [talks with individual members] twice in the coming term in office: Before the national conference of delegates and before the 11th Congress.

In the past 5-year period our aktiv went through an extremely difficult test. It has experienced, thought over, and understood much. It has made an enormous ideological and moral effort. It has proven that we do not agree with returning to the old and the compromised -- during the course of life -- practices. However, we are aware that such a danger does not diminish with the passing of time. To some comrades, coming out of a bend to a straight road means a return to the old ruts. Socialism has many enemies. However, those who talk about socialism much and do everything to the contrary do an equivalent amount of harm. Sluggishness, when human problems are concerned, doing things for effect, pomp, prestigious boasting instead of modesty; showing off when one should be listening, giving orders when one should persuade -- these are practices that, unfortunately, also occur today. Real authority is achieved not by those who shout, "Forward comrades," but by those who say "Comrades, follow me!"

We are not used to looking at the party from the point of view of modern sciences on organization and management. But in addition, in our activity time-consuming methods are used -- habits of improvization and working hard sporadically to meet targets [kampanijnosc], and an excess of the meeting and conference style. There is no issue on which we have no concept as to the course of action. During the national conference of delegates and at meetings of the Central Committee and the Politburo we examined, in fact, all areas of reality. Numerous programs, resolutions and decisions were adopted. We started this in an exceptionally difficult situation. It required numerous meetings and influenced the quantity and size of resolutions, but thanks to it we have managed to create a full list of issues which have to be resolved, we have programmed and tooled party work. Now, we will deal with fewer problems, and reach deeper, and what is most important, systematically and consistently implement resolutions and decisions. This is our weakest side.

We present the Central Committee report for the 10th Congress. It is critical, it does not spare various structures and acts from sharp assessments, and bitter words. But it does not mean that we have been directing our critical look only downward; on the contrary, we understand that the higher the branch and post, the higher the responsibility. If in some area things are not what they should be, this means that at the central level there was not enough energy, determination and forethought, and time ran out, or the reach was too short. In order that the party operates effectively, the entire leadership must work even more efficiently.

Defining the rhythm of Politburo meetings and voivodship committee executives, the Central Committee proposes to adopt a principle that once a month, on days earmarked for these meetings, members of central and voivodship party leadership should be under obligation go out and participate in meetings of the basic party organizations, meet workforces, members of the party, and non-party people. This will permit regular on-the-spot assessments of the situation, what the working people think, how they assess us, and what they expect.

During the past term of office a system was created for members of the central and voivodship party authorities, and political workers of the apparatus to belong to basic, and mainly workers party organizations. This brings party cadres closer to the realities of life, consolidates the bond with the first line. This should be continued and extended.

Comrades, recent years have appeared to be severe, and very instructive for the school of Marxism-Leninism. We have begun to make good the damage wrought by many years of neglect in theory, regardless of the fact that it was a result of ignorance or an expression of narrow practicality.

The creation of the Academy of Social Sciences has set up in Poland a strong center of Marxist-Leninist thought research, of influence on the whole milieu of social sciences and of training highly-qualified party cadres. The expansion of the network of intervoivodship and voivodship schools and raising their standard also strengthens the party's ideological work. Favorable changes are taking place in party training. Its basic purpose is familiarity with the understanding of scientific socialism. The practice of organizing ideological-theoretical conferences should be continued. They shape a creative approach to theory, which -- as Marx and Engels stressed -- is not a closed doctrine and a collection of ready-made dogmas but the foundation, the starting point for further research and the methods of conducting it.

The point is not for theory always to say yes to corrupt decisions or to justify them after the fact. The party simply needs Marxist thinking and preparation for party cadres that would make them capable of using theory in everyday activity, of analyzing the basis of changes taking place, of drawing conclusions and predicting the development of events. The longterm work on the party program became a test of the capabilities of using Marxist-Leninist theory in the complex conditions of contemporary Poland. The draft turned out to be the basis of and inspiration for a broad discussion, fruitful in proposals. It became the source of ideological, economic and state-legal education and at the same time a great poll of party and social thinking. The broad participation of nonparty people in the discussion also deserves to be stressed. The 10th Congress is therefore their forum as well. The draft we have brought differs considerably from the previous one. This is proof that the discussion was genuine and that it brought an abundant yield. Almost 1 million people are coauthors of the program. It is known by many millions. This gives hope that, when it is approved, it will not go into the files, but will become a material force.

Never in the course of the 40 years of the PPR has so much been done for the openness of public life as in recent years. We have made a decided break from the practice of only passing on good news to the public and keeping the bad news to oneself. The more widely the citizen is informed, the more quickly he finds out about events, the more confidence he has in us and the better for the party and the country.

Openness does not, of course, signify going along with deceit, of retreating in the face of false opinions. This, then, at the same time, is the field of ideological battle -- discussion, polemics, supporting opinions, and also, the correction and exposure of mistaken, false and subversive information.

What is important is for the strength of our ideology, of our arguments, to always triumph -- the strength of the truth.

Our congress and the adoption of the program will raise the crossbar for the whole of our ideological and propaganda work. Most important is that we should not allow the thoughts and ideals we advocate to be viewed indifferently. The right and correct word is not enough. What is important is for it to reach the consciousness, to arouse the creative working of the mind, to convince, to widen horizons. The quality of the subject and the forms of propaganda are verified by its social reception. Most valuable is a wide response, the type of dialogue with which the journalist finds many interlocutors. He should also listen and study with full attention to what they have to say -- the shaping of moods, attitudes, and convictions is, above all, to participate in the circulation of ideas, not to steer clear of matters, and to take life as it is, in all its complexity, as a basis.

In its concern for improving the conditions of the press, of the preparation of television and radio programs, of access of journalists to more information, the party expects bold, ample reasoning and greater responsibility for the accuracy and effectiveness of their words. The mission of editorial boards, party organizations, of the whole of patriotic, progressive Polish journalism is for the press, radio and television to inform honestly, educate effectively and struggle actively.

Comrades, there are values which have the greatest significance for all Poles -- the independence and sovereignty of the homeland, has territorial integrity, security and peace. This is consistently served by our state's foreign policy outlined by the party. The last few years have particularly demonstrated the relation between the internal situation in our country and its influence on the balance of forces in Europe.

An undermined and weakened Poland would pose a potential threat for equilibrium on our continent, but a developing, stable and strong Poland is one of the essential links of international security and peace. The inviolable union and friendship with the Soviet Union is a cornerstone of foreign policy. This is an historical achievement of our nations. The past has registered various pages in its annals. The fates of the Poles, Russians, Ukrainians, Belorussians and Lithuanians have sometimes been joined in a tragic knot. These chapters of history have been closed once and for all. This is the historical contribution of our parties -- the PZPR and the CPSU. [applause]

Socialism has opened up new horizons before us. Friendship and trust are gaining in strength, having been consolidated by the identity of peaceful aspirations, by the achievements of all-around cooperation and by the assistance granted to us in the most difficult moments. The socialist system has sunk firm roots in the world. The countries of real socialism constitute its core. Each one has accumulated many positive experiences and has contributed its own achievements to the treasure house of Marxism-Leninism. There has not been a shortage of mistakes and defeats, either. However, the historical achievements are huge and unshakeable. We are harmonizing our national interests and aims. We are combining unity and variety more and more effectively and joint socialist aims with the concrete conditions for achieving them. The present stage in the development of our community creates an historic opportunity for accelerating its march into the future and for achieving new boundaries.

However, the times are hard. The adventure-seeking stage of imperialism is having a negative effect on all spheres relating to East-West relations.

Imperialism is striving to turn back the revolutionary transformations in the world and to strangle progressive and national liberation forces and to block the processes of accelerating the development of socialism. It is banking on the economic exhaustion of our countries and on the gaining of military superiority. These calculations will come to nothing. One can harm socialism temporarily but one cannot defeat it. It defended itself when death, misery and starvation were staring the pioneers of the October Revolution in the eyes. It survived when interventionists and aggressors left scorched earth behind them. It is well known how the criminal assault of fascist Germany on the Soviet Union, the 45th anniversary of which was marked just a few days ago, ended.

Socialism survived nuclear blackmail, blockades, restrictions, and provocations. In the coming period it will continue to defend itself, consolidate, and will go forward. [applause]

It is true that capitalism has created modern and energetic productive forces, efficient organization of production and high productivity. By using ruthless economic coercion it developed human enterprise, and inculcated habits of respect for work. The wealth of the richest countries of the West, however, has been created first of all by the toil of exploited masses, by blood and sweat of robbed and enslaved nations. It is known where colonialism, fascism, racism, and apartheid has its origins.

The social ills of contemporary capitalism are very serious as well -- the plague of unemployment especially among youth, recurring illiteracy, symptoms of degeneration of mass culture, the cult of violence. In this respect capitalism is non-reformable. Some of our compatriots, the young in particular, are sometimes fascinated by the West and the standard of living there. They do not see that the areas of wealth and prosperity are next to examples of extreme poverty, exploitation, and crying injustice. A real picture of life in the West is significantly illustrated by the behavior of those who would like to earn money there, but here have free education, medical care, get cheap meals, and rest peacefully, preferably at work and joke about.

It is the matter of supreme importance for all nations for the whole human civilization to remove the threat of nuclear annihilation. Soviet peace initiatives and Comrade Mikhail Gorbachev's personal involvement are consistently going in this direction. [applause] This is the far-seeing brave, wise, and honest policy. We give it our full and active support. [applause] It confirms its rightness because it brings moral victory to our idea, pushes imperialism onto the political defensive, uncovers the real intentions of confrontation and militaristic course of Washington, which blocks efforts to end the arms race. In the contemporary world full of dangers, the authentic striving after consolidation of peace is a moral and political proof -- a certificate of policy for every government. We support peaceful coexistence of states of different political systems. In a preliminary draft party program a statement of utmost importance is included, that great issues of contemporary times cannot be solved individually by any formation.

Capitalism no longer, and socialism not yet -- although its possibilities are constantly growing. So, not only the instinct for self-preservation but the awareness of the need for rational cooperation is today the dictate for behavior. Comrades! In 3 years will be the 50th anniversary of the most terrible war in the history of mankind. The memory of it, so vivid in our nation, is for all people a constant source of reflection. Lasting peace is for the nations of Europe the supreme value. In conditions of detente, they derive advantages from the geographical and cultural proximity, from the complementary nature of their economies. In conditions of growing tensions, serious losses on a historical scale result.

The civilization and economic entity shaped over the centuries has broken apart. This turns Europe into a disintegrating continent. It still faces its great opportunity, however, of ensuring lasting peace with a simultaneous retaining of its own identity. Both parts of Europe -- Western and Eastern -- bear the burden of unprecedented armaments. They should therefore make an equally great effort to halt them. Poland was one of the most involved propagators and coorganizers of the historic conference on security and cooperation. The CSCE Final Act, taking as its starting point the inviolability of the political and territorial order, opened up wide prospects for pan-European activity. Unfortunately, the balance of the Helsinki process is not, after 11 years, what it could and should be.

Recent years have, in particular, brought a serious regress in this respect. It is high time for all partners to return to an interpretation and implementation of the decisions of the Final Act which would serve true progress in the sphere of detente and mutually beneficial cooperation. The approaching meeting of representatives of the CSCE participating states in Vienna creates a good opportunity for this. Poland intends to present at that forum a proposal for a conference of CSCE experts with the aim of discussing ways to overcome existing barriers in the development of East-West economic relations, particularly in the scientific-technical sphere. To improve the atmosphere and consolidate the premises of detente in Europe, lowering the ceiling of military confrontation is of great significance. A new, real opportunity for this was brought by the deliberations of the recent session of the political advisory committee of the Warsaw Pact in Budapest. The stance adopted, and particularly the message to the NATO states and all European states, containing a comprehensive program of serious reduction in conventional armaments from the Atlantic to the Urals, are facts of supreme importance. The Polish People's Republic, which has a considerable potential of conventional armed forces at its disposal, is prepared to take an active part in negotiations and make a suitable contribution to all-around agreements on practical, balanced disarmament undertakings.

Our country is open to all constructive initiatives that would serve European-wide cooperation on the basis of respecting the Helsinki Final Act. This also relates to bilateral relations. The past has brought us many bitter experiences in this field. The litmus test of the real intentions of the capitalist partners became the sudden change in the attitude of the West to our country. When Poland was living on credit, and harmful deformations were accumulating in socioeconomic life, praise and compliments were not skimped on, an intensive dialogue was in train. Indeed, there was talk of model relations. When we started to live on our own account, introduce reforms, tidy up the economy, enrich socialist democracy, these same circles, often the same people, only have calumny, ostracism and restrictions for us. The main states of the West tried to haul Poland through the accused's bench for a few years. An unprecedented propaganda aggression increased in strength. This illegal, brutal attempt to interfere in the internal affairs of our country became one of the contemporary manifestations of the cold war. Poland turned out to be more resistant than was judged. She shook off the crisis, she is rebuilding lost positions. We judge the conclusions from the Polish lesson will not be treated by the West with scorn. It should now be clear to everyone we will never accept alien dictate, and the hopes for the temporary nature of socialism in our country are simply naive. [applause]

Poland's national interest is irretrievably linked to detente, to dialogue. We are traditionally open to the world. We will increase our participation in the international division of labor. We will cooperate with every reliable partner who respects our sovereignty. The essence of Poland's foreign policy is above all the seeking and making use of points where things are contiguous -- that which unites, and not that which divides.

Our relations with neutral and nonaligned states and with the majority of West European states are developing in the right direction. The preconditions have arisen for the full normalization of contacts and cooperation with other Western countries, too. Relations between the Polish People's Republic and the Vatican are shaping up positively. Concerted support for the great cause of peace, the importance of which is raised so often by John Paul II, helps this along. We hope that this also will support the dialogue the state authorities are conducting with the Roman Catholic church in the country. We attach considerable importance to the correct development of relations with the FRG. We are watching carefully the realistic stances of certain of its political and economic circles. We welcome them warm-heartedly and with recognition. However, a second revanchist undercurrent pulsates there, and increases from time to time. Under the influence of our difficulties, attempts have been revised to undermine Poland's vital interests. The advocates of these concepts should remember the lesson of history. Their predecessors declared Poland was a seasonal [short-lived] state, but it was precisely the 1000-year reich which turned out to be seasonal. [applause]

Our experience shows very well it is the Soviet Union that is vitally interested in the strength and security of Poland, and its friendly relations with the GDR. But, the United States is putting its money on the FRG as its number one ally within the North Atlantic pact framework. Washington's policy also constitutes support and encouragement for all those forces, above all for the revisionist circles in the FRG, which want to undermine the peaceful Yalta-Potsdam politico-territorial order. At the same time, this is a calculation to exploit the U.S. locomotive to pull along the Greater German wagon [wielkoniemiecki] too. The FRG continues to have before it an historical option: either the continuation of revisionist illusions or finally coming to terms with the inviolability of European realities. In the former case, Poland will always place obstacles everywhere. In the latter case, it offers goodwill and cooperation, for we are of the opinion that there are no fundamental obstacles in the way of the Polish People's Republic, which enjoys the full confidence of its socialist allies and neighbors, the USSR, the GDR, the CSSR, the FRG, a strong NATO link, establishing between themselves good and lasting relations and undertaking joint initiatives designed to strengthen the peace and security of Europe.

The state of Polish-U.S. relations is a particular issue. The causes of the present situation are generally known: Washington has become an inspirer and main realizer of decisions and steps which harm Poland. It is difficult to expect that the impasse, which has been set for 5 years, can bring anything beneficial. We know that the view is not foreign to some inconsiderate circles across the ocean. We can notice even small positive petty gestures and steps; however, in politics, facts count first, and their balance is still unfavorable.

Good relations between Poland and the West in the past decade have become the source of numerous superficial assessments in Poland. A new stage in the development of the international situation and our recent experience tell us to draw deeper conclusions that will serve the future. The Central Committee expresses the view that class principled clarification of signs now taking place within capitalist formations, and the international situation should become a particularly important task for party and social education.

Poland is attaching great importance to the cooperation with the movement of nonaligned countries. We appreciate their initiatives concerning peace and disarmament, including last year's Delhi Declaration of six states from four continents. Together we demand a halt to imperialist threats and hostile acts against independent sovereign states.

We solidarize with the struggle against racism, apartheid, and all forms of pressure and discrimination. Relations with the developing countries occupy a more and more important place in our foreign policy.

At the initiative of the Politburo, decisions have been made which aim at more dynamic, mutually beneficial cooperation, with universal and qualitative dimensions. We support the right aspirations of the peoples of Asia, Africa, and Latin America toward the just solution of the most important global issues, and particularly a new, international economic order.

We are unanimous in striving for an equitable settlement of the worldwide problem of indebtedness which stifles development of dozens of states and which poses a threat -- one that is incalculable in its consequences -- of a breakdown in the financial and currency system. In accordance with the proposal put forward by Poland at the United Nations, preliminary work has begun to set up a Center for Research into Indebtedness and Development, attached to the Jagiellonian University. This center could become a future establishment of international significance. Solidarity and interaction between all anti-imperialist, revolutionary-democratic and national liberation forces in the struggle for a peaceful future for mankind is of exceptional importance.

In keeping with the ideals of proletarian internationalism, we are for expanding cooperation with all Communist and workers parties in Europe and the world. Irrespective of the differences in strategy and tactics, irrespective of the individual paths we proceed along, Communists ought to maintain unity in the most important issues. To defend peace is a task that surpasses all other tasks. Guided, as we are, by this conviction, we consider it essential that representatives of all Communist and workers' parties should hold a conference soon to jointly define the directions and methods of struggle for this grand goal. We are sincerely open to cooperation with socialist and social-democratic parties. We also wish to conduct a dialogue with peasant and democratic parties, with all those who are guided by concern for a peaceful and progressive development of mankind. [applause]

Dear comrades, Poland no longer speaks with a weak voice. However, our voice ought to, and can be louder. Poland's role in the world will truly depend on her strength, wisdom, and belief in herself -- and these depend on us, ourselves.

This is because the international position of any state is dependent, above all, on its internal condition, on the nation's unity with regard to issues of superior importance, on its economic efficiency, and on the social awareness of its citizens.

The defensive might of the socialist community constitutes the foundation of our fatherland's security. In the light of the existing threats, we must make sure that the national and the allied armed forces are ready for combat and that they cooperate closely. This was eloquently reflected in last year's decision to extend the validity of the Warsaw Pact for the next 20 years.

The PZPR emphatically reiterates the will to work constantly on making the ties of friendship and all-around cooperation with the CPSU and other fraternal parties closer. [applause]

We are for continuing to make the socialist community stronger; we are for enhancing its cohesion and unity in all areas. The responsibility of our parties and states for the destiny of socialism, for the world's peaceful future, requires the potential jointly at our disposal be put to maximum use.

We will continue and expand cooperation with other socialist states in Europe, Asia and Latin America, with all countries which are socialist in their orientation. These are the principal conclusions which the Central Committee presents to the congress as far as international policy is concerned.

Taking into account the current, complicated situation in its entirety, especially on our continent, we forward a proposal, for the consideration of the 10th Congress, to adopt a declaration on European security and cooperation. Let it be yet another, eloquent confirmation of the invariable will of our party and state to make a fitting, Polish contribution to this cause which the peoples of our continent share in common. [applause]

Dear comrades and guests, we have said that our congress is an ordinary one. At the same time, it is of special significance: it closes an extraordinarily difficult stage in the life of the party and the country. It also opens up a new stage, the prospects of which are to be defined by our program. The party, the working class, the working people count on the 10th Congress; on the congress tackling the most important problems of today and tomorrow.

The effort of the precongress debate ought to be reflected in our resolutions. It is no less important that all proposals must be tackled, that all postulates be examined by the relevant bodies of the party and the people's power, of the economy and social life.

In the precongress discussion there was a general expectation of truth and hope, truth about the state of society, the state and the economy, and the hope of overcoming difficulties, and of a swifter move forward. We must make good these expectations. A few years ago the question was posed: What guarantees are there that the crisis will not come again? This question can also be heard today. Such guarantees exist, not in declarations, not in words, but in the practice of socialist renewal; as a dialectic process it remains, unchangingly, in force. Among the many factors of the party's credibility, the most important is that of providing results. This, in fact, is the sum total of everything. The party considers it to be its class and national duty to ensure that what is necessary becomes possible; that what will be decided at the congress should be implemented fully and completely. So, the line of efficient implementation, the line of socialist consistency -- that is the general guiding principle of the 10th Congress. [applause]

The congress will give shape to the vision of Poland at the end of the century; such a future as the generations of struggling, working veterans would wish for their homeland, who gave their generous efforts toward their homeland's liberation and socialist progress. From this hall we greet them all warmly and cordially. [applause]

Youth is our great national capital. We turn to the young generation: Your country is Poland; your system is socialism; your time is the end of the 20th and the beginning of the 21st centuries. Give your homeland all your knowledge, your energy and your enthusiasm; build her greatness. [applause]

On 30 June, 40 years ago, a memorable People's Referendum took place. To basic questions regarding the future of Poland, the majority of working people answered yes three times.

Today, both in the People's Councils elections and in the Sejm elections and in the remarkably energetic precongress discussion, and, first and foremost, in everyday life, in a work referendum all its own -- to basic questions regarding the future of the homeland -- our nation answers once again: three times yes. Yes to the principles of the system, to the lasting achievement of the past 40 years, brought about with great effort, to the basis of the new opening in the socioeconomic development of the country; yes to the line of socialist renewal, to the policy of national accord, to the struggle and the reforms; yes to the sovereignty and the security of the nation, to the strengthening of tested alliances and to a worthy place among the nations of Europe and the world, to the ideal of peace.

Our nation has gone through a difficult course of history. It gained victories and recovered from defeats. It overcame obstacles and weaknesses. The path ahead of us is difficult. The goals are ambitious, but we shall certainly reach them. What we will decide in this hall must be implemented in practice. [applause]

KARCZ EVALUATES IMPACT OF IMF ADMISSION

LD291709 Warsaw PAP in English 0742 GMT 29 Jun 86

[Text] Warsaw, June 29: Poland was re-admitted to the International Monetary Fund on June 12 this year. An agreement about Poland's accession to the international bank for reconstruction and development, also known as the World Bank, was signed in Washington June 27. What significance do these two events carry for Poland? PAP Washington correspondent Jerzy Gorski put this question to department director at the Ministry of Finance Zbigniew Karcz who signed the latter agreement in the name of the Polish Government.

The signing of the agreements with the IMF and the World Bank in June opens up a new stage of Poland's cooperation with these organizations as an equal-rights partner. It is obvious that a majority of Polish society will ask just how Poland's membership of these organizations can positively influence our situation as far as payments are concerned, said Karcz.

One should be fully aware that there is no such thing as immediate, automatic benefits which would essentially change Poland's payments situation. More so, one should remember that cooperation with the IMF and World Bank can only be a factor supporting our own efforts, Karcz said. We are the ones who will work out economic programmes and we also will put them to life. Both international organizations can, in the event of an agreement on terms, assist Poland in the realization of programmes aimed in general at the earliest possible restoration of internal and external economic equilibrium.

One can expect such programmes to stir specific controversies, both internal and external ones, but let us hope that these discussions will produce programmes advantageous first of all for Poland's economy as well as programmes acceptable to the IMF and World Bank, continued Karcz. And so the volume of possible assistance from the IMF and World Bank will depend on the efficiency and speed with which these programmes will be prepared, and on their early application.

FINANCE MINISTER MEETS WITH WORLD BANK DELEGATION

[Text] Warsaw, June 24/25 -- Polish Minister of Finance Stanislaw Nieckarz received here today representatives of the World Bank, headed by Eugenio Lari. The sides exchanged views on Poland's future participation in that organization. The delegation presented evaluations and conclusions from the hitherto work of the World Bank working mission, which stayed in Poland since the beginning of June. Both sides also exchanged views on some aspects of the financial policy and the economic situation in Poland. The talks will be continued in the coming months.

CEAUSESCU SPEECH TO JOINT PLENARY MEETING

AU281034 Bucharest SCINTEIA in Romanian 26 Jun 86 pp 1, 3

[Speech by President Nicolae Ceausescu at the concluding session of the joint plenary meeting of the National Council of Working People and the Supreme Socioeconomic Development Council held on 25 June in Bucharest]

[Text] Dear Comrades: The National Council of Working People and the Supreme Socioeconomic Development Council have discussed for 2 days and then unanimously adopted the plans and programs for our fatherland's development in the 1986-90 5-year plan and until the year 2000. These plans ensure Romania's elevation to higher peaks of progress and civilization and the continuous increase in the people's material and cultural well-being. (Loud and prolonged applause)

By implementing the plans and programs adopted, we will attain, before 1990, the main target established by the 13th congress concerning our country's transition to the higher stage of an averagely developed socialist country. We will also create conditions for unswervingly implementing the party program for the strong assertion, after the year 2000, of the communist principles of life and work, by ensuring both the victory of the comprehensively developed socialist society and the strong assertion of and transition to communism in Romania (loud and prolonged applause; prolonged chants: "Ceausescu-RCP!")

That is why one can say that the Eighth 5-Year Plan is decisive for our future development and for attaining the strategic and long-term goal of our party and people. At the party Central Committee plenum, I presented in detail certain problems related to the plans and programs under discussion and the need to improve the management and planning activity in all sectors. Therefore, I do not wish to dwell too much on these issues.

The joint plenary meeting of the National Council of Working People and the Supreme Socioeconomic Development Council, which is attended by almost 3,000 party, state, and economy activists, has discussed in detail, in a critical and self-critical spirit, the results attained so far, the targets of our future development, and the measures to be taken to commendably fulfill these plans and programs.

We have certain good results in the first period of this year, but I must say, on this occasion, too, that we cannot be fully satisfied with these results. There are also many drawbacks. If all units in all sectors had taken more responsible and resolute steps, we would have been able to score much better results both in industry and in agriculture and other sectors.

However, I do not wish to dwell now on these shortcomings. I hope that all participants in this meeting, all ministries and working people's councils, and all party-state county bodies, including the working people's organizations, will understand that they must draw appropriate conclusions from activities to date -- both from what is positive, but also from shortcomings and deficiencies still apparent -- and proceed to take resolute steps, in the spirit of the plans and programs unanimously adopted, to improve the entire activity and pool the efforts of all working people and the entire nation with a view to unflinchingly implementing our development plans and raising our fatherland to higher peaks of progress and civilization. (Loud and prolonged applause)

Both the industrial and agricultural plans as well as other programs presnted here were discussed in detail by working people's councils and general meetings. A large number of party-state activists participated in the drafting of these programs.

We formulated appropriate programs for all counties and units. That is why one can say that these documents, which will guide our future activity, are the creative product of the entire party and nation and of all working people. They are the expression of our high revolutionary workers democracy and express the desire of all our people to unswervingly implement our party-state domestic and foreign policy. (Loud and prolonged applause; chants: "Ceausescu-RCP!" "Ceausescu and the people!" and "Ceausescu-Romanian, Our Esteem and Pride!")

As I said at the party Central Committee plenum, the adopted plans and programs mark a transition to an intensive development of industry, agriculture, and all sectors of activity and to a new quality of work and life for all our people. In this respect, we should take steps in all sectors and units to ensure the full and maximum utilization of the material, technical, and productive capacity, of highly skilled cadres, workers, and scientists, and of the best of our society, with a view to unswervingly implementing the target of intensive development, which is most important for Romania's progress toward communism. (Loud and prolonged applause)

These plans and programs also mark our fatherland's resolution to embark upon the road of implementing the new scientific-technical revolution and the new agrarian revolution. We have special programs in this field. They were broadly discussed at the congress of science, education, and culture and the congress of agriculture. Therefore, we should take all necessary steps to unflinchingly implement the targets of the scientific-technical revolution and the targets of the scientific-technical revolution and the agrarian revolution, by always proceeding from the fact that socialism and communism can only be built on the basis of the latest achievements of science and technology in all fields and the latest achievements of overall human knowledge. Socialism and communism means science at the highest level in all fields! (Loud and prolonged applause)

All our programs and plans and the strategic goals for Romania's development can be commendably fulfilled only by people with high skills, high professional and technical training, a high level of culture, and high revolutionary awareness. Man is the decisive factor in all achievements. The fulfillment of the programs unanimously adopted here depends on people, workers, and peasants, intellectuals, and our entire nation!

As these programs are the product of the entire nation's creative thinking, we are firmly convinced that our people will resolutely work to raise their training level in order to better master science and technology, act in full accordance with objective development laws, and consciously build their own free and independent future! (Loud and prolonged applause)

We have wonderful long-term plans and programs, which fully meet the vital interests of the entire nation. It is now necessary to resolutely proceed to implementing organizational measures, better distributing manpower and cadres, and improving the working style and methods in all fields of activity. The successful implementation of the programs adopted today depend on the organizational work, resolution, responsibility, discipline, and order of each management council, each workers democracy body, all party organizations and working people's collectives, and in the last instance on each party-state activist and each working man. (Loud applause)

From the debates here and at the party Central Committee plenum, you were able to note that we have wonderful results in those sectors where steps were taken to firmly apply laws and decisions and make maximum use of scientific-technical achievements. Therefore, I repeat that all our party-state and socialist democracy bodies and all working people should do all they can to expediently fulfill our plans and programs! We must act in a spirit of great responsibility before the party and people to ensure the future of our socialist fatherland! (Loud and prolonged applause)

There is no doubt that we must do all we can to commendably fulfill the production plan and itemized production and strongly develop and implement the programs concerning our energy and raw material base -- and there is a lot to be done in this field. We must also take firmer steps to reduce energy and material consumption and recover and reuse these resources, bearing in mind that they represent about 50 percent, and in many sectors even more than 50 percent, of the technical-material supply.

A number of problems were raised during the plenary debates on developing the technical-material base. However, I think that not enough was said about shortcomings in many units and about steps that should be taken by all units to ensure smooth technical-material supplies and a steady development of the production process.

The existing plan and programs fully ensure the necessary technical-material base for fulfilling the plan and supplementary provisions, but we must take appropriate action to also fulfill the plan provisions in the field of the material and energy base. This must be a daily and priority concern of all units and all working people! In accordance with the programs and plans adopted, we must pay much greater attention to increasing labor productivity in these sectors of activity.

We discussed the program on the scientific organization of production and work and the technological modernization of production. We decided to implement this program in two stages: The first is in 1986. I would like to point out with satisfaction that many comrades have talked about results attained in the first part of this year in implementing the first stage. However, the speeches made by certain comrades left me with the impression that they are somewhat unclear about the second stage, although I believe that the situation is clearly defined in the program we discussed here. Some comrades mentioned 1990 as the date to implement the second stage. However, we proceed from the fact that the second stage must be implemented in 1987-88. The measures stipulated by the second stage should be fully operational as of 1988, so that we can fully apply them in 1989-90 and already reap the results of the steps taken to organize and modernize the entire activity. Only then will we attain the surplus stipulated in all fields. In this respect, we must review our programs and plans in all sectors, ministries, central departments, and counties. Let us act on this basis!

We also discussed the improvement of the economic-financial activity, regulations for expenditure limits, and issues concerning economic efficiency and profitability. The program we adopted provides for very important measures in this field, too, these measures aim at strengthening financial order and discipline and the responsibility of each working people's collective. We have a lot to do in this respect. As I have said at the party Central Committee plenum, many units and economic managers used the economic mechanism mainly to obtain as many advantages as possible and thus shirk their responsibility to the party, state, and people for the way in which they carry out their activity, by involving the free initiative and autonomy stipulated by the economic mechanism.

However, it must be well understood, comrades, that self-management and self-administration, while indeed guaranteeing room for broad initiative on the part of all units, management councils, and working people in these units, stipulate that this initiative must be in accordance with overall development plans and proceed from the fact that each unit administers a certain part of the national wealth and is fully responsible -- before the people and state bodies, which represent the interests of the entire nation -- for the way in which it administers the part of the national wealth entrusted to it. On no account may anbody shirk his responsibility before the people and state bodies! Everybody should do his best to strongly increase profitability, properly administer the means entrusted to him, and increase the efficiency and contribution of each collective to the country's overall development!

We are improving and accentuating self-management and self-administration, but we are not thinking for a moment of letting the management bodies and unit managers make random decisions or decisions to their liking concerning the administration of the entire nation's wealth.

It is our responsibility before the people to develop and further increase the national wealth, since this is a guarantee of our fatherland's progress and development and of the increase in the people's overall well-being! (Loud and prolonged applause).

An inadmissible situation has emerged in recent months, when stockpiles and unsold products have increased, as have done the credits asked by and unfortunately granted to certain units that have expanded their stockpiles and want to finance their poor activity on the basis of credits from the state and at the expense of working people from other units which have scored good results.

The measures to improve financial activity and regulate expenditures aim at introducing order and discipline and avoiding a future repetition of such states of affairs. I dwell on these problems as they are very important for our entire activity; as of this year, beginning with the coming months, we should achieve order with a view to thoroughly eliminating negative states of affairs.

Let us take firmer steps to improve the management and planning of all sectors of activity. Let us harmoniously blend the activity of state bodies, workers democracy bodies, and self-management and self-administration in all fields, since this represents a single whole and a new form of the revolutionary workers democracy, in which all working people and the entire nation decide their own destiny and the golden future of our fatherland, namely, the firm progress toward communism! (Loud and prolonged applause; chants: "Ceausescu-RCP!" and "Ceausescu and the people!")

The implementation of our plans and programs requires resolute steps to further develop international economic relations and production sharing, both with CEMA countries, all socialist countries, and developing states as well as with the developed capitalist countries.

It is absolutely necessary to give priority to commendably fulfilling the production earmarked for export and the export itself, as an objective prerequisite for the smooth development of our entire activity. I believe that all ministries, all management councils in central departments and units, all working people, the party county committees, and all workers democracy bodies should take resolute steps to eliminate certain shortcomings in this sector and ensure in the coming months the expedient fulfillment of the export production and export itself, by manufacturing better products of a higher technical and qualitative level than other products on the international plane. Only thus will the Romanian products be able to assert themselves at the world level and will be in demand with our foreign partners. Only thus will we be able to further expand our international cooperation and participate more actively in the international division of labor in all fields. (Loud applause)

We discussed various problems; I do not want to discuss them now, since, as I have already said, I believe that they are well known; hence I do not have to dwell upon them. We are embarking upon a new road of struggle and work; we have to cover yet untrodden paths toward the high peaks of communism, the golden dream of our people and all mankind. It will not be an easy road, we are not going on a parade or a trip! We are going to work, and this requires effort and a revolutionary spirit on the part of each working people's collective and all party-state cadres! (Lively applause)

The party anniversary was mentioned here. But we must always bear in mind that our party has asserted itself under difficult conditions of revolutionary means to put the overall interests of the people, socialism, and Romania's independence and sovereignty above everything else. (Loud applause). To be a revolutionary means to take a resolute stand against everything that is old, outdated, and no longer corresponds to the new realities and our new development stage; to be a revolutionary means to firmly work to promote what is now and the latest achievements of science, technology, and human knowledge! Only on the basis of the latest and highest achievements in all fields can we build socialism and communism! (Lively applause).

We have a good guide, the RCP, which has proved in its 65 years of existence that it has at heart only the interests of the people and their well-being, the fatherland's independence, and the victory of communism in Romania! (Loud and prolonged applause; chants: "Ceausescu-RCP!" and "Ceausescu and the people!")

We should never forget that we must always strengthen the party's links with the broad people's masses and the entire nation's unity around the RCP, which is the leading political force in our society. Let us continuously expand our democratic framework and the revolutionary workers democracy, by always proceeding from the fact that socialism is being built with the people and for the people and that only together with the people and only by acting in full unity and pooling the entire nation's efforts can we implement the wonderful goals of communism in Romania.

Let us step into the new development stage with confidence in the wonderful ideals of socialism and communism; let us unswervingly guide ourselves by the principles of scientific socialism and dialectical and historical materialism; let us put our full trust in the creative force of the people, who are the only true builders of everything we are achieving in Romania and the true shapers of their history and free and independent future. (Loud and prolonged applause; prolonged chants: "Ceausescu and the people!")

While focusing on the implementation of our wonderful development plans and programs, we must do everything to contribute to resolving international problems in a new and democratic way, halt the dangerous course of international events, resume the policy of detente, and promote a policy of peace and cooperation among all states, regardless of social system. (Loud applause).

We can attain our targets only in conditions of peace; the same applies to every other people, who can secure its development only in conditions of peace. That is why the key problem of our time is to bring about disarmament, primarily nuclear disarmament, and defend peace and the vital right of people to life, existence, freedom, and independence. (Loud and prolonged applause).

I talked about international problems at the party Central Committee plenum; hence I do not wish to dwell upon them now. However, I would like to mention on this occasion, too, that all party-state bodies and all our organizations -- within the framework of the relations they maintain at the international level in all fields -- must act in the spirit of our party's policy of peace and cooperation and must make a contribution to attaining the aspirations of all mankind to live without nuclear arms or any kind of arms in a world without wars, a world of equal cooperation between all nations! (Loud applause; prolonged chants; "Ceausescu-peace!" and "Disarmament-peace!")

Dear comrades, we are in the middle of the first year of the 1986-90 5-year plan. We have many more half-year periods to cover until the completion of the 5-year plan. Only 6 months out of 60 months have passed so far.

It is necessary to start from the joint plenary meeting of the National Council of the Working People and the Supreme Socioeconomic Development Council with the firm determination to pass immediately to the necessary measures to commendably fulfill this year's plan indexes, thus laying a sound foundation for the fulfillment of the entire 5-year plan and of the development programs up to the year 2000.

During today's meeting some distinctions were awarded for the results of the activity carried out in 1985. From the rostrum of the joint plenary meeting, I would like to convey congratulations to the counties and units that occupied the first place or a front-ranking place for the results they attained and I would like to urge them to do everything to keep these places, so that next year they may obtain an even better place in the competition that takes place among all the counties and units of the country.

I convey congratulations to all working people for the results they attained in 1985 and I wish all the units and all the counties that they attain ever better results this year! Each of you should strive for an ever better place and if possible for one of the first place! Each of you should strive for the first place! (Loud, prolonged applause)

From the rostrum of the joint plenary meeting of the National Council of the Working People and the Supreme Socioeconomic Development Council I call on all the working people's councils, all the working people, and all our people: Let us most resolutely engage in the struggle and work for ensuring the commendable fulfillment of plans and programs! Let us do all we can to ensure an ever stronger development of our homeland's technical and material base and to raise continuously the material and cultural well-being of the whole people -- the supreme goal of our party's policy and the essence of the comprehensively developed socialist society that we are successfully building in Romania! (Loud prolonged applause)

I call on the members of the National Council of the Working People and the Supreme Socioeconomic Development Council to pledge themselves that together with all the councils and democratic bodies they will work with more responsibility and self-denial and will do all they can to demonstrate what a force is represented by the new democratic bodies and what a force is represented by the workers class and by a nation that is master of its destinies and works for itself, for its well-being and happiness and for Romania's independence and greatness! (Loud, prolonged applause; prolonged chants of "Ceausescu and the people!")

Once again I wish all the working people, all our people, the party and state bodies, and all the bodies of our workers' revolutionary democracy to attain even greater successes and newer and newer results in all the fields and fulfill the plan with ever better results! Much health and happiness! (Loud and prolonged applause; prolonged chants of "Ceausescu-RCP!" "Ceausescu and the people!")

I declare the proceedings of our joint plenary meeting closed. Complete success in your work, comrades! (Loud, prolonged cheers; prolonged chants of "Ceausescu-RCP!" "Ceausescu and the people!" "Ceausescu-peace!" In an atmosphere of great enthusiasm and great and ardent patriotic, revolutionary engagement, all those present rise and cheer at length, in full unity, for the RCP -- the leading political force of our whole nation, and for the party secretary general, the president of the country, Comrade Nicolae Ceausescu).

PREMIER DASCALESCU REPORT ON 1986-90 PLAN IN GNA

AU262033 Bucharest AGERPRES in English 1926 GMT 26 Jun 86

["Memorandum of the Bill of the National Socioeconomic Development Plan Read by Constantin Dascalescu" -- AGERPRES headline]

[Text] Bucharest, AGERPRES 26/6/1986 -- Prime Minister Constantin Dascalescu, who read the Memorandum of the National Plan for Romania's Economic and Social Development Over 1986-1990 before the Grand National Assembly on behalf of the government, showed that the fundamental strategic target of the new five-year plan was Romania's passage to a higher stage, that of a medium-developed country. The Romanian premier pointed out that in line with the broad democratic system in Romania, the plan provisions were worked out in close cooperation with collective management boards in enterprises and central departments, with people's councils, ministries and the other central bodies, and were discussed in the general meetings of working people in economic and social units, at the level of communes, towns, cities and counties, at the congress of the General Trade Union Confederation, as well as at the congress of science and education and where examined and unanimously approved by the recent plenary meeting of the CC of the RCP, the plenary meeting of the National Council of Working People and of the Supreme Council of Economic and Social Development. The five-year plan, he said, boasts the unquestionable attribute of a collective creation belonging to those who are in duty bound to fulfill its provisions.

The fundamental priorities under of the 1986-1990 five-plan, the memorandum shows, are the further strong development of the forces of production and of the material and technological base, a more marked intensive growth, the powerful assertion of the new revolution in science and technology and of a new agrarian revolution, the firm continuation of the process of revolutionarily transforming society, the achievement of a higher quality of work and life, the further rise in the whole people's welfare and civilization standards, the strengthening of socialist Romania's independence and sovereignty.

According to plan provisions, over 1986-1990 industrial production will go up at a 7.5-8.3 percent average annual rate, which is higher than that envisaged in the thirteenth RCP congress guidelines, Constantin Dascalescu pointed out, underscoring that in that framework an important place was held by concerns to boost the country's raw materials resources, by discovering and capitalizing new reserves of mineral and energy and raw materials. The memorandum also shows that 1990's net coal output is envisaged to stand at 117.3 million tons, that conditions had been created for a double growth of the production of pit coal intended for coke with a view to saving hard currency resources. To attain a 101.7-billion-kwh energy target, the amount of energy generated by coal-fulled plants should double, new units with an installed generating capacity of roughly 3,300 Mw should be commissioned and the production of water power, which is to account for 18 per cent of total produced energy in 1990, should rise. The memorandum shows and points out that in the ongoing quinquennium the installed generating capacity of nuclear plants in operation would amount to 5,200 Mw, while the output of energy generated from new and recovered sources through new technologies would be 7.5 fold larger than in 1985. Highlighting that in the manufacturing industry the plan laid stress on actions aimed at updating production structures, the speaker showed that steel production in the iron-and-steel industry would stand at 20-20.5 million tons in 1990 as an outcome of a 70-per cent rise in the weight of special steels needed to back up programmes in key technological areas. Provisions are also made for a high-rate growth of electronics and microelectronics, of means to automatize and control manufacturing processes, of high-tech, highly productive machine tools.

Over 1986-1990 a double-growth will be recorded in the production of the fine-synthesis and small-tonnage chemistry - medicines, cosmetics, pest killers, reagents and chemical catalysts - as a result of processing home raw materials to a greater extent.

The memorandum also shows that consumer goods production will increase and diversify in the new five-year plan period, as the quality of products in the light and food industry will improve. Production in the small-scale industry will grow at an average annual rate of 11.4 per cent over the quinquennium.

Pointing out that one of the basic priorities under the Eighth Five-Year Plan was the intensive development of agriculture, by achieving the new agrarian revolution and ensuring a corresponding ratio between the growth of industry and that of agriculture, the speaker emphasized that the plan provided for a rise in overall farm output at an average annual rate of 6.1-6.7 per cent, to be supported by a large investment volume worth 190 billion lei. Cereal production will stand at roughly 32.5 million tons, that is more than 1,300 kg per capita; substantially larger amounts of technical plants, vegetables and fruit will be harvested, and animal breeding will account for 46-48 per cent of the total farm production in 1990.

The memorandum points to the fact that the five-year plan provides for the implementation of an ample investment programme worth 1,400 billion lei. In industry whereto more than 840 billion lei were alloted, investments were distributed mainly for the development of power engineering and the extractive industry. The investments in the processing industries are channelled toward completing the projects started in the 1981-1985 interval, toward updating and developing the units included in the priority programmes. The major goal of the current five-year plan is that by 1990 each county achieve a total volume of economic activities (in industry, agriculture, construction, transport, services and others) worth at least 80,000 lei per inhabitant, of which 50,000 lei worth of industrial production, the speaker stressed.

One of the salient features of the present five-year plan, the memorandum shows, is Romania's ever more active and efficient participation in the world economic exchanges, the steady increase of commercial exchanges and cooperation with all socialist countries, the deepening of economic and technical-scientific collaboration within the CMEA, the expansion of economic relations with developing countries, the promotion of economic and technical-scientific collaboration with developed capitalist countries, with all the states of the world, whatever their social system.

Over 1986-1990 foreign trade is estimated to grow 52.7 per cent as to 1981-1985. Export is to rise more than 75 per cent as its structure is to substantially modify owing to a bigger share of highly processed products. In 1990, the machine-building industry is to contribute over 32 per cent to the total exports.

Foreign economic relations centre on exchanges and cooperation with socialist countries which in 1990 will hold a 50-per cent share in the foreign trade volume, the speaker underlined mentioning that special concern would be shown to cooperation in production, to the extension of the long-term agreements concluded and to the conclusion of long-term contracts and understandings.

The Eighth Five-year Plan focuses on the organic integration of quality questions, the faster growth of efficiency in the process of a speeded-up economic development, the memorandum shows emphasizing that the draft plan gives priority to the more marked growth of labor productivity which is to rise 70.4 per cent in the national industry over this five-year period, especially by extending production mechanization and automation, the utilization of highly efficient machinery and equipment, the application of new manufacturing technologies.

According to the 1986-1990 plan provisions, the memorandum also shows, real payment will rise 6-8 per cent. all while firmly promoting the the principle of a faster growth of labour productivity according to the increase of payment. Peasant's real incomes will also grow 6-8 per cent. The incomes from the social consumption funds will continue to rise. Calculated per one family, the state's funds for the financing of sociocultural activities, pensions, child benefits and others will amount to more than 15,000 lei in 1990. The volume of goods sold through the socialist trade network will be 9.4 per cent larger in 1990 than in 1985. Services to the population will increase at an average annual rate of 12.3 per cent. The prices and tariffs index is to rise under rigorous control within the planned limits of 1.1-1.3 per cent a year.

Over 1986-1990, 750 thousand new dwellings will be built, of which 100 thousand in communes and villages. Polytechnic education will develop with priority and will closely intertwine with production and research, the health care system will continue to improve, and cultural-artistic activities will multiply.

The implementation of the programme for a more marked growth of labour productivity will provide for a gradual transition to the 44-42-hour workweek until 1990, the final section of the memorandum shows inter alia.

DINCA REPORTS ON AGRICULTURE PLAN AT GNA SESSION

AU261939 Bucharest AGERPRES in English 1835 GMT 26 Jun 86

[Text] Bucharest, AGERPRES 26/6/1986 -- [memorandum of the 1986 - 1990 agriculture and food industry development plan bill -- AGERPRES headline] In line with the policy of balanced growth of the basic branches of the Romanian economy, a plan for the development of agriculture and food industry for 1986-1990 was worked out closely correlated to Romania's general five-year plan of economic and social development.

Entrusted by the government with the presentation of the Draft Development Plan of Agriculture, Food Industry, Forestry and Water Management for 1986-1990 to the Grand National Assembly, Ion Dinca, first deputy prime minister, said that the draft plan provisions were aimed at the intensive growth and modernization of agriculture as a whole, a more efficient use of the land and of the technical-material base, a faster growth of animal and plant production, a better capitalization of raw materials by the food industry and the diversification of its production, a higher economic efficiency.

Net farm production is planned to rise at an annual rate of 85-90 percent on an average in the next five years, said the speaker, adding that, as far as plant output was concerned, priority would continue to be given to cereals the total productions of which are expected to reach 32.5 million tons by 1990, of which 10.2 million tons of wheat and rye, and 18.2 million tons of maize. Larger productions are planned for other crops as well -- 11.6 million tons of sugar beet, 2.4 million tons of sunflower and soybeans, 19.5 million tons of potatoes and vegetables, and 5.6 million tons of fruit and grapes.

The plant production rises are planned to be achieved largely through higher average yields per hectare. Attention will concentrate on the agricultural and arable area which is to be expanded by some 700 thousand hectares during this five-year plan through reclamation. Furthermore, two million hectares are planned to be put under double and successive crops, and some 600 thousand hectares under mixed crops. A 2.6 - million - hectare area will be laid out for irrigation during this five-year period, and nearly one million hectares will be erosion - controlled.

A major aim of the current five-year plan is animal output, the share of which is put at 46-48 per cent of the total in 1990, up from 42.7 per cent in 1985. The food industry, says the memorandum, will develop in the next five years at an annual rate of 10.1 per cent on an average, with its net production being planned to rise at an average, withits net production being planned to rise at an average 12 per cent. The drive for organization and modernization in the food industry will continue.

In forestry, action will be taken to maintain the integrity of the forest stock and conserve it. Forest land is put at 6.6 million hectares in 1990, said the speaker, who added that fellings would be limited, forest regeneration would be ensured, steps would be taken to achieve optimum density and plant trees on areas unsuitable for agricultural uses. In water management, action will be taken to further develop river basins, supply water to industry and the population, as well as to agriculture where safe stable productions are aimed at.

Investment in agriculture, food industry, forestry and water management is put at 210 thousand million lei.

CEAUSESCU RECEIVES USSR AMBASSADOR 30 JUN

[Text] Bucharest AGERPRES 30/6/1986 -- On Monday, June 30, the RCP general secretary and Romania's president, Nicolae Ceausescu, received E.M. Tyazhelnikov, ambassador of the Soviet Union in Bucharest, upon the latter's request. A talk was held on the occasion, which passed in a warm, comradely atmosphere.

CPSU ACTIVISTS CONCLUDE FACT-FINDING VISIT

AU281327 Bucharest AGERPRES in English 1231 GMT 28 Jun 86

[Text] Bucharest AGERPRES 28/6/1986 -- A delegation of activists of the Communist Party of the Soviet Union led by V.G. Afonin, alternate member of the CC of the CPSU, head of the Chemical Industry Section of the CC of the CPSU, paid an exchange-of-experience visit to Romania over June 23-28 upon the invitation of the CC of the RCP.

The Soviet guests conducted talks at the headquarters of the CC of the RCP, the Iasi County Committee of the RCP, with executives of central institutions, and visited economic units and sociocultural establishments in Bucharest as well as in Iasi and Bacau Counties.

At the end of their visit the delegation were received by Stefan Andrei, alternate member of the Executive Political Committee, secretary of the CC of the RCP. Reference was made on the occasion to the ties of friendship and cooperation between the two parties, countries and peoples on multiple planes, and determination was expressed to jointly work for the development of Romanian-Soviet relations in accordance with summit understandings.

The talk, the atmosphere of which was warm and friendly, was attended by Eleonora Cojocaru, vice-chairman of the Central Council of Workers' Control of Economic and Social Activities.

RENOVICA DELIVERS CLOSING SPEECH AT CONGRESS

LD282129 Belgrade Domestic Service in Serbo-Croatian 1305 GMT 28 Jun 86

[Speech by Milanko Renovica, president of the LCY Presidium at the concluding session of the 13th LCY Congress on 28 Jun -- recorded]

[Text] Comrades: At our 13th LCY Congress, as well as at the congresses and conferences of the LC's in the republics and provinces and in the Yugoslav Peoples' Army [YPA], at the SAWP conference, at the congresses of the Federation of the Trade Unions and of the Federation of the Associations of the Veterans of the National Liberation War, and of the Federation of Yugoslav Socialist Youth, we strengthened and enhanced our knowledge about the situation in the LC, in the working class, and in our society. We confirmed our unity in the struggle for the further socialist self-management development of our country. The congress has approved the assessments and directions of the LC's activity contained in the main report, draft resolutions, and in the report of the president of the Presidium of the LCY Central Committee.

The congress vigorously expressed creative criticism of the gap between the actual situation and the strategic orientations about the historic role and position of the working class and of self-management associated labor as decisive factors of the development of the system of socialist self-management and of the development of the production forces of our society implicit in our programs. It demonstrated the resolve, the readiness, and the ability of the Communists and all socialist self-management forces of our society to change the existing situation resolutely and faster. This is a great commitment and an encouragement for direct political and social action. The need for substantial changes in the social, economic, and political relations in our society along the line of our program and constitutional orientations has been vigorously asserted. The congress displayed the unity that words should be translated into deeds, that we have to fight in a concrete way for the development of socialist self-management, and, on this basis, for the democratization of social relations, for dynamic and harmonious material and social development, for affirmation of collective work and decisionmaking, and for personal and collective responsibility in the adoption and efficient implementation of the decisions.

The congress laid down the demand for a consistent implementation of the strategy of intensive economic operations, established in the long-term program of economic stabilization and in the congress resolutions. The following are the priority tasks here: further development of socialist self-management; consolidation of the self-management status of the working people; a higher rate of production, exports, and job creation; more efficient use of social resources and of all production factors; fuller observance of the impact of economic laws and the abandonment of red tape in regulating the reproduction trends. We must create the conditions to accelerate our country's inclusion in international scientific and technological progress and to secure for Yugoslavia an appropriate place in the international division of labor through a greater reliance on our own skills and technology. Our most urgent task is to bring about essential changes in the economic position of associated labor to enable associated workers to take on the rights, the commitments, and the responsibility in making decisions on the conditions and on the results of the work; on seeing economic stabilization through; and on adapting the economy to the requirements of the scientific and technological progress.

This is the way to get out of the economic crisis, to bring down inflation, and to enhance the efficiency of our system. This is why we have to give priority to all those elements, which by the force of their economic rationality and interests expressed along self-management lines, will accelerate the integration of social labor in the Yugoslav area. If this economic logic and the self-management associated labor are not freed from the present restraints, which have their roots in the strong etatist bureaucracy and in specific historic, economic, ideological, and other inherited problems, it would be futile to expect that we will bring this about solely by the action of political factors. In this context, the most essential thing to do is to bring about full affirmation of the workers in associated labor and of their work as the main production factor and, through that, their affirmation as self-managers and factors of our political system. This requires appropriate changes and improvements in our political system.

The congress is unanimous in the demand that the key development decisions be taken by the workers making their decisions within the framework of the delegate system. This battle can be pursued and won only by the working class acting together with all the working strata led by a united LC. There is no place in the LC for those people who pay lip service to the authority of the working class, but in practice do the opposite. [applause]

We must see to it that the working class and the working people obtain a dominant role in controlling surplus value, in delegating authority, and in managing social affairs. In our struggle for self-management social relations, we must reassert the moral values of our movement without which there is no free life or material and cultural progress. We must return dignity to work, especially to creative, productive, innovatory, professional, and conscientiously and honestly done work. [applause]

The congress fully manifested the LC's responsibility to create political and other conditions, to mobilize the working class, our working people, and all social factors so that the unfavorable trends in our economic and social development can be vigorously overcome. A resolute demand was made for comprehensive, coordinated, current, and long-term measures to be taken to impiment the long-term program of economic stabilization and of the LC policy. An aboutface in economic developments in the direction of more stable and more dynamic development and intensive economic operation can be brought about only by concrete actions, better work, and unity in implementing the agreed policy.

Socialist self-management and social ownership of the means of production, authority, and unity of the working class, national equality, brotherhood and unity, the federal system in the country, all-people's defense and social self-protection, and on nonaligned foreign policy represent the revolutionary achievements of our working class and of our nations and nationalities. They are and remain our lasting orientation and the permanent values of our socialist revolution. [applause]

The congress clearly demonstrated that it is not socialist self-management which is in a crisis, but specific concrete and inadequate mechanisms, ways, and methods of its implementation. It has been demonstrated that etatization of relations in our social reality has deeper roots and is of more extensive dimension.

This is why the working class, the LC, and all self-management socialist forces will resolutely fight against all attempts to usurp the authority of the working class by etatist, technobureaucratic, and other antiself-management forces. [applause] It has become clear that the stagnation in the development of socialist self-management cannot be eliminated merely by changing individual solutions, by criticizing specific actions and practice, or merely battling against antiself-management activity, but mainly with a comprehensive and persistent development of the system of socialist self-management as a historic path of emancipating labor. We are unanimous in our assessment that the way out of the economic crisis and crisis situations in our society is possible only through the further development of socialist self-management, through intensive economic management, by relying on our own resources, and by developing the skills and the abilities of associated Yugoslav workers.

In a democratic and open dialogue the 13th Congress indubitably demonstrated -- and the results which have been attained testify that this is so -- that we have enough strength, knowledge, and experience to extend faster the area of socialist self-management. It is therefore indispensable that we, the Communists, go on critically identifying and evaluating the methods and means with which our social development is brought about. Faster and without hestitation we should rid ourselves of dogmatism in defense of these institutional and legalistic solutions and of everything which today is incapable of being confirmed as an instrument of working people and of socialist self-management forces in the struggle for what is new, socialist, and humane. [applause] For the sake of revolutionary continuity, we must not stop at what has already been handed down and recognized. Let us be open to the flow of modern and progressive ideas, to new impulses stemming from daily self-management practice in the production of material goods and cultural values.

The LCY critically and self-critically evaluated general socioeconomic development and made a critique of its own practice and mistakes. This is a strong ideological instrument of political activization of the Communists and of all our working people in their work and in struggle for the prosperity of our community because in our society today, those solutions are most efficient and most suitable to the demands of our working class which have been put up by the practice of self-management as a mainstay of the democratization of production and overall social relations. We should persist along this way. This is the only way that enables the LCY unceasingly to identify and to comprehend the historic dimensions of communist society and at the same time to stand firmly on the ground of social reality.

The 13th LCY Congress has asserted itself as a congress of unity and action of the LC and of the broadest socialist and democratic forces in the country associated in the socialist alliance as a front of organized socialist forces. [applause] We are detemined to strengthen permanently the unity and cohesion of Yugoslavia, a socialist self-management community of equal nations and nationalities [applause]; to develop and strengthen it in the direction historically chosen by the decisions of the Anti-Fascist Council for the National Liberation of Yugoslavia; to enhance further the achievements of brotherhood, unity, and equality of our nations and nationalities; and to suppress and eradicate all forms of nationalism, separatist and unitarist tendencies, and irredentist conspiracies. We must eliminate even more vigorously the underlying reasons of all forms of nationalism and its destructive activity. We are confronted by the urgent task of resolutely eliminating the sources providing sustenance to nationalism, separatism, irredentism, and counterrevolution in Kosovo, and their grave consequences.

The historic responsibility for the future of the revolution and for the development of socialism on the basis of self-management requires that as soon as possible, faster, and more efficiently, and in addition to surmounting all the difficulties and problems, we should fight to acquire our niche in the present day conditions of the international division of labor. In this way alone we will ensure successful development and defend the reputation and position that our country has won, a country that is capable of developing on its own socialist self-management basis, and prevent it from becoming a technological colony of the world neocapitalism or from being constantly threatened by the destinies of state socialism.

Yugoslav Communists unswervingly remain on Tito's line of the struggle for a better world; for more equitable international, economic, and political relations; for security, for equality, socialism, and peace in the world. [applause] Nonalignment is our lasting orientation; it brings together people and enjoins on them cooperation, solidarity, and peaceful coexistence. On this basis we will develop and enrich comprehensive cooperation with all the countries, progressive forces, communists, socialists, workers, and democratic parties, and movements in the world today. [applause]

The working class does not expect any miracles from its vanguard, the LC, along our road of socialist self-management development. It is aware of the gravity of the struggle and it is ready for prolonged skirmishes and even denials and for all the trials along the road which will extricate us from the crisis and open up the prospects of successful development. Our working class, however, demands unity and action, consistent application of the principle of democratic centralism, and stronger ideopolitical organizational and cadre ability of the LC to operate in the present day conditions of the struggle for the historic objectives of our revolution. The LCY Central Committee has a great responsibility to bear in giving life to this plebiscitary orientation of the Communists and of the working class and in carrying out the decisions of this congress. It is under an obligation to operate resolutely and responsibly, to initiate and to steer political activity, and to provide full support for the struggle of all organized social forces for the socialist present and future of our society. Without any hesitation in this matter, full responsibility would be demanded from the organs, organizations, and members of the LC for immediate activity, for the preservation of the achievements of the revolution, and for attaining concrete results in the development of socialist self-management, implementation of the policy of economic stabilization, and of the objectives of the overall socioeconomic development.

At this congress once again, we felt to what extent we miss Tito. Let Tito's revolutionary spirit, ideas, and achievements be recognized not only by the words we say but also by the results which we accomplish. [applause] The 13th Congress makes it incumbent upon us to persist in the struggle for socialist self-management development of the Yugoslav community. It makes it incumbent upon us to lead the way in the struggle to emancipate labor and man with our work and our example.

We are ending our congress with a conviction that we are capable of performing these tasks and that we are ready to do so. We possess strength in the LC, in the working class, and in our society; we have at our disposal enormous untapped resources and the unshakeable resolve of our working people and citizens to fight for a better future. Our contemporaries and following generations will appreciate us by what we have attained and not by our intentions and words. [applause]

Comrades, on behalf of the newly elected members of the LCY organs, I thank you for the confidence you have placed in us. We will spare no effort to measure up to the tasks laid down by the congress.

I thank the present members of the Central Committee, of the Commission for Statute Questions, and of the Supervisory Commission of the LCY for their work and for the efforts they invested during the preceding period. I express special gratitude to all comrades, prominent revolutionaries of our workers and communist movement, who are ceasing their active work in LC organs, for their contribution thus far to our revolution and to socialist development, but who will remain in the heart of our political action. [applause]

I thank the representatives of the parties and movements who, in such an impressive number, attended our congress. [applause] I am confident that they were briefed better on the LCY's struggle for the development of socialist self-management; for equality, peace, and socialism in the world; for friendship among the peoples; and for the consolidation of all-round relations between our parties and countries.

Comrades, at the end of our 4 years [as heard] of work on behalf of the congress, and on behalf of you all I would like to thank all the organs and organizations of Belgrade, our host city, the citizens of the hero city, who secured all the conditions for our work and who cordially and hospitably provided for all the delegates and guests. [applause]

On behalf of the working Presidium and of all the participants in the congress, I would like to thank for the contribution and the successful work of the congress made by the comrades who were involved in the professional, organizational, technical, and other preparations for the 13th Congress. [applause] I express my gratitude to the Sava Center work collective, where we spent the past 4 days. [applause]

Our congress was followed by a great number of journalists, photographers, and cameramen from Yugoslavia and abroad. I thank the representatives of the foreign information media who kept the world public informed about the work of the congress. [applause] I also thank the representitives of the public information media in our country who made great efforts to provide the fullest possible and most comprehensive information about the work of the congress. [applause]

Comrades, before concluding the work of the 13th Congress, I would like to inform the newly elected members of the LCY organs that the first sessions will be held within 30 minutes of the conclusion of the Congress: Central Committee in hall No 1, building A; Commission for Statute Questions in hall No 2, building A; and Supervisory Commission in hall No 3, building A.

In conclusion, Comrades, I would like to thank you all, the delegates and the guests of the congress, for your fruitful contribution to our work together. [applause]

And now, let us move united into action to give life to the decisions of our congress. [prolonged applause]

I proclaim that the work of the 13th LCY Congress has been completed.

LEADERS HOLD MEETINGS WITH DELEGATIONS TO CONGRESS

Hasani Talks With Coman

DJILAS INTERVIEWED ON LCY CONGRESS, STALIN

PM271341 London DAILY TELEGRAPH in English 27 Jun 86 p 6

[Undated interview with Milovan Djilas by Robin Gedye: "Tito's Heir Fearful for Yugoslavia"]

[Excerpts] Belgrade -- Milovan Djilas, former Yugoslav vice president, does not think very highly of the Communist Party Congress in Belgrade. He has heard it all before and is waiting for the political and economic crisis to deepen before the new order arrives.

Mr Djilas, 75 this month, is the last survivor of Yugoslavia's post-war leadership quartet and one-time heir apparent to President Tito.

His crisis of belief in Communism turned him from an intimate of Stalin and a leading revolutionary into an "enemy of the state" while at the height of his power.

And as I learned when talking to him he is unrelenting in his criticism of a system that he now believes to be in an advanced stage of decomposure.

He sees the Yugoslav meeting, which ends tomorrow, as a meaningless repetition of similar past events which will end in a flabby declaration drawn up by malcontents.

"The roots of the crisis lie in the inadequacies of the system. The monopolism of Communism and the lack of a free economy has determined our crisis," he declared.

Despite Yugoslavia's preeminence in Eastern Europe in recognising the needs for a market oriented economy the country will not be saved until there is radical change.

"There is literally nothing that does not have to be changed. Everything must be altered, but not through revolution.

"Tito's system was good for revolution but is invalid now. We must eventually have free private economy. Until then people will increasingly resort to strike and demonstrations until they get what they want.

"The crisis we are now going through will be experienced by Hungary and China in turn, now experimenting with ideas that we adopted 20 years ago."

Mr Djilas, who spent the best part of a decade in jail after his expulsion from the Communist Party in 1954, has perceptively modified his angry stance on one major issue in the last two years.

His unmitigated mistrust of the Soviet leadership and its hedgemonistic intentions as molified with the arrival of Mr Gorbachev. [sentence as published]

Three years ago Mr Djilas wrote that "The Soviet oligarchs do not recognize friends or allies but only vassals and obedient servants." Now he believes Mr Gorbachev deserved a second glance.

He does not regret that his works, acclaimed throughout the world, are not sold in Yugoslavia. "I prefer it that way."

"I was a believer in Communism when it was not a form of manipulation. But when I saw it was not realistic and a mere struggle for power among a small elite I became disenchanted.

Leninist Communism is in the process of disappearing and will be destroyed. Totalitarian Communism will disappear. But Socialist Utopianism will always be with us."

It comes as a shock to hear Mr Djilas say that despite the fundamental break from Moscow by nimself and Tito, the only 20th century politician he has truly, "admired" was Stalin.

Winston Churchill and Charles de Gaulle he considers the greatest leaders in his lifetime, Aneurin Bevan he "loved" because the British Socialist and wife fought for him while he was in prison.

"But Stalin I admired because he was the true representative of the Communist ideal. I know that he was brutal but I thought that such great things were not possible without brutality.

"I met him many times. He represented devilish political genius. Certainly the greatest tyrant in history and unfortunately the most successful. Even Genghis Khan and Hitler were not capable of such tyranny towards their own people."

Tito he loved, but did not admire while Churchil and De Gaulle were in a league of their own.

SUNDIC ON PROSPECTS FOR GORBACHEV-REAGAN SUMMIT

LD301638 Zagreb Domestic Service in Serbo-Croatian 1300 GMT 30 Jun 86

[Milka Sundic Commentary]

[Text] [Words indistinct] Reagan's insistence on holding a summit meeting, while the Soviet side is being hesitant in making a more concrete statement on this proposal. In fact, the Soviet leader is not disposed to travel to Washington if the U.S. President abandons the SALT II agreement, when it does not accept one of the Soviet initiatives on disarmament. Here is a commentary by Milka Sundic:

[Words indistinct] President Reagan has stated that he, like Gorbachev, wants another meeting but that there is a problem over fixing a date for their meeting. Some time ago, the leaders of the two superpowers exchanged messages on this subject but nothing is known about their contents yet.

There are only rumors that the U.S. President is insisting that the summit be around the end of the year or earlier and that allegedly, Mikhail Gorbachev does not want to commit himself to anything until some moves by the head of the White House are clearer. This concerns, above all, the SALT II agreement or rather Reagan's intention to abandon it at the end of this year.

Moscow has reacted stormily to everything which has been said in this connection in the United States and the impression has been gained that Mikhail Gorbachev is not prepared to travel to Washington without firm guarantees that his meeting with Reagan will not be in vain. Moscow's fear with regard to the success of the summit should be understood because as the Soviet delegation announced at the Geneva talks, few days ago the United States is not showing any readiness to [word indistinct] the essence of the Soviet proposals on the reduction and limitation of armaments. In other words, Reagan's assessment that the problem of the summit with Gorbachev is simply a question of the date that it is to be held is irrelevant because if there were prospects that the meeting would produce the appropriate results, the problem of date could be solved very easily. Reagan's intention to abandon the SALT II agreement was not well received in the United States and still less in Western Europe, but this still does not mean that the U.S. President will change his position which is based on the assessment that the USSR has itself violated the decrees of the agreement on the limiting of strategic nuclear armaments.

Moscow, it is true, refutes this energetically but is not avoiding a dialogue on disarmament nor even on the spot checks which is a significant novelty in the Soviet approach to the problem of disarmament. Moscow does not even oppose spot checks with regard to the reduction of troops in Europe. However, although the different Soviet proposals have been met with understanding in many Western capitals and in the United States, for the U.S. part there are still no concrete intimations that these proposals can serve as a basis for a dialogue between Reagan and Gorbachev. One gets the impression, in fact, that the United States is looking for much more than the USSR is prepared to accept and this is (?in its view) the main obstacle blocking the meeting between the leaders of the two superpowers and not the timing of the meeting as the U.S. President would have it.

Nevertheless, the fact that there are still (?pressures) between Gorbachev and Reagan leads one to the conclusion that the meeting between these two continues is still on the cards, or rather, that it cannot yet firmly be said that there will be no meeting. True, if the United States does violate SALT II, and on the other hand, if the Soviet initiatives continue to be ignored, this could, by all accounts, lead to Mikhail Gorbachev's canceling the meeting. It would be difficult for anyone in the Soviet leadership to advise Gorbachev to go to Washington if President Reagan sticks to what he has been saying recently -- in the first instance the decision to abandon SALT II. If the U.S. President does not bear this in mind, the Soviet-U.S. summit will most probably not take place.

FEC AGREES TO MEASURES ON IMPORTS, INTEREST RATES

LD271946 Belgrade TANJUG Domestic Service in Serbo-Croatian 1450 GMT 27 Jun 86

[Text] Belgrade, 27 Jun (TANJUG) -- The Federal Executive Council (FEC) has agreed to new interest rates, increased the rediscounting rates for credits to purchase 3.3 million metric tons of wheat, and passed the decision which makes it possible to introduce special levies on imported agricultural produce and food. The aim is to prevent imports of agricultural produce above the quantities determined by balance sheets and ensure the protection of Yugoslav production at protected prices. The statement by the Federal Secretariat for Information issued today, says:

At its session yesterday (chaired by Vice President Janez Zemljaric), FEC discussed a number of current economic issues and our country's relations with our countries.

After consultations with republican and provincial executive councils, the FEC gave its consent to the decisions of the Council of Governors, which lay down the interest rates on investments from the primary issue, on resources deposited in national banks, as well as on funds used to maintain the business banks' day-by-day liquidity. On the basis of these decisions, which will come into force on 1 July 1986, the National Bank will pay interest rates on investments from the primary issue at the rate of 56 percent, while interest on areas for investments not redeemed in the period set by the contract will be 66 percent annually.

Resources deposited at the National Bank of Yugoslavia and the national banks of the republics and provinces: these banks will pay interest at new rates, i.e. 3 percent annually for resources of compulsory bank reserves; 11.5 percent for treasury bills of compulsory subscription; and 31 percent on voluntary treasury bills. The new interest rates are in line with the policy of realistic interest rates as well as with the planned annual rate of inflation.

The session also adopted the proposal to amend and supplement the decision on implementing the goals and tasks of the joint issuing and money policy and of joint foundations of the credit policy in 1986 as the basis to coordinate the attitudes with relevant republician and provincial organs.

The proposed amendments and supplements are aimed at ensuring, within the framework of the credit-monetary policy, resources for implementing the newly-adopted decisions on new prices for purchasing wheat from the 1986 harvest as well as the decision to increase the rediscounting rate for credits to purchase and set up seasonal reserves and wheat reserves from the 1986 harvest. This should ensure enough resources to buy 3.3 million metric tons of wheat this year, as planned.

The FEC also adopted the decision which makes it possible to introduce special levies on imports of agricultural food products. This decision is aimed at preventing -- in line with the established price and development policy in the agricultural sphere -- imports of agricultural products above the quantities established by balance sheets as well as at ensuring the protection of the Yugoslav agricultural production at the level of the prescribed protected prices.

The FEC decided to examine, in consultations with relevant republican and provincial organs, the possibility of prescribing obligations in the production and sale of semi-white bread to make it possible for citizens to also buy the kinds of bread which by quality and price suit them better.

LD281002 Belgrade TANJUG in English 0010 GMT 28 Jun 86

[Text] Belgrade, June 28 (TANJUG) -- As of July 1, Yugoslavia will abolish limits on credits for agriculture and those for export arrangements contracted by the other branches of the economy. The decision taken by the Board of Governors of the National Bank of Yugoslavia is expected to stimulate both production and exports, and to ensure a greater stability of the Yugoslav market.

As part of these measures, special significance is an increase from 49 to 70 percent in rediscount rates for purchase of wheat and other agricultural products from individual producers, which will ensure better solvency of banks in these transactions. The board also adopted significant changes in the policy of interest rates. The policy of real positive interest rates will in future be applied not only on the basis of actual price variations, but also expected variations.

Interest rates will in future be determined on the basis of a unified discount rate, instead of three-month time deposits. A 56-percent discount rate will be applied as of July 1, while the current three-month interest rate is 73 percent. In future, interest rates will be adjusted to price variations every three months. Individual interest rates will be determined by commercial banks. At present the interest rate for one-year time deposits is 76 percent, and for two-year deposits -- 78 percent.

Decisions taken by the Board of Governors are part of the Yugoslav Government's latest anti-inflationary measures, expected to cut back inflation by 20 percent.

KOSOVO SERBIANS SOUGHT TO 'PITCH CAMP" IN BELGRADE

AU251145 Belgrade BORBA in Serbo-Croatian 23 Jun 86 p 3

[Milos Antic report]

[Excerpts] Pristina, 22 Jun -- What had been heralded for months happened on Friday, 20 June this year, in the last breaths of another excessively hot Kosovo political spring. About 500 Serbians and Montenegrins from several villages of the Klina commune and two villages of the Pristina commune, Batuse and Bresje, started collectively on the way to Belgrade with the intention of moving out of Kosovo. They dropped their intention after the talks they conducted somewhere midway between Kosovo Polje and Pristina with numerous activists of the communal and provincial committee, as well as Azem Vlasi, president of the Presidium of the Provincial Committee of the LC of Kosovo, and Petar Gracanin and Veljko Markovic, members of the leadership of the LC of Serbia.

To enter in a newspaper report at least partially the reasons for what happened on that day between Kosovo Polje and Pristina, it is first necessary to go back not only a few months or a year, but certainly much more. The fact that for decades the political leaderships of the province would not deign to go to some village opened up a wide space which Albanian nationalists and separatists entered; as is known, they carried on their work almost legally and drew closer to their goal.

The people of the villages Batuse, Vresje, and of the Klina commune, began to express dissatisfaction, especially in the past few months, because of the numerous problems, which we have written about extensively. However, the newly elected, rejuvenated, and excellent provincial leadership, which in a short time established broad cooperation and coordination within the SR of Serbia, without any complexes, began concretely to solve all the justified demands.

And what happened then? When one began concretely to solve problems, when it was seen that the newly elected leadership had resolutely embarked on clearing up everything that affects the emigration of the Serbians and Montenegrins, when the measures and actions by the SFRY Presidency and the LCY Central Committee presidium were finally announced, and when it was realized that the Kosovo problem had become a Yugoslav problem and that everything would be done in the country to repair many things here, certain destructive and nationalist circles in Kosovo, and especially their leaders outside Kosovo, attempted to make use of the last train.

Lies Have a Short Life

They tried to move the people who have been incited, manipulated, deluded by demogogical slogans, and burdened by objective problems, collectively to migrate. They wished and dreamt and hoped that at least 20,000 Serbs and montenegrins would follow them and that on their way through Serbia to Belgrade -- where it was planned to pitch a tented camp on the banks of the Sava -- at least five or six times as many would join them. Of course, it did not occur to them in the least to tell these people what all this means and what they are leading them in and against whom they are leading them.

Regardless of what proceeded all this, the nationalist and destructive dreams of the leaders have not in the least come true. Their demagogic slogans, provocations, and insinuations deluded a few hundred people among whom -- to tell the truth -- there were many with personal problems, who have been sharply hit by injustice, and whose life has been badly affected by certain organs.

Such people, after talking with the activities and after they saw that the manner in which they wanted to solve their problems was not the right one, gave up, peacefully dispersed to their houses. They did so because they realized that somebody had manipulated them, that somebody wanted to exploit them for something dangerous, and they realized that this somebody did not dare to appear and stand at "the head of the column."

"Operation Tents," as the organizers called this attempt at mass emigration, ended with a collapse of those who had dreamt about it so fiercely, who had invested much efforts in its preparation, and who wanted to exploit it for deep and constructive nationalist goals.

The problem, however, is too serious to be passed over lightly. Now that the storm has blown away, when one can assess and decide things much more calmly, and what is even more important, when concrete steps may be taken which could influence a calming down of the situation and a removal of all the causes that influenced people to decide for such a -- one could say -- desperate step, not a moment should be lost. The political action must be swift, incessant, clear, concrete, and visible.

DEFENSE COMMITTEE SUPPORTS ARMY SCHOOL CHANGES

LD011006 Belgrade TANJUG Domestic Service in Serbo-Croatian 0916 GMT 1 Jul 86

[Text] Belgrade, 1 Jul (TANJUG) -- The SFRY Assembly's Federal Chamber Committee for National Defense today supported the draft law on addenda and changes to the law on military schools and scientific research institutions in the Yugoslav People's Army. A proposal was put to the Chamber that the law be adopted at one of its coming sessions.

The new solutions should contribute to bringing military schooling into line with the current level of development of the Armed Forces and society. With the changes in the law, considerably broader scope is given to training civilians for operations and tasks in armament and military equipment production, their maintenance and use, and for work in the system of commanding and running military units and institutions. It also is envisaged that the Marshal Tito Center for Strategic Research and Studies train cadres for commanding and directing on a strategic level. The Center also is to organize the acquisition of military science doctorates.

ALIA CHAIRS AWP PLENUM ON ECONOMY 27-28 JUN

AU281424 Tirana Domestic Service in Albanian 1330 GMT 28 Jun 86

[Communique on the meeting of the 15th AWP Central Committee plenum issued 28 June]

[Text] The 15th AWP Central Committee plenum met on 27-28 June 1986 under the chairmanship of Comrade Ramiz Alia, first secretary of the AWP Central Committee.

Having heard and discussed the report of the AWP Central Committee Politburo on the fulfillment of the Seventh 5-Year Plan and the Draft Plan for the Economic and Social Development of the People's Socialist Republic of Albania for the eighth 5-year period, 1986-90, the plenum unanimously approved the Draft Directives of the Ninth AWP Congress for the Eighth 5-Year Plan, 1986-90, for the development of the economy and culture in the People's Socialist Republic of Albania and decided that the directives be passed on for a broad popular discussion in working collectives.

Comrade Manush Myftiu, AWP Central Committee Politburo member and deputy chairman of the Council of Ministers of the People's Socialist Republic of Albania, informed the plenum about the fulfillment of the plan during the first 5 months of 1986 and set out a number of tasks arising for the fulfillment of the 1986 plan, this being the first year of the Eighth 5-Year Plan. A broad discussion took place in the plenum on this question.

At the end of the plenum, Comrade Ramiz Alia, first secretary of the AWP Central Committee, drew conclusions and gave a general outline of the work and experience of the party and of the working masses in the course of the implementation of the tasks of the seventh 5-Year Plan and of the first months of the current year; he outlined and synthesized the fundamental targets of the country's socioeconomic development in the Eighth 5-Year Plan, 1986-90. In conclusion, he also dwelt on a number of questions on which the popular discussion of the Draft Directives of the Ninth AWP Congress for the new 5-year plan must be centered.

BUDGET PLAN FOR 1985 REPORT SHOWS SUCCESSFUL YEAR

AU010630 East Berlin NEUES DEUTSCHLAND in German 18 Jun 86 p 10

["Budget Report for the Year 1985: Implementation of Important Revenues and Expenditures of the State Budget"]

[Text] The year 1985 was a particularly successful year for the GDR. In the worthy preparation for the 11th SED Congress a high dynamism and increasing effectiveness were achieved in the national economic development in 1985 as a result of the creative work of the working people. The proven policy of the main task in its unity of economic and social policy was consistently continued.

The basic turn toward comprehensive intensification was accomplished in implementation of the long-term economic strategy of the party of the workers class. Major steps were taken in order to even more closely interlace science and production, to apply key technologies at an accelerated pace, and to further develop the uniform socialist education system.

Great significance is attached to the fact that it was possible to further accelerate increases in labor productivity. More than 90 percent of the national income results from productivity increases.

State finances developed in a stable manner on the basis of the significant growth rates in both production and effectiveness.

A considerable surplus of revenues over expenditures was obtained in the state budget.

The 1985 State Budget Plan was fulfilled as follows:

Millions of marks	Law on the 1985 state budget plan	Fulfillment per 31/12/1985	Fulfillment in percent
Revenues	231,084.0	235,534.0	101.9
Expenditures	230,944.0	234,392.0	101.5
Surplus of revenues over expenditure	140.0	1,142.6	-

The stable budgetary management in the GDR is also reflected by the fact that all the budget of cities and communities, kreise and bezirke, produced surpluses. These surpluses were transferred to the funds of the people's representative bodies. As a result, the local people's representative bodies are in a position, in implementation of the decisions of the 11th SED Congress, to again employ considerable means for a communal policy which is close to the citizens, first and foremost for the financing of tasks and measures within the citizens' initiative to "beautify our cities and communities -- join in", as well as for accelerating the regional rationalization.

As a result of the industrious and creative work of the working people, which has found a visible expression in higher labor productivity, a cut in the specific power and material consumption, better utilization of the basic assets, and a reduction in prime production costs, the share of revenues from the national combines and enterprises in the overall revenues of the state budget rose some 79 percent. Thus, the fact was reaffirmed that the remittances from the national combines and enterprises constitute the decisive and stable source of income for the state budget.

In a consistent continuation of the main task, the people's material and cultural standard of living was ensured and further developed on the basis of rising growth rates in both production and efficiency. The employment of means from the state budget for the maintenance of stable consumer pricese for essential commodities as well as for rents; fares and services; for the construction, modernization, maintenance and management of apartments; and for satisfying the increasing health, social, and intellectual and cultural needs of the populace was further enhanced.

It is being stressed as an expression of the high social performances of the state that, in addition to the expenditures for the population from the state budget, a total of m7.1 billion have been spent for social and cultural care for working people and their children as well as for labor veterans from the funds of the combines and enterprises, the state organs and state institutions. This is some m500 million more than in 1984.

In agreement with the tasks related to defense and security policy, to the protection of peace and socialism, the means earmarked by the law on the state budget plan for 1985 were spent according to the plan on national defense and public security, the administration of justice, and securing the state border.

FIRST DAY OF PZPR CONGRESS ENDS; PRESS BRIEFED

Bejger Speech at Congress

LD291847 Warsaw Domestic Service in Polish 1430 GMT 29 Jun 86

[Speech by Stanisław Bejger, first secretary of the Gdansk PZPR Voivodship Committee at 10th PZPR Congress in Warsaw on 29 June -- live relay]

[Text] Comrades, the congress campaign in Gdansk Voivodship has shown that our voivodship party organization, which has traveled a very difficult path, has drawn correct conclusions from its experiences and taken effective action. We have resolutely laid bare all our errors and shortcomings, and presented to the working people of the coast the causes of the crisis and a program for overcoming it, which we have been implementing consistently. We have undertaken a resolute struggle with the forces of counterrevolution, since the aggression of internal and external opponents of socialism has been and continues to be aimed at Gdansk with special intensity. The period from the dramatic events of 1981 to the present state of stabilization in the sociopolitical situation and normalization in life was rich in historic events. The destructive activity of antisocialist forces, socioeconomic chaos, violation of law and order, the necessity of introducing martial law, the damming of the threat to our nation's existence by the Polish People's Army, the Civic Militia, and the Security Service, which defended socialism like independence, were the facts that became the starting point for our daily work amidst people. We gradually strengthened our voivodship party organization; it has been constantly growing for 2 years now.

Party echelons and organizations have focused on consistent implementation of the Ninth Congress resolutions -- the line of socialist renewal and reforms, of accord and struggle. We have been regaining and are continuing to regain public confidence, understanding, and support for our program. Ever more efficient political work and intensive struggle against the political opponent -- unmasking his antisocialist activity, elucidating the causes of the necessity to introduce martial law, and at the same time, mobilizing the working class, the working people for positive action, for increasing production, for better market supply, for improving the organization and discipline of work -- led to isolation of the anti-socialist forces. Their calls for boycotts, for disturbances in the course of work and life, for various protests go unheeded. With every year the public mood changes in our favor. The political opponent keeps losing its supporters, while our party keeps gaining ever greater public understanding and support. Expressions of this are, for example, the active participation of the public in productive activity and voluntary work, wide participation in various sociopolitical demonstrations and elections to the people's councils and the Sejm, an almost 60 percent so-called unionization of the voivodship working people, and the development and good work of employees' self-management and youth and public organizations, including the Polish-Soviet Friendship Society. In spite of the fact that many difficulties are already behind us, we still have much to do to overcome the existing difficulties, disparities, and delays in various areas of our life. Complex socioeconomic problems are moving to the fore. We are trying to not only make more efficient use of the existing production potential but, through its modernization and scientific and technical progress, to ensure improvements in the quality of production. We are trying to cope with this task mainly by holding high the truly creative work that paves the path for progress. False egalitarianism must wither. Too often we pay as much for inefficient work as for highly productive work. While valuing all useful work, we should reward innovative work above all.

While struggling to gain ever greater confidence from the working people and public support for our activity, and struggling for the expansion and extension of national accord, we cannot and will not tolerate the actions of antisocialist forces, since they impede the resolution of difficulties and the development of our country.

One of the lessons of our history is the need to constantly intensify the knowledge of society -- youth in particular -- on the fundamental conditioning of our life, on fundamental facts that are decisive for our present and our future. An important fact that is reaching deeper and deeper into the awareness of contemporary citizens of Gdansk is that Gdansk has returned to the motherland after centuries, together with the Piasts northern and western territories to Odra and Nysa, only thanks to the victory of the heroic Soviet Army and the Polish People's Army, which fought at its side. The conviction and certainty is also being consolidated among the society of our voivodship that keeping the regained territories, securing our independence and the inviolability of our borders, and living and working in peace for over 40 years has been possible only thanks to the alliance, friendship, and comprehensive cooperation of the Soviet Union, and thanks to the cooperation of Poland as a socialist country with the USSR and other socialist states within CEMA and the Warsaw Pact. We remind contemporary society, young people in particular, that working people of the Gdansk region, workers, peasants, and intelligentsia, [words indistinct], and those who moved here from other parts of Poland and from abroad after a short period of time integrated themselves in the uniform Polish society, which, under the leadership of our party, rebuilt and developed all spheres of our socioeconomic life, culture, science, and education.

We are teaching respect for the achievements made thus far and we are mobilizing for more achievements. At the same time, we state unequivocally that we will not allow the undermining of our integration and the will for working and living in peace and friendship with all nations, above all with our neighbors. That is why we are actively struggling for peace, and why we support Comrade Mikhail Gorbachev's plan for the elimination of nuclear and chemical weapons, and proposals concerning disarmament and peaceful cooperation by nations of different political systems. That is why we say to West German revisionists: We were here. We are here and we remain here. [applause]

The implementation of the 27th CPSU Congress resolutions has great importance for the future development of Polish-Soviet friendship and cooperation. The outcome of the congress also constitutes an important impetus for the improvement of effectiveness in our work. Of great help for our party organization has been longtime cooperation with the Leningrad CPSU organization and various forms of cooperation between Gdansk and Leningrad.

Despite overcoming the most serious aspects of crisis, there are still many shortcomings in our shipbuilding industry and in the whole economy, including the maritime economy. The production potential of the maritime economy is not maximally utilized. Discipline and labor organization leave a lot to be desired. Management effectiveness in many enterprises is also unsatisfactory. Our work for removing the shortcomings has not yet brought satisfactory results. In accordance with the Ninth Congress resolution, the assumptions of the Polish People's Republic maritime policy were worked out at the 10th plenum. They were adopted by the Sejm.

At present, the consistent implementation of our state's adopted maritime policy is the most important task. We also have to make better use of the opportunities resulting from being a state along the important north-south transit trail, and also east-west.

Comrades, the obvious truth is reaching society -- in spite of hostile propaganda -- that our party has drawn the proper conclusions from conflicts that occurred during the building of socialism. Our party worked out a program at the Ninth Congress -- and later finalized it at its 26 plenary meetings -- and understood every possible action for its consistent implementation. Granted, as it transpires from the Central Committee report to the 10th Congress, not all of the right intentions have been fully executed, because not everything depends on the will and the strength of our party, but the rightness of the Ninth Congress' policy has been tested and proven right in practice.

The implementation of the PZPR Program, the resolution that the 10th Congress will adopt, and the development program for our voivodship up to the year 2000, which was compiled in accordance with the resolution of the PZPR Central Committee Politburo session in Gdansk, will permit the elimination of major imbalances and ensure further development of our region in all important sectors. The vital need to accelerate housing construction, to eliminate the deficit of water and heat, and to build a sewage purification plant in Gdansk in order to improve protection of the waters and restore the recreational properties of beaches and swimming areas comes to the fore.

The Gdansk-2000 program is in the nature of a political directive. It has formulated the strategy for the harmonious development of the voivodship. It has defined the essential laws of its development in order to protect it against ad hoc measures that would cause imbalances. It assumes the supremacy of social goals. The program states that the yardstick of social progress that will be made on the Gdansk coast up to the years 2000 will be the development of the qualitative traits of a person -- his potential for creation and innovation, for culture, education, and professional qualifications; his physical and mental health; and his honest attitude to work and civic responsibilities. The increase in the quality of society's life will become -- alongside scientific-technical and organizational progress -- an important factor mobilizing economic development. This program was adopted by the Voivodship Precongress Conference as a party task. Comrades, the delegates of the Gdansk organization fully accept the activity of the Central Committee, of the first secretary of the Central Committee, Comrade Wojciech Jaruzelski, and express full recognition to them. They support the assumptions of the PZPR Program, the draft 10th Congress resolution, and the proposals contained in the report by the first secretary of the Central Committee at the 10th Congress. Our voivodship party organization, all party echelons and organizations, and all party members will undertake consistent activity for the full, effective implementation of the 10th PZPR Congress resolutions. Thank you for your attention.

Dobraczynski Speech

LD292244 Warsaw PAP in English 2140 GMT 29 Jun 86

["Dobraczynski's Speech (Abridged)" -- PAP headline; speech made at the PZPR Congress in Warsaw on 29 June]

[Text] Warsaw, June 29 -- After four years of activity, the Patriotic Movement for National Rebirth (PRON) worked out certain attainments. I believe that we have the right to say that our activity helped to achieve stabilization. Still however, we have to admit that we have failed to reach general agreement. A big part of Polish society still remains out of the reach for our movement.

A kind of progress was however reached also in this field. The system of cooperation on the principle of equality of party members and people with no party affiliation, people of different world outlook starts to bring effects. A part of society which so far has not participated in public social activity, became activated. We continue to expand the system of coalition believing that it is particularly important and needed in the cooperation of society with organs of administration in the most crucial matters. Attitudes of the young generation have also changed.

We are convinced that the great contribution made by the PUWP, the main signatory of the July 20 declaration, to the work (?prove) to be equally significant.

While conferring the greetings fo the 10th PUWP Congress on behalf of all the political and social organizations and units cooperating in PRON, I would also like to say a few words on behalf of Polish Catholics acting within our movement. In line with the spirit of church, it is necessary for Catholics to remain in the religious unity with it. It seems to me that irrespective of disputes which could and even had to occur over the 40 post-war years, these were the years which proved that the unity in our country has not been undermined. The fact that the present pope is a Pole, and that during his pontificate he paid two visits to his motherland seems to be an adequate proof.

Press Conference on Congress

LD252028 Warsaw PAP in English 1904 GMT 25 Jun 86

[By Wlademar Janiec and Miroslaw Luniewski]

[Text] Warsaw, June 25 -- The Press Centre of the 10th PUWP Congress opened here today with over 300, not counting Polish journalists, representatives of foreign press agencies, the press, radio and TV accredited to it. A press conference for foreign and Polish journalists accredited to the congress was held the same day by PUWP CC Political Bureau alternate members, PUWP CC Secretaries Jan Glowczyk and Wlodzimierz Mokrzyszczak.

Jan Glowczyk characterized the course of the preparatory campaign for the 10th Congress. "I think, that the reformatory, sanitizing processes which have developed in the activity of our party and the life of all society as a result of the realization of the resolutions of the historic and 9th Extraordinary PUWP Congress and the line of socialist renewal adopted by it will be the points of interest for all accredited journalists. In forming this line we have drawn broadly on the experience of fraternal parties. We also openly, critically and self-critically drew conclusions from an analysis of the social discrepancies and conflicts which took place in the past," he said.

Addressing the gathered journalists Jan Glowczyk said: "I am aware of the fact that the representatives of the mass media from many countries gathered here differ as to world outlooks and political directions and will surely report on the course of the debates of the 10th Congress in line with them. However, despite these differences, we are counting on an objective presentation of facts, on you not sidestepping the main issues that modern, socialist Poland lives with."

Billing as propaganda aggression a score of information about Poland passed on in recent years by Western mass media, Jan Glowczyk gave concrete examples of evidently false information, disseminated, for example, by Radio Free Europe, on preparations for the 10th PUWP Congress.

Wishing newsmen successful work during the 10th Congress Glowczyk stressed that the Polish side would like to see the results of the debates find proper reflection in dispatches from the congress. "This is important to us", he said, "But I also believe this is important to the creation of friendly relations among nations, relations marked by mutual respect".

He also told newsmen that the discussions of the 10th Congress would be presented in direct broadcasts from the congress hall in the 4th programme of the Polish radio, and that Jerzy Majka, editor in chief of TRYBUNA LUDU, had been appointed to be the press spokesman for the congress.

Next, Wlodzimierz Mokrzyszczak presented detailed information about the party's membership and its pre-congress activity. He said that over a million party members and candidates took the floor during the pre-congress meetings and conferences, and added that majority of open meetings was attended by more than 800 thousand persons with no party affiliation, out of whom 160 thousand took the floor to express their opinions. Characterizing the pre-congress campaign Mokrzyszczak declared that it was objective in its assessments, businesslike and responsible, and that it confirmed the general approval for documents prepared for the 10th Congress.

Among the 1,776 delegates for the 10th Congress, Mokrzyszczak further said, workers and peasants constitute the majority of 51.1 percent. At the 9th Congress they accounted for 31.5 per cent of all delegates. Among the 266 delegates employed in agriculture there are 156 private farmers, 18 cooperative farmers and 32 farmers - workers of state-owned farms. Among the 853 delegates representing the circles of intelligentsia there are 50 professors, and 96 doctors and assistant professors. 970 delegates have a working class background and 553 of the delegates come from peasant families. Thus more than 85 per cent of the delegates come from families of workers and farmers. There are 356 women among the delegates which accounts for 20 per cent of the overall figure. 781 delegates are university graduates (44 per cent). 324 delegates (over 18 per cent) belong to youth organizations.

Wlodzimierz Mokrzyszczak also presented figures concerning the numerical state of the whole party. On May 31, 1986, the PUWP numbered 2,125,762 members and candidate members, with workers accounting for 38.2 per cent, peasants for 9 per cent, and intelligentsia -- 51.5 per cent.

Compared to June 1, 1981, that is in the period between congresses, the party membership dropped by nearly 700,000. Over the same period it admitted more than 160,000 new candidates.

4,500 candidates were admitted in 1981, in 1982 -- 7,500, in 1983 - 17,000, in 1984 - over 35,000, in 1985 - 63,000 and in the first five months of this year -- almost 37,000.

Speaking about the expectations of the party's base tied with the PUWP congress Mokrzyszczak said that it was expected to bring an objective assessment of the covered five-year path, a right description of the positive and negative factors in party work and socio-economic life, an adoption of an ambitious programme in line with society's aspirations but at the same time a realistic one, one motivating to action.

Wlodzimierz Mokrzyszczak, who headed the congress commission working on the draft amendments to the party statute, announced that the new provisions arose, first and foremost, from the experiences of the previous term.

As far as, for example, the elections at the congress are concerned, he said, it is proposed that the congress elect members of the Central Committee which in turn would elect the first secretary, the chairmen of central commissions and the Political Bureau. Asked whether the principle, adopted at the 9th Congress, of having no less than two persons running as candidates for a single post in the authorities would be upheld during the congress elections Mokrzyszczak pointed out that the practice of pre-congress conferences had proved that the number of candidates always exceeded by about 30 per cent the number of posts to be taken. Therefore, it should be expected, he declared, that at the 10th Congress, too, the number of candidates proposed to the central authorities would exceed the number of posts agreed by the congress.

Answering questions addressed to him, Jan Glowczyk reviewed the period of the party's activity between the 9th and 10th party Congresses. He said among other things:

"The fundamental problem was to halt the processes of anarchization of social life and to halt the slump in the material production and the national income. These two issues were closely interlocked. They occurred in a situation when the excessively speeding economic locomotive encountered obstacles. The establishment of order inside the country, which was the aim of martial law, and the halting of the economic slump were the basic problems of the first half of that period," he said.

"The most important task in the second half of that period was the reconstruction of the social fabric in work establishments and in the entire public life, through among other things, reorganization of trade unions, development of the activity of workers' and regional self-government," Glowczyk continued.

"We were also confronted with economic problems aggravated by economic restrictions imposed on Poland by the U.S. and some of its allies. Our efforts aimed to protect the living standards of the population were made at the cost of reduced investment processes. "Gradual reorientation of social attention from problems of the past towards the future is one of the main elements of the period between the 9th and 10th Congresses of the PUWP," he concluded.

Foreign newsmen covering the 10th PUWP Congress will be watching the debates on TV monitors installed in the press centre. The debates will be simultaneously translated into four foreign languages. Also, press conferences will be held every day in the press centre with the participation of the party's leadership. The new leadership of the party is expected to hold a meeting with newsmen after the congress. The spokesman for the congress will be meeting newsmen every day to brief them on the course of debates and answer their questions.

CONGRESS REOPENS; MESSNER, SIWICKI SPEAK

Discussion Opens

LD300724 Warsaw Domestic Service in Polish 0700 GMT 30 Jun 86

[Report on opening of second day of 10th PZPR Congress in Palace of Culture and Science in Warsaw; chaired by Jadwiga Nowikowska, PZPR Central Committee member -- live]

[Excerpt] At this very moment Wojciech Jaruzelski and Mikhail Gorbachev, general secretary of the CPSU Central Committee, are taking their places in the Presidium. The second day of the 10th PZPR Congress is about to start.

[Nowikowska] I cordially welcome the comrade delegates and guests of our congress. We are starting the second day of deliberations. In accordance with the agenda we are continuing the discussion. The first to speak today will be Comrade Florian Siwicki, minister of national defense. Comrade Andrzej Musielak will follow this speaker.

Defense Minister's Address

LD300823 Warsaw Domestic Service in Polish 0702 GMT 30 Jun 86

[Speech given by Florian Siwicki, candidate member of the PZPR Central Committee Politburo and minister of defense, at the 10th PZPR Congress held in the Congress Hall of the Palace of Culture and Science in Warsaw -- live]

[Text] Esteemed comrades! Service for the homeland is the loftiest soldierly duty. In the complex period between congresses, the Polish People's Army has carried out this duty selflessly and effectively in the most vital interests of the working people and for the sake of the independent existence of the nation.

For us, soldiers of the People's Army, the beginning of the eighties was particularly difficult, if not painful. Inheriting from our fathers and grandfathers a tradition of bloody battles for national liberation and for a new social shape of Poland we found ourselves faced with the destruction of the foundations of the state by anarchy-spreading anti-socialist forces encouraged by open ideological propaganda and material support from the external enemies of our country. This was all the more dangerous in that in their vanguard were all the professional revisionists -- those who for dozens of years have been striving to achieve a change in the European status quo established after World War II, a change in our borders.

It was also for this reason that when it became clear that the development of the situation was heading toward a national catastrophe, we resolutely opposed the anti-state and anti-national counterrevolutionary forces when we were urged to by the party and out of deeply patriotic and class-based reasons as soldiers of the People's Army in cooperation with functionaries of the Ministry of Internal Affairs. We did not allow the fate of the nation to be [word indistinct]. We prevented a fratricidal conflict. We stood in the defense of socialism.

At the same time we continued to fulfill the basic function of the armed forces; we guarded the independence of the fatherland. You see, the threat from imperialism not only continued to exist but, as a result of the crisis situation in Poland, increased. In combat vigilance on the ground, in the seas, and in the sky in closed ranks with our allies we guarded external security and the inviolability of our fatherland's borders. Never, not even for a moment, did Poland allow the opponent an unprotected gap in the defensive system of the Warsaw Pact. [applause]

Comrade delegates, we live in a divided, turbulent world assailed by many disputes. These are the realities of our times. Imperialism is making ever-renewed attempts to gain superiority. Military-industrial complexes are spiraling the demand for arms. They are using the benefits of the scientific-technological revolution as a weapon for the accelerated modernization of the war arsenal. We are watching these steps very attentively, particularly as, at the moment, the opponent is introducing weapons systems never known before, of enormous destructive capacity. He is entrusting these systems to highly complicated, artificial intelligence. This is particularly dangerous, especially if armament is linked with anti-communist propaganda and so, with an apocalyptic force blinded by hatred for everything that is progressive.

This makes the solution of international problems more difficult, creates aggression, and intensifies the threat.

We are not, however, fatalists. We believe that reason will prevail, that peace will be maintained. This lies, after all, in the greatest interest of all mankind; no one would benefit in case of war. Everyone would perish. At the basis of our conviction about the possibility of maintaining peace lies a belief in the triumph of peace initiatives, disarmament, and the strength of the Warsaw Pact in constituting an effective barrier against the endeavors of the enemies of socialism.

We counter the adventurist tendencies with a different road for world development, a world without arms and wars organized with the principles of peaceful coexistence and equal security for everyone in mind. The deeply humanistic sense of these strivings is a clear expression for us of the many important initiatives of Comrade Mikhail Gorbachev, CPSU Central Committee general secretary, in the Soviet plan for freeing the world from nuclear and chemical weapons by the end of this century. The successive disarmament proposals of the Warsaw Pact Political Advisory Committee -- approved at the June meeting in Budapest -- once again confirm our intentions and sincere desire for peace.

In constant actions in aid of its strengthening, People's Poland participates to a considerable degree in the Rapacki Plan, the declaration on educating society in the spirit of peace, the proposal for reducing weapons in central Europe, and the joint initiative in organizing the Conference on Security and Cooperation in Europe. These are only some of our initiatives that serve to decrease tension and prevent the outbreak of war. We are actively participating in the European disarmament negotiations.

In the struggle to remove regional armed conflicts the Polish People's Army also plays its part. Our soldiers have been taking part for over 30 years in internationalist missions serving the cause of peace and freedom in Asia, Africa, and the Near East.

However, as long as the aggressive NATO bloc exists, as long as effective disarmament agreements are not signed, then the coalitional system of defense for the socialist community, the Warsaw Pact, must function efficiently. Fulfilling the will of the party, serving the nation and its peaceful, creative work, the Polish Army brings active participation corresponding to the scale and potential of our country, to the strengthening of the defense forces of our community. We are making permanent the brotherhood of arms. We are widening many-sided cooperation with the most important, deciding pillar of the coalition, with our closest ally, the enormous Soviet Army. We are widening the range and enriching the forms of cooperation with all the armies of the states of our coalition. Esteemed delegates, assuring the security of Poland, which finds a clear reflection in the draft congress documents, is the leading task of the socialist state. The material and moral bases of defense are being built in all fields of social and economic life. Every institution and social organization, every citizen has the constitutional obligation to serve this cause, to bring the appropriate contribution to the defense of his own and the entire nation.

We treat this, in the Armed Forces, as a constant order for the systematic improvement of all elements of the Army's efficiency. I wish to report to the comrade delegates that we exploited the time between congresses well for the equalization of fronts and improvement of battle skills of particular branches of the Armed Forces, and we used the financial and material resources given to us with a feeling of civic responsibility, as good managers. In effect, the Polish People's Army comes to the congress with a significant achievement in battle and political training, in the economy and in social service. During the precongress campaign, we subjected intra-army problems to critical judgment, especially our own.

Party principledness and discernment in getting to know soldierly daily life allowed us to fully adapt the programs of ideological and upbringing work, combat training and education of the professional cadre, and the exploitation of material resources to changing circumstances.

The principle in force in the Armed Forces of one person leadership is in a wide degree inspired and supported by party activity and by collegial, scientific, and social advice. This form of management has the understanding of the soldierly collectives and allows the optimal solution of the difficult problems of the rationalization of the Army's professional structure, especially in the aspect of strengthening its fighting elements without increasing overall numbers; it allows the improvement of the organization of army life and the increase of the services' effectiveness. The cadre decides on the success of these activities.

This is for the most part a young cadre. It is sufficient to say that the age of regimental commanders -- in civilian terminology these sui generis directors of large army enterprises deciding about the strength and efficiency of the army -- fluctuates between 33 to 38 years. This is a thoroughly educated cadre, politically mature, and highly devoted. Such is the cadre backbone of the army, its weight-bearing framework, the foundation of its strength. The last few years have shown yet again that our cadre can always be counted on, that this is an ideologically tempered, competent section of the Polish intelligentsia, an unfailing party aktiv. [applause]

The general tissue of our Armed Forces, the basic soldiers, are a synthetic reflection of the values and attitudes of all Polish youth. Out of every 10 recruits entering the army, 8 have completed schooling beyond the basic level. This creates suitable conditions for training younger commanders and specialists for a modern and highly technical army. Overall, these young people are good. However, we state with concern that the level of education is not always matched by the civic awareness of the recruits. Arousing concern are, in particular, frequent instances of people not knowing the realities of the threat to the country, not understanding the necessity of personally doing service for the benefit of society and the defense of the country, and understanding Poland's most recent history superficially or in a downright false manner.

Military service also often reveals their physical flabbiness and mental weakness, the consequences of shortcomings in the development system in conditions of progressive technical civilization. This makes it difficult for these young boys to carry out complex soldierly tasks and creates a lot of extra work for military instructors.

In perceiving not only the military but above all the general social importance of these problems we are supplementing, thanks to the increased efforts of the cadres, sociopolitical knowledge. We are eliminating in part the deformations in the civic awareness of recruits. We are improving their physical fitness.

Taking into account the continuing ideological struggle, we are adapting training programs and the activities of party and youth organizations to new requirements. We are enriching cultural-educational work with vital values and we are popularizing mass sport. We are trying to make sure that the Army is a school of effective civic development and that it plays a meaningful role in the process of national integration. We want to see that the Army joins in the service for socialist Poland, people from various social milieux, with various outlooks on the world and with differing political maturity, professional training, and life experience. We consider this to be our party duty toward the nation.

We will also continue to be actively present at [word indistinct] sections of the broad development front, chiefly in the patriotic defense sphere. We announce the participation of military pedagogues in the drawing up of a modern development model that will ensure the shaping of an enlightened, honorable, and physically efficient person, of a good citizen of People's Poland -- a model that will both eliminate the negative consequences of the phenomena of frustration and nihilism, of taking the easy way out, and of a consumer-oriented way of life. This is our primary duty toward young people.

No generation comes about fully mature. Each generation has to fulfill social tasks defined by a situation that has been shaped by history and the conditions of its existence. For the older generations, for combatants of the National Liberation War, and for the pioneers of the construction of the foundations of socialism, a free, independent, and just Poland was just such a goal. They brought this about. Through this they earned general gratitude and generally merited respect.

The young generation is facing the task of ensuring -- through effective learning and creative, productive work -- growth in the strength of the state and the security of socialist Poland, and for themselves and the whole of society a better, more favorable tomorrow.

Comrades, the assessment of the Army contained in the PZPR Central Committee report, presented by Comrade Army General Wojciech Jaruzelski, first secretary, is for us, party members, for all soldiers, highly satisfying. At the same time, we accept it as an obligation for further, exemplary service and work in all spheres. We also apply this to the economic sphere. With this aim in mind, we have universalized the institutional system of rational economic management. It is bearing fruit through the considerable growth of material and moral values. It demands and teaches all soldiers to have an economic approach to the national wealth. It brings about significant savings. In this way, we will gain the resources to enable above-plan solutions to many social and welfare problems of basic military service soldiers, of the professional cadres and army employees, our comrades in work and service.

Science is deciding, to an increasing degree, on the success of all our strivings. We have at our disposal its considerable potential. Over 2,300 employees with scientific degrees and titles are serving in higher education institutions, in research institutions, and on staffs and commands. We see the need to expand mutually advantageous cooperation with civilian scientific centers and also within the international and allied system. Scientists' discoveries and the creative passions of the wide circle of rationalizers and innovators along with the productive functioning of defense industry enterprises is the foundation of the technological advancement of the Armed Forces.

This also adds significant value to the national economy. From our unity with the nation, from the identity of common loss there flows an unrepulsed desire for that which serves the defense of the country to also maximally serve society. We wish our participation in bringing the country material values to be ever more significant. Such possibilities are created by modern technology and highly qualified specialists. We are concentrating this productive potential on objects and areas; "Siwicki loses train of thought] on the important for the development of the country's recultivation and drainage of agricultural lands, the implementation of large building projects in the fields of land and water engineering. [sentence as heard] In the implementation of difficult defense, ideological-educational, and economic tasks we constantly feel the support of the party and the trust of society. For the Peoples' Army, these are priceless values.

Standing on guard defending Poland, we will make them permanent through thorough, self-sacrificing soldierly service. Comrade delegates, the Polish People's Army is shaped by the party.

All that is associated with it is, for us soldiers, sincerely close. For that reason, we will conscientiously and effectively implement the resolutions undertaken at the 10th PZPR Congress. We will, guiding ourselves by the directives of the superior of the Armed Forces, unalterably defend the country against every enemy, unfailingly shield its borders, defend the socialist state, and serve the nation. Thank you. [applause]

Ferensztajn Address

LD301304 Warsaw Domestic Service in Polish 0736 GMT 30 Jun 86

[Speech by Bogumil Ferensztajn, first secretary of the Katowice Voivodship Committee, on 30 June at the 10th PZPR Congress in Warsaw -- live]

[Text] Esteemed comrade delegates! In the campaign preceeding the 10th Congress, the conviction was expressed that the reforms started 5 years ago by the Ninth Congress have gained social support. The line of struggle, accord, and socialist reforms has proven itself, gaining ever wider support from the working class in our voivodship. Deep sociopolitical transformations have occurred in the period between congresses, as much in society as in the party itself. The Katowice party organization today, more than ever before, is an experienced political force, numerically smaller but at the same time more solid, with a better knowledge of its strong features and its own weaknesses.

Analyzing the current sociopolitical and economic situation in the voivodship and in the country, we can today, from the perspective of time, assess more deeply and more completely the correctness of the wise and bold decision of the party leadership, and personally of Comrade Wojciech Jaruzelski, which stopped the dangerous process of anarchy and destabilization in the life of the country.

We also draw conclusions from the past; we self-critically address ourselves to the results of our political work; and we seek the causes of inadequacies and the methods leading to their removal. Behind us is a period that demanded great efforts in ordering our intraparty affairs for the consolidation and strengthening of our ranks, for regaining the trust of the working class. Before us stands the task of consequentially continuing the process of renewal, strengthening and developing the serving role of our party in relation to the working class and the nation, and its leading role in the socialist state and its guiding role in society. At the same time, we must more effectively influence the sphere of socioeconomic tasks, the small ones and the great ones. We must organize forces that will fulfill these tasks, attaining real progress in every sector. We must undertake this great historical task of transforming consciousness and desires while remaining aware of all the objective and subjective conditions. To put it briefly, the world is not waiting, nor can we. The party must act for Polish people; to be able, capable, and not wait. [applause]

Our trump card is our considerable industrial potential, but what is most important is that we have an enormous army of educated and professional people, both party and nonparty members. Among them are extraordinary people: rationalizers, inventors, scientists, and organisers. Our task is to win all of them for the party program and to create the conditions for utilizing their knowledge and skills. Our party activity is gaining increasing support in the Silesian-Dabrow Basin. We will continue our efforts so that it may become more and more universal, more tangible in every group, bearing fruit not in declarations but in concrete deeds. This is confirmed by the fact that this year we have accepted nearly 5,000 comrades into the party, that a movement demanding a party identity card -- primarily among payroll workers and young people -- has begun.

The working people of Katowice Voivodship have often given, and continue to give, examples of honest, selfless, and involved fulfillment of production tasks and of triumph over difficulties. It was, after all, miners who became the proverbial driving force, taking our economy out of the most difficult situation.

Our enterprises' work forces fulfilled the difficult production tasks set by the 3-year plan, and most of them achieved industrial production matching the precrisis period. The results, however, are not satisfactory in light of social needs.

This made us go on the offensive in order to overcome many subjective barriers. In the precongress campaign we examined how to better and more effectively exploit the production potential and the high qualifications of the cadres of engineers and scientists, and the experience of the working class for socioeconomic development, scientific-technical progress, an increase in the social productivity of labor and its better organization, and as a result, an improvement in the difficult living conditions in our industrial region. We see the elimination of bureaucratic phenomena as the main source of reserves in effectively applied scientific-technical progress and in the better organization of labor and technological processes.

We fully support the view contained in the Central Committee report which says that, following political renewal, there must now take place a technical-organizational renewal of the entire economy. In the shadow of the great, and hitherto traditional, industry of Silesia and the Silesian Basin, innovative initiatives that typify the progress, development, and needs of our economy are being born. Long-term plans do not envisage an increase in coal extraction or an increase in iron and steel output. We think this is correct. This provides an opportunity for necessary changes in the sturucture of industry and for more rapid development of the processing industry.

For example, comrades from the Silesian polytechnic have already begun, together with several factories, the production of new electronic industry elements, particularly automation industry elements. And the Hydro Budowa Slask factory already mentioned in the Central Committee report, after concluding agreements with other factories, has begun the comprehensive construction of an affluent plant in the ready-for-use system that is new in our conditions.

The first robots have been introduced in the (? Erq-Zabkowice) enterprise to service the production line. We want to popularize these good experiences. Therefore, we must strongly support competence -- Those who want to and who can better organize the work of teams, remove hindrances, utilize reserves, work effectively, and foresee the consequences of actions. This signifies the party's need to support people who are distinguished by knowledge, qualifications, personal commitment, and boldness.

We must more boldly support people who accept socialist values, party people and nonparty people; we must show party trust but also demand personal responsibility. Working people in our large industrial region expect the government to present and undertake still more effective actions for directing the economy, for defeating the socially and economically troublesome excessive inflation.

Comrade delegates, in Katowice Voivodship many problems have accumulated over many years. These must be solved successively and consequentially, not only for the good of the citizens but in the interest of the entire national economy, and with its participation.

We must speak the truth, frankly and openly, about the complicated problems in the Polish coal mining industry, about the specific and difficult conditions of life and work for the citizens of our large industrial region. We do not speak about protection of the environment, but we do speak about protection of the peoples' living conditions.

We have made and continue to make great efforts to solve -- or at least to begin to solve -- the many complex problems that have developed over dozens of years, and are of key significance, both for today and for the future of Silesia and the Dabrow Basin. Just as the rest of our national economy, we are repeatedly facing the dilemma of choice: What should be done today and what should be given up? Which tasks are more urgent and which are we forced to leave for the future? Here I would like to express, on behalf of the citizens of Katowice Voivodship, words of thanks to the central authorities for understanding our difficult and complex affairs.

Comrade delegates, the distancing of the threat of war, the search for roads leading to disarmament, and the removal of the threat of mankind's nuclear annihilation are problems absorbing both party and nonparty members. Numerous peace and disarmament initiatives -- presented by the Soviet Union at the 27th CPSU Congress, and recently in the message of the Warsaw Pact Political Consultative Committee -- are met with the universal support of Katowice Voivodship's working people. The citizens of our voivodship, a considerable part of which was torn from the motherland for so long, are particularly troubled by the reborn revisionist and revanchist tendencies in the FRG. We say a decisive no to these endeavors, which are dangerous for Poland and for peace. [applause]

Comrade delegates, the resolutions of our 10th Congress should begin a transformation in attitudes, inspire activity, knock down the subjective barriers of inability, and create the conditions for coping with the challenges of the 21st century. On behalf of the voivodship party organization and on the authority of the delegates from Katowice Voivodship, I express our full support for the assessments and tasks contained in the Central Committee report. The public's expectations connected with the deliberations of our congress are great. We decide jointly and we are jointly responsible. This is why the Katowice party organization expresses the conviction that the involvement of the entire party and your, Comrade Jaruzelski, well-known consistency in taking stock of how we have fulfilled these tasks are a guarantee that these tasks will be implemented. Thank you.

Warsaw Leader's Address

LD301455 Warsaw Domestic Service in Polish 1020 GMT 30 Jun 86

[Speech by Jan Kubasiewicz, first secretary of the Warsaw PZPR Committee, at 30 June session of 10th PZPR Congress in Warsaw -- live]

[Text] Comrade delegates and esteemed guests! The Warsaw party organization, just like the whole party, has come to the 10th Congress ideologically and politically strengthened, enriched with new initiatives and experience, and with the huge capital of precongress discussion. The period since the Ninth Congress has shown clearly that the party is strong in those places where all of its members set a good example and where their attitudes, personal integrity, and boldness and discussions with nonparty people about human concerns evoke respect and confidence. In places where this is the case we can promote innovation, stimulate progress, combat evil, and gain support. Things are different when the aktiv works from behind a desk, stands in the corner, and does not overcome difficulties.

I am speaking of this because our thorough and self-critical precongress review of forces pointed to phenomena of inertia in many organizations and certain echelons. Hence, our main task at present is to direct our efforts to work among nonparty people and to raise the standard of the work in the party's weak links.

You see, we proceed from the Leninist assumption that the party can only be as strong as its basic links. Constant presence among the working people and work for people, speaking openly about the sources of evil and about how to eliminate them constitute our slogan. We believe that we have not done everything in this matter. This is borne out by examples, which continue to occur, of arrogance, callousness, and bureaucracy.

Comrades, in fully accepting the contents of the Central Committee report and seeking a formula for implementing the thoughts contained in it, we propose that the report-back and election campaign after the 10th Congress should be staged under the slogan of strengthening basic party organizations and of the great battle for management efficiency and consistency in the implementation of adopted resolutions. [applause]

May each one of us, members of the PZPR, take upon himself concrete tasks in this sphere. The congress will draw up the strategic aims of the party and will define the key directions and tasks for the coming 5-year period and beyond. Their implementation will depend on iron consistency and effective activity. One must state self-critically that effectiveness of action in the party has not been sufficient so far. Comrade Wojciech Jaruzelski spoke of this at the Warsaw precongress conference. In our style of work there are still many superficialities and a great deal of formalism. A party worker invited to a factory conference said candidly: You speak at your meetings about the same thing that we speak about among ourselves. The thing is that nothing happens as a result of this, either.

Frequently, so-called activity ends with the passing of a resolution and the formulation of a timetable, not with the fact that something has really changed, that the problem has been solved. In striving for objective criteria in work assessment, we have become bogged down in counting the number of meetings or the number of those speaking. The person, his troubles and affairs become lost in all this. We must put an end to this. Nothing is more harmful than to tolerate this style of work.

The party is relying on strengthening the national economy, on accelerating effective and balanced development. We will carry the burden of this task if we are able to influence the transformation of people's behavior, if we are able to gain the support of workers and the engineering and technical personnel for every intention. The party must guide using the principle: Good wages, but only for good work. Ideological and educational influence should be effectively linked with incentive measures of a material nature and the consistent realization of work discipline.

Warsaw scientific circles, through their research and training activity, ensure for the country an influx of ideas and technical personnel, particularly in special fields. Almost one-quarter of the patents and utility patterns granted to technical educational establishments in the last 5 years belong to the Warsaw Technical University. Warsaw coordinates almost 60 percent of the basic research formulated in the central plan. We will develop and improve Warsaw's important function and role as a servant of the country in the coming years, in order to better exploit the existing potential. The capital provides many solutions and products upon which the development of modernity and improvement in the quality of products, and the improvement of work organization in the whole national economy are conditioned.

An example may be such technological achievements as the Masovia 10-16 microcomputer, the energy-saving Polkolor TV tube, or the champion of Warsaw-85 technology -- European class digital voltmeters and multimeters from the Meratronic electronic measuring instrument factory.

The technological achievements of the voivodship do not obscure the obvious delays, neglect, and unfortunately, here and there, stagnation. Workplaces that rely on the rapid initiation of scientific-technological development continue to belong to a small group. The authors of ideas meet with indifference, even reluctance. Often, a negative opinion is voiced only because the idea is not born in one's own firm, because someone else was better. Even projects that have been tested in practice do not find willing people to undertake mass production. An example is that of fluid and gas vibration flowmeters and laser apparatus for eye operations. In such cases, the intervention of the party is imperative. We are doing this in the Warsaw Committee and in concerned party cells. Our ambition is to increase Warsaw's contribution to the country's development, along with other national centers of creative ideas.

We are relying on people who are active and enterprising, on an influx of young talent to management posts. That is why we have established an Enterprise Management Institute. We support the rational concentration of resources in industries and branches that determine progress and our position in the world's civilization race. We support innovative economic links between various branches of industry and between industry and science. In this respect a great deal depends on more effective work with management personnel at all levels, including central institutions.

Comrades, we set ambitious tasks before Warsaw's cultural community. We think Warsaw's cultural institutions and creative circles can and should serve the whole country even better. But we need more openness and more consistency in the struggle for the socialist face of Polish culture. Decisive and uniform cooperation between all factors responsible for the shape of Polish culture is necessary for this to be achieved.

Warsaw, rebuilt through the efforts of the entire nation, serves the entire nation. It is the capital by its will; by virtue of this it is the common property of all Poles. That is why we have great respect, for example, for the work force of Budostal-6 from Dabrowa Gornicza, which is currently repairing the Poniatowskiego Bridge; for the soldiers of the Warsaw Military District who built the Syreny Bridge; and for the work forces from the Myslowice Mining Projects Enterprise and the Wloclawek Hydrobudowa, who are building the Warsaw Metro.

Warsaw citizens complain most of all about the shortage of housing. This, in any case, is a nationwide problem. The present situation upsets everybody, especially young people and workers. Actions taken so far have turned out to be insufficient. Both the present housing policy and the construction system do not bring results commensurate with social needs. Consequently, the operation of economic mechanisms for reform of the construction industry requires a thorough assessment. If we are to leave the 10th Congress with the belief that the party gives priority to the housing problem in its social policy, it is necessary to undertake multidirectional, cohesive, and consistent actions. Today, we not only have to build more, better, and more cheaply but above all -- more quickly. We also have to better manage and administer the already existing housing potential. We should define equally the duties of the state and the active role of work enterprises, as well as of citizens themselves, in solving housing matters. The entire economy should be working for the construction industry. Everything that is an impediment must be removed, that is, impracticable regulations concerning land, technology, housing regulations, and so on. The solution of the construction issue should be entrusted to people who want to and who can cope with this task.

Otherwise, our assumptions will come to nothing. There will be another housing program without support. In this matter, just as in some others, Warsaw expects support from the leadership of the party and the government through consistent implementation of already adopted decisions.

We sincerely state: Warsaw citizens will give their all, but there are certain matters we cannot cope with on our own. Comrades, in the precongress discussion there were several allusions to the achievements of the 27th CPSU Congress. Decided support was given in many appeals and resolutions to the peace initiatives of Comrade Mikhail Gorbachev. Conviction was expressed that the experiences of the Land of the Soviets and the party of Lenin are helpful in the solution of our own problems. The working people of the capital follow with interest and sympathy the processes of accelerating and rebuilding, the modern transformations that are occurring in the Soviet Union on the CPSU's initiative.

Comrade general secretary of the CPSU Central Committee! In the name of the Warsaw party organization, permit me to very sincerely invite you to a meeting tomorrow with the working people of Warsaw's Red Wola District. [applause]

In conclusion, I assure the 10th Congress of the party that the decisions taken here will be implemented by us consequentially and effectively. We will direct all our strength for the good of the working people and for socialism, for Poland and for peace on earth. [applause]

Messner Speech

LD301500 Warsaw Domestic Service in Polish 1330 GMT 30 Jun 86

[Speech by Zbigneiw Messner, chairman of the Council of Ministers, at the 10th PZPR Congress at the Hall of Congresses in the Palace of Culture and Science in Warsaw -- live]

[Text] Esteemed comrade delegates, dear guests: The directions of the country's development for the present 5-year period and for the nineties, were outlined in the report of the PZPR Central Committee by Comrade Wojciech Jaruzelski, first secretary. You, comrade delegates, have received material in which the execution of the tasks resulting from the resolution of the Ninth Congress, the progress achieved in implementing the economic reform and the results of the 3-year plan are presented. The government has also presented for the political approval of the congress the preliminary draft of the national socioeconomic plan for 1986-90 and the directions for improving the system of the functioning of the economy. I would therefore like to focus the attention of the comrades on certain problems that the government thinks are the most important and on the basic conditions and means for realizing the assumed goals.

The results achieved in the period between the congresses point unambiguously to the fact that development trends have been restored in the economy after halting the collapse and arresting the disorganization of public life. The tasks of the 3-year plan have been successfully fulfilled. A clear increase in the national income has been achieved. Supplies to the market and the living conditions of working people have improved. The economic and legal-organizational system has been radically reconstructed. Poland has been restored to the position it deserves among the socialist states. Progress has been achieved in the construction of a place for Poland on the international arena.

The program that the government is currently proposing envisages the development and strengthening of successful trends.

In order to implement this we cannot simply rest content with their mere continuation.

Deeper, qualitative changes are needed, as well as permanent efforts toward bringing the economy onto the course of extensive development. All countries of the socialist community have set the same goals. This was particularly strongly expressed at the 27th CPSU Congress.

While appreciating positive achievements and results, one should also see weaknesses. The policy of protecting consumption, which has been conducted in difficult conditions in recent years, requires a considerable reduction in investments. As regards effect there is excessive involvement of labor resources, raw and other materials, the efficiency of investment processes is low, and labor organization and productivity leaves a lot to be desired. The allocation of considerable means to partially service debts reduces the national income to be distributed and import capabilities. Generally known are Western restrictions on access to new techniques and technologies, and the competitiveness of our export offer is still insufficient.

In spite of a considerable decrease in the pace of inflation, it has been impossible to reduce it to the planned level. Also in the current year the dynamics of production are unfortunately accompanied by an excessive increase of money income, which is more rapid than planned.

During preparation of a draft 5-year socioeconomic plan a lot of attention was devoted to eliminating these weaknesses, and to practicability of undertakings. The conditionings of the development have been diagnosed much better than in the past, and potential possibilities have been assessed.

The working out of the draft plan has been preceded by several years of research and study work. Contributing their expertise were the Polish Academy of Sciences, higher schools, scientific and research units, the Chief Technical Organization, the Polish Economic Society, and other social and professional organizations. The Socioeconomic Council at the Sejm contributed many valuable suggestions. Variants of the draft plan were the subject of wide consultation in the last year. Multioption programs have been prepared for development of almost all branches of the economy and public life.

Is there a chance to implement bolder and more far-reaching plans?

With certainty, yes. If concern for the good fulfillment of accepted tasks is accompanied by a larger than assumed progress in the effectiveness of management, the bases for the overfulfillment of the plan, faster modernization, and growth, then a more rapid increase in consumption will be assured. Needed, however, is a decided and consequential effort by all society to exploit this chance. The stategic aim for the next 5-year period, which is the formation of the abilities for balanced and effective development of the country, marks out the areas and directions of socioeconomic policy. Chief among these are modernization of the economy and changes in its structure, the acceleration of the tempo of growth in the effectiveness and balance of the economy, and finally the raising of the level and improvement of the quality of life of society. The effects of the implementation of tasks in each of these fields are revealing themselves already in the current 5-year period. They will constitute an important factor in the further speeding up qualitative transformations in the decade of the nineties.

Comrade delegates, the most difficult decision impinging also on the further perspective is setting the proportions of the division of national income: for consumption and for investments and also specifying the structure of investment. The cardinal principle, which cannot be violated in this, is the reality of the plan, the balancing of needs and potential. The evaluation leads to the conclusion that it is possible to increase national income in the current 5-year period by around 16 to 19 percent. The proposals as to the choice of the dynamics of consumption, the dynamics of investment, which form the material bases for the increase of consumption in the future, rest on this. This has always been a difficult choice. There were years when unreal investment programs were drawn up. There were also years when the authorities, under pressure, but also to gain popularity, preferred current consumption to an excessive degree, thus neglecting development aims.

To this day, we are suffering the effects of such programs which, contrary to elementary economic laws, and the country's capabilities, forced through at the same time the excessive fulfillment of consumer production and investment. Irrespective of the nature of the mistakes made, the effects were always similar. The imbalance was heightened, efficiency deteriorated and the pace of development weakened. We are approaching this choice in the decade of the eighties with even greater responsibility. Because of the great drop in national income at the beginning of these years, we consciously sacrificed developmental aims while rescuing, to the extent possible, the standard of living. The entire sphere of material production found itself in a very difficult or almost critical situation. It demands reconstruction and thorough modernization.

We do not propose stepping up the increase in consumption or, even more so, effecting its decrease for this aim. However, a change in proportions in aid of increasing investments in the distribution of the national income is necessary. In defining the level of investment expenditure in individual sectors of the economy, we were subject to the enormous pressure of justified, urgent needs, which is impossible to meet on a road without investments.

Here also, during the course of previous discussions at the congress, valid initiatives of this type have been presented. Around Z17 million would have to be allocated for their realization. This would mean doubling the outlay in relation to the past 5-year period and a drastic fall in consumption. Ultimately, then, even with an estimated 3.5-percent annual growth rate in national income, Z10 million is recognized as the maximum level of investment in this 5-year period. This difference reflects the range of required corrections of earlier prepared work at various stages in draft developmental programs, the advancement and restructuring of sectors, branches, industries, and enterprises. It transpires from the analyses conducted that in this 5-year period, the growth in supply of raw materials and materials will constitute, at the most, 1.7 percent annually. Nearly half of the increase in national income must be achieved through better management of resources. For this reason, also, investments serving the modernization of production and a reduction in the use of materials and energy are gaining preference.

The fundamental criterion for investment decisions must be effectiveness. It applies equally to all. The entire system of management of the economy in the 5-year period will be subordinated to this principle. Hence, there will be particular stress on scientific and technical progress, a savings program, and on the growth of profitable export. Therefore, I fully share Comrade Miodowicz's thesis that in the competition among the systems, the winner will be not the one preaching popular, pleasant, and catching slogans, but the one who is more effective in operation, and this we all are lacking. [applause]

For the first time, we will endeavour to satisfy the majority of the growth needs for energy and raw materials through undertaking savings. Earmarked for their implementation is Zl billion, nearly one-third of all investment resources directed for the development of industry. Changes in the production structure demand faster use of electronics and automation, new production technologies, and materials and goods of often better and new properties. It is indispensable to achieve meaningful progress in the sphere of quality.

These are the most essential premises in structural changes. The program of changes for the next few years has been prepared. It provides strong differentiation of the rate of development of individual branches toward modern ones that make use of the most modern achievements of scientific and technical thought.

Consistent implementation of the specially selected 49 enterprises mainly in the electroengineering and chemical industries; adaptation of economic and legal and organizational mechanisms toward speeding up the restructuring of enterprises -- this is an undertaking of considerable dimensions. Nevertheless, we are treating it as the first step in the process of systematic reconstruction of the Polish economy because we assume that as the implementation of these undertakings proceeds successfully, by the end of eighties, and particularly at the beginning of the next decade, conditions will be created for considerably widening and speeding up structural changes.

The idea will constitute the foundations for the long-term plan for a period of 15 years. Such a plan is already being prepared by the government in accordance with the party's directive. I think that the long-term plan up to the year 2000 can be generally discussed at the second national conference of delegates.

The basic factor of modernization will be electronization, particularly of industry. Comrade Musielak spoke about that subject today at length. In the current 5-year period, due to wider use of microelectronics in drive assemblies which automatic regulate the burning of fuel, electronization of production in mining, metallurgy, and the chemical industry, energy consumption will decrease. In some areas it should amount to 15-20 percent.

Series manufacture of complex robots and manipulators and of components and subassemblies for microelectronics and hydraulic servo equipment will be started. There will also be an increase of some 40 percent in the manufacture of advanced consumer equipment, including new television and radio receivers, tape recorders, video recorders, compact disc players, as well as microcomputers. The production level of the last item will reach approximately 100,000 in 1990. The base for new construction materials, application of chemical processes using biotechnologies and intensification and modernization of petrochemistry and chemistry of coke will be developed. The domestic manufacture of materials and components for many branches of the chemical industry will be increased. The manufacture of pharmaceutical goods will grow by 75 percent.

Automation of transport processes, wider application of diesel engines in road transport, continuing replacement of steam and diesel rail traction by electric traction and development of container cargo handling will create conditions for improving the work of transport and especially for reducing fuel consumption.

Technical support for agriculture will be served by the completion of the Ursus Tractor Factory and its cooperating enterprises, as well as by the fertilizer complex in Police, development of agricultural equipment factories, and cooperation with the Soviet Union in the manufacture of small tractors and land-improvement installations.

A significant factor in increasing plant production as the basis for animal husbandry will be the development of agricultural chemistry, especially fertilizer, pesticide and soil lime industries, and water supply in the countryside. Land improvement is planned on 700,000 hectares of arable area. Modernization of agriculture will depend to a large extent on the decisions of people's councils. This concerns, above all, land improvement. Necessary resources for this must also be found in local budgets, even at the cost of reduced spending in other areas. In order to make full use of plant and animal production, an extensive investment program will be implemented in the food industry. Outlays here will increase by nearly half and will be concentrated on the building and modernization of facilities for dairy, cereal, milling and baking, fat-production, potato-processing, cold-storage and fruit and vegetable industries. These investment directions will determine an efficient use of agricultural production factors that are already available.

In metallurgy, to ensure better supplies for the manufacturing industries, a significant effort will be directed at reducing production costs, intensifying steel processing, and increasing the share of high-quality products. This will be achieved through refurbishment and modernization at the Lenin and Katowice steelworks, which in turn will create conditions for eliminating the production of pig iron and steel at obsolete and exploited metallurgical departments, and will provide qualitatively better steel for further manufacture. Concern for the future of the metallurgical industry was expressed in the speeches by Comrade Matoga from the Lenin steelworks and Comrade Piatek from the Bierut steelworks. Their proposals are partly reflected in the metallurgy modernization program for the immediate future.

A key matter for the future and for maintaining a steady balance of fuels and energy is the rationalization of their consumption. Maintaining the present consumption trends threatens, namely, as we are approaching the nineties, to cause a considerable deficit in power-producing capacities. Unfortunately, even the considerable resources allocated for investment in this sphere will not bring about a marked increase in supply. For instance, in hard coal the investment resources will only make up for the decline in extraction capacities. The time of cheap energy has ended. In connection with the ever-increasing costs of obtaining a dominating role for it in the government's program is being played by investment projects which reduce the consumption of fuels and energy in the whole economy and which replace energy-intensive installations with new economical ones.

The situation requires savings that increase year by year and that, in the year 1990, will exceed the equivalent of 20 million metric tons of conventional fuel.

The share of electricity from lignite will increase in the supplies of (?fuels) and energy. From 1990 the national nuclear power industry will be an increasingly important source. Decisions have been adopted whose aim is to ensure safety in the functioning of nuclear power stations. Strict safety requirements will be introduced during the construction and future exploitation of the Zarnowiec power station. A system of early warning about possible dangers is being set up. There will be improvement in the supply to radiological protection services of checking and measuring equipment.

We must also particularly show concern for working conditions in the mines and prevent threats to life. The latest mining catastrophe in the Bobrek mine that was so tragic in its consequences fills us all with profound sadness and anxiety. We are conducting intensive work on diagnosing hazards and research on effective means of prevention. We are allocating considerable resources for this purpose. The thing is that subjective factors should be completely removed and objective factors that affect the threat to the work of miners should be reduced to a minimum.

Comrade Marek Drozik from the Grodziec mine in Bedzin talked about this with concern today.

The great scale of the required investment effort obliges us in a particular manner to rationally exploit machinery and equipment that has already been installed. Meanwhile, the assets we have at our disposal are not used to the proper extent. As the shift pattern of labor decreases, in some cases idleness of machines and equipment is estimated at 30 percent of normal time. Rail and road transport have considerable so-called empty trips. Ways and the range of the utilization of secondary materials is awakening serious concern. Still too low is the percentage of spare parts, which are regenerated. In this connection, numerous systematic and immediate tidying-up actions have been taken. Work is in progress on draft legal, economic, financial, and organizational legal regulations. There are great reserves for improving the effectiveness of management in operating systems. They must be fully used.

Comrade delegates, scientific and technological progress will be decisive for economic growth trends and the scale of structural changes. Directions of the development of science up to the end of the current century, and basic factors of increasing its role in the national economy have been defined by the Third Congress of Polish Science. The majority of voices in discussion so far pointed out the reserves in this sphere. In the current 5-year period, the conditions of the functioning of the sphere of science and technology will be considerably improved. The outlays for its development will grow almost twofold in 1990. Never in the past were such high-level outlays reached. More important is proper use of these means and quick utilization of research results in economic practice. Therefore, the role of the center in directing research problems of basic importance has been strengthened.

At the same time, economic and organizational conditions are being created for activating economic units as regards practical application and modernization of the production structure. Changes in the production profile of an enterprise or a branch are an important part in the whole process of restructuring the economy. As the result of comprehensive work on a program of development of science and technology, nine preferred domains have been chosen, including electronization, automation, and robotization, and new materials and technologies. All in all about Zl billion has been allocated in the current 5-year period for the implementation of research program and government orders. We center the money mainly on three mentioned domains, allocating for these goals half of the whole sum.

A central fund for development of science and technology has been set up, and within its framework a fund for assisting practical applications. Additional sources for financing the purchase of equipment and materials abroad is the new foreign currency fund. Funds for technological and economic progress and practical application effects are also being set up in the enterprises. Urgent research and development tasks leading to the modernization of production have been encompassed by government orders. The executors of these orders have been granted considerable income-tax relief and have been given facilitation for investment. Possibilities have been created for the organizational integration of science and economy through the setting up of scientific and production centers.

A considerable step has been taken in the integration of research potential of socialist countries. Adopted on the personal initiative of Comrade Mikhail Gorbachev at the 45th session, a comprehensive program of scientific and technological progress of the CEMA countries until the year 2000, provides for close cooperation in five chosen directions: Electronics, integrated automation, the nuclear power industry, new materials and technologies, and biotechnology. They have all found a prominent place in our research programs.

Bilateral contacts are developing successfully. We have embarked on the implementation of a long-term comprehensive scientific-technical progress program, signed with the Soviet Union. It introduces new forms of cooperation, such as the creation of joint design offices, scientific production centers and direct cooperation between research centers. Initiatives for similar programs are being undertaken together with other socialist countries. Linking the efforts of people of creativity, joint use of material resources, joint research work, sharing new ideas, and joint production will make it possible to considerably speed up the implementation of the development goals of our countries.

One cannot develop scientific-technical progress in the national economy without caring adequately for quality, inventiveness and rationalization. They are a school of creative thought, a factor for stimulating initiatives, and for attracting workforces toward the joint management of assets and for practical codecisionmaking concerning production methods.

For 4 years there has been an increase in the number of inventions and usable models that have been submitted. However, the tempo is too slow. Causing particular concern is the low activity of scientific-research institutions in the sphere of creating inventions and the continuing low level of popularizing these inventions. Thus, the conditions for extending the national turnover of licences will be improved. Various types of units whose task will be to introduce innovations can play an important role in this sphere. Among these, one must include small innovation enterprises or joint partnerships, in which research units, manufacturers, the trade network and individual people of creativity take part. The government is preparing the legal foundations for calling them into being.

The organizational solutions can be varied. For them to produce results, strong material and nonmaterial stimuli, both for the creators of new technology and also for enterprises which use it in practice are necessary. The government will support the raising of the standing and authority of creators of technical progress, and will create conditions for activating the scientific-research base. Ensuring the proper climate for innovation and caring for young people who are talented technically are important tasks for the factory managements and for the staffs of socialist youth and socioprofessional organizations.

Esteemed delegates, the long-term direction of our economic policy is the orientation of the economy toward exports and an increase in Poland's participation in the international division of labor. A Council of Ministers Committee for Economic Relations with Abroad has been created to coordinate these activities. Deep changes in the structure of our exports to date, based on modern production, are particularly imperative. The possibilities for increasing the sale of raw materials have been exhausted. The burden of expansion must be taken on by the manufacturing industry. This demands the shaping of Polish export specializations, the raising of the level of the technical quality of product, and the introduction of new products of a world standard.

An example of effective export specializations is that of construction and mining equipment, power engineering equipment, pharmaceuticals, ship overhauls, and certain technical services. The range of our capabilities will expand in relation to progress in fulfilling the restructure program. Institutional and material conditions favoring investment which serves growth in exports will be strengthened. The financing of such investments is the main task of the Bank for Export Development, created a week ago. Workplaces producing for export will obtain priority in supplies. Financial incentives are provided for enterprises not exporting. The number of enterprises authorized to conduct foreign trade independently is increasing.

Legal foundations enabling foreign capital to participate in production and trade companies on favorable and stable terms have been created. The exchange rate policy will aid the activization of exports and the rationalization of imports. The adoption of transaction prices will be expanded. We are therefore creating the foundations for the growth in the role of financial accounting in foreign trade.

In spite of payment difficulties, which persevere, foreign currency allocations will, by degrees, replace the centralized distribution of foreign currency resources. The extent of the independence of economic enterprises in trade turnover with abroad will increase. The fundmental orientation will be geared to further strengthening economic cooperation with the socialist countries. Poland is actively working in CEMA in aid of the acceleration of integration processes. Particular emphasis will be placed on deepening ties with the Soviet Union in bilateral relations. Our turnover with the land of the Soviets is being balanced by degrees. The achievement of a high rate in trade turnover and the deepening of mutually beneficial cooperation -- imperative for this aim -- serve the development of cooperational ties, the undertaking of mutual investments, the creation of joint enterprises. We thereby desire to give Polish-Soviet economic cooperation an exemplary nature. The long-term programs of cooperation with the remaining CEMA member countries that have been adopted envisage a significant increase in mutual trade turnover and the tightening of cooperation and specialization links.

Together we assess that the actual degree of these ties cannot yet be acknowledged as satisfactory. We attach great importance in particular to new forms of cooperation which allow for the programming and a complementary development of our economies, and also the shaping of longlasting and stable ties. Cooperation with developing countries, to which we traditionally attach great weight, attained significant growth in recent years. We will maintain and deepen this direction. The widening of industrial coproduction is envisaged and also the increase of the participation of Polish scientific and technical thought in the development of the economic potential of these countries.

Anti-Polish restrictions, introduced after 13 December 1981, negatively influenced our economic and financial contacts with the capitalist countries. We estimate their effects to have been approximately $12 billion in direct losses and lost opportunities. The restrictions delayed the country's coming out of crisis. They hindered the restoration of economic balance. Currently, too, the reanimation of trade exchange and multisided cooperation is not helped by the protectionist policy of the Western states and their maintaining many decisions which discriminate against our country. Such a policy by some of our creditors makes it difficult for Poland to fulfill its debtor's obligations, whose greater part is, in any case, the result of high interest rates. Our country is doing its utmost to fulfill its obligations. However, an indispensible condition for this is the economy's development, and thus a widening of cooperation with abroad, full normalization of financial and credit arrangements, the removal of all trade limitations, industrial cooperation, and scientific and technical contacts. In some of the capitalist countries we meet with an understanding of our standpoint and a desire to develop cooperation. We count on the spread of this realistic way of thinking. We hope that the normalization process will be favored by the restoration of our membership in the IMF and our entry into the World Bank. We express ourselves against the bans on technology, capital, and goods in international economic relations dictated by political considerations. We also direct ourselves with such intentions in taking an active part in the specialist work in the organizations of the system of the UN Organization [as heard] tending toward the removal of barriers and for the development of trade exchange.

Poland therefore expresses itself in favor of undertaking official relations between the CEMA and the EEC, and also in favor of undertaking a bilateral understanding with the EEC, thus minimizing limitations on Polish goods' access to this market.

However, economic cooperation should be seen in the broad context of political relations. Poland bases her foreign policy on lasting, unchanging principles resulting from the vital interests of the nation and the state. They were presented broadly in the report by First Secretary of the PZPR Central Committee Comrade Wojciech Jaruzelski. The government will use all possible means to strengthen the friendship, alliance, and all-round cooperation with the USSR and the other socialist countries; to expand cooperation with the developing countries, especially those of a socialist orientation; and also to maintain mutually beneficial relations on an equal basis with the capitalist countries. The declaration of the will for cooperation and collaboration, so strongly expressed today as well in the speech by the secretary general of the CPSU Central Committee, results from the supremacy of the goal -- the maintenance of world peace. This has found eloquent expression in the peace initiatives of the Budapest meeting of the Warsaw Pact Political Advisory Committee which has strong links with the Polish People's Army, which stands faithfully on guard over our state existence.

The growing activity by Polish diplomacy in the international arena is and will continue to be subordinated to this goal.

Esteemed comrades, one of the leading socioeconomic goals defined in the resolution of the PZPR Ninth Extraordinary Congress is guaranteeing self-sufficiency in food. The agricultural policy of the party and the United Peasant Party has brought about the socioproductive mobilization of agriculture and the branches of the economy which cooperate with it. It has brought successful results in foreign trade production. It has contributed to an improvement in food suppplies to the population. The government assures a continuation of this policy and will make all its executors, including industry, local bodies, and the farmers themselves carry out the obligations imposed on them.

The measures to promote increased means of production to agriculture -- which are already producing visible effects, although they are not yet satisafctory -- will be continued. Foremost here will be those means which best serve to intensify production. The introduction of principles governing access to land, supplies of means of production and the sale of agricultural produce, and economic conditions including uniform credit access for all sectors, has gained wide acceptance among the rural circles. The application of financial and legal-organizational instruments has created a clearly visible trend toward the formation of larger, more efficient, and more productive private family farms. State farms and cooperatives and other collective forms of management are achieving good results.

In the last few years particularly advantageous changes have taken place in state farms which were the first to introduce the economic reform and which recorded, through their results, the great economic and productive possibilities in this sector. The possibilities for a further increase in state farm production were presented in an interesting way in yesterday's discussion by Comrade Boleslaw Mackowiak.

There will be support for the emerging tendency toward expanding family farms which achieve a high rate of production and which decrease the costs related to this. This plan should be supported by the regulations concerning the integration of plots of land and by the principles of taxation and tax relief. We shall create new state farms in those regions where there are sufficient reserves of state land.

We shall also aid the creation of cooperative farms -- which arise according to the wishes of farmers and which secure better living and working conditions for them.

The changes in the agrarian structure are being treated by the government as a significant element in restructuring the economy. This most valuable factor in production -- that is, arrable land -- must be utilized in the best possible way. The established legal regulations make it possible to effectively halt the decrease of cultivated land. In setting up proper facilities competent organs will reduce to the minimum cases of handing over land, especially land of higher quality, for nonfarming purposes. The scope of recultivation and the return of land for farming purposes will increase.

The government confirms the unchanging character of the policy of ensuring that farming production is worthwhile. In accordance with the postulates of farmers the systematic increase in taxation, which has been in force to date, has been abolished. The present tax system favors the concentration of land, ensures that better use is made of light soils, and prevents land being left fallow.

We shall be mindful of a proper relation between the prices of production means, procurement, and the retail price of food which will reconcile the interests of consumers and producers in the countryside and in the towns. A factor of this system continues to be allowances which support biological and technological progress in agriculture. We shall continue to apply the so-called income parity in peasant holdings where production is efficient.

Increasing efficiency demands that farmers have increased agricultural expertise and education. This will be aided by an increasingly active contribution by numerous advisory services for farmers, and in the service of the countryside and agriculture. It is with pleasure that I wish to quote part of a statement on this subject made by Comrade Michal Tarczynski from Opole.

Esteemed comrades, the living conditions in the countryside have, in the past few years, undergone significant improvement. In 1982 about 39 percent of those living in the countryside made use of joint and individual water catchments. More than (?54) percent do so now. The number of homes that have bathrooms rose in this period by 20-40 percent; central heating from almost 20 to more than 30 percent. There are now almost 3,300 health centers active in the countryside -- as well as 250 chemists and places selling medicines. The network of nurseries and kindergartens is expanding. There is an increasing number of rural trade centers and agricultural services. All farmers are served by the health service and have pension rights. The long-range program of improvements for living conditions in the rural areas, which has been adopted by the government, embraces a wide range of tasks in the fields of education, health protection, transport, culture, sports and production and everyday services. The implementation of this program is accompanied by an active participation of the rural community. This is remarkably valuable. The transformation of the civilization and cultural level of the countryside depends not only on the undertakings that have been centrally inspired but, to a large degree, on activities initiated by the rural community, social and professional organizations and cooperative organizations led by farmers, youth organizations, economic institutions as well as self-management organs and regional authorities.

Esteemed comrades, since the beginning of 1982 the principles of the economic reform, adopted by the Ninth Congress, have been implemented. We have undertaken a task the size of which has never been seen before.

The legal system of agriculture has been rebuilt. Organizational structures are being reshaped. A new distribution of expertise in industry has been introduced. Workers self-management has been granted significant rights. There is an expansion in the process of nationalizing planning on a national level and in individual regions. The general knowledge of society regarding agriculture has increased. The management cadre is acquiring a feeling of independence. Workers councils are strengthening their position. These are facts. The direction of change is so strong, so deeply imbedded in reality, that today we no longer have to assure people that there is no turning back from reform. This does not mean, however, that there is an uncritical attitude as far as specific solutions are concerned, for the process of implementing the reform is not yet finished.

New tasks are being born for the Economic Reform Commission, whose achievements hitherto deserve acknowledgement. We also count on the active participation in their implementation of the opinion-giving and advisory organs, socioprofessional organizations, research institutes, and scientific associations. The basic direction is the full activation of mechanisms that promote effectiveness. This will not be an easy process, nor one free from contradictions with the current interests of particular enterprises and socioprofessional groups. This process demands the sharpening of economic mechanisms also in the sphere of prices and the incomes of the population, the differentiation of the income situation of workers relative to their work input and the development abilities of enterprises relative to their effectiveness. This is an indispensible direction and the only chance, in perspective, for the whole country.

The effects hitherto are not pleasing. Many causes have contributed to this, such as not always correct systemic solutions that demanded corrections as they progressed and the lack -- for a variety of reasons -- of not following things to their logical conclusion in the execution of the accepted decisions. Enterprises sought excuses more often than effective, economic solutions. They also found allies a little too often for their standpoint in the founding organs, trade union and self-management organizations. The principle of the profitability of enterprises has to take on the force of an obligating practice. Special responsibility in this field rests on bank and financial institutions because of their legal rights. They should more effectively induce enterprises -- especially those whose crisis ability is threatened -- to undertake activities to make their financial situation healthy. Banks must more actively apply crisis policy as an instrument of economic pressure on the enterprise with low effectiveness and, on the other hand, as an instrument of preference for well-functioning economic units. In other words, they must take advantage of credit as a means of supporting structural changes.

A key matter for the functioning of the mechanisms of the reform is economic obligation. Effectiveness cannot be asked for, called forth with any mobilizing slogans. Historical experience teaches that effectiveness must also be forced. The increase of profitability will be supported by a hard, harder, than hitherto, financing of enterprises. This rule applies to everybody. It signifies that, without fulfilling the demands of effectiveness -- and they, in our situation, must be more severe from year to year -- the enterprise will not have more resources, neither for an increase in wage payments nor even for the most necessary investments or any other economic or social aims.

Enterprises which do not improve effectiveness, and even more so, those which are poorly managed, can not count on automatic help from the state budget, donations, relief, or exemptions from financial burdens. The argument of the importance of the enterprise for the economy, or region, can not be abused, neither can its past merits and achievements.

A firm finance policy also means closing chances for easy profit through discretional price increases for products and services or the use of a monopolistic market position. Increased profit must be earned, must be connected with savings and the size and quality of production. Hard financing demands hard parameters; this equally applies to prices and norms of financing. The paramenters must be an expression of objective relations and cannot be an object of negotiation; they can only be achieved by additional effort, better work organization, and greater enterprise. This constitutes their fundamental value.

Economic constraint does not conflict with the principles of socialism; on the contrary, it is a fundamental condition of the efficiency of socialism as an economic system. However, economic constraint has a political aspect. One must take into account that conflicts will occur in enterprises. In such cases the deciding criteria must be economic reasons, which are in the general social interest. The government counts on this stance being supported by party organizations, and understood by and having full cooperation from the entire trade union movement.

In order to increase efficiency of the economy to a greater degree, chances for concentration of forces and enterprises' means should be utilized in order to solve problems.

Based on economic premises, interbranch associations can be organized, along with production links, scientific and research units, or trade units. In order to realize large-scale undertakings, consortiums, companies, joint and mixed enterprises, and concerns can be set up. In view of the possibility of abuse of monopolistic positions at the time of economic imbalance, all proposals to combine enterprises and cooperatives into larger units should be under strict control.

It is with this purpose in mind that the government has submitted a bill to the Sejm to counteract monopolistic practices within the national economy. At the same time, much emphasis will be given to the development of medium and small enterprises in the socialized sector. This is because practice proves that they stand out by their capacity for operating in a dynamic way, by their flexibility in adapting to the changing requirements, and by speedily adopting modern production methods.

Work is underway to create formal legal and economic principles governing the way in which such enterprises can be set up and be made to function. The more the economy regains its balance, the more the distribution control of raw and other materials on the one hand and machines on the other are being curtailed, to be repealed at a definite point in time. The scope of contracts freely entered into between consumers and producers is also to be gradually expanded. Additional preferential treatment will be accorded to producers who make deliveries of cooperation elements within the framework of long-term contracts. We will also continue to limit the scope of distribution of consumer goods.

The responsibility of the self-management bodies and of the management cadres of enterprises must be enhanced within the process of the further improving reform -- the long-term orientation of economic development must gain the upper hand in no uncertain way. The government intends to strengthen the position of directors as chief initiators and organizers of development processes and of efficiency processes within the enterprise.

No system of cadre appraisal can exist without a system of appraising the performance of enterprises. No cadre policy can exist without a system of appraising the performance of management cadres. In accordance with the instructions of the 13th and 25th PZPR Central Committee plenary sessions, the government is working on introducing a system of work with cadres.

The powers of directors will be defined unequivocally; a unified system of appraising the results of work done by enterprises and directors, and linking current results with the long-term development goals will be introduced. With regard to this question, the government will submit to the Sejm detailed proposals for changes in the law.

Comrade delegates, the strengthening of the economic equilibrium and the curtailing of inflation constitutes an essential condition for implementing the principle of economic coercion and for enhancing the effectiveness of economic reform. In the past we failed to achieve satisfactory results in this field. Over the past few years, certain factors exerted a negative influence here, factors such as the necessity to service our debt, the unfavorable structure and low efficiency of investment processes, and the fact that the growth in wages has not been sufficiently tied to labor productivity.

Despite numerous efforts to curtail the financial appetite of our enterprises through, among other things, an increase in taxes and other financial dues, the planned expenditure is still being exceeded in the investments sphere. What is even worse, work is not done completely, while the transfer of projects for use is lagging behind.

As far as the sphere of remuneration is concerned, there is a continuing discrepancy between wages and labor productivity, the latter failing to keep pace with the former despite annual adjustments, tax measures and modifications to mechanisms.

Concerned with protecting the standard of living and -- let us not conceal this -- in view of the public sensitivity, we artificially impeded the introduction of balanced prices. As a result, the level of subsidies remains high. So-called cost prices predominate. It is all too easy -- in view of the lack of equilibrium and the absence of competition -- to transfer the increases in supply prices and in the prices paid for production means to production costs and the prices paid for the final product. All in all, the growing wages and growing production costs cause a further increase in prices, maintaining the inflationary spiral.

We are aware of the urgent necessity to curtail inflation and to achieve a balance between money in circulation and what is available on the market. We have presented numerous problems from this area for public consultation; we have discussed them with the trade unions and outstanding representatives of the academia. In this context, it must be clearly said that the elimination of inflation and the achievement of market equilibrium are not matters for government or Sejm decrees to take effect from such and such a day.

The government comprehensively directs its redoubled efforts to counteract inflation. The savings program, the changes in the investments policy, the further improvement of the mechanisms that govern enterprises' wages and incomes, the taxation policy, and the improvement in labor organization, among other things, are to serve this goal. The fiscal-market equilibrium requires parallel action in three areas: supply, prices, and incomes.

The proposals contained in the draft 5-year plan, submitted by the government, provide for an increase of some 16 percent in the supply of goods and services. Supplies of industrial goods should be increased by a further two points. The rate of increase in the supply of household goods, automatic washing machines, refrigerators and freezers, stereophonic radio sets, tape decks, crockery and furniture will be faster. Thus, the scale of the increase is not small. The quality of these goods will also improve.

In the sphere of foodstuffs it is planned to increase the consumption of the main products containing protein and fats and to change the structure of consumption in favor of vegetables and fruit and plant fats. Work is in progress on defining the conditions under which we can abandon the rationing of meat and its products. The acceleration of the development of services for the population is envisaged. The number of service centers will increase by 5,000. Special preference will be given, in accordance with social needs, to repair-construction, hygiene-sanitary, and domestic goods repair services. The process of providing people with telephone service will be accelerated; the list of individual subscribers will increase by 750,000 -- in other words, 40 percent more than in the past 5 year period.

The role of small-scale manufacturing will increase. A considerable growth in the supply of goods and services from this sector is planned; due in particular, to the better use of local reserves and the recovery of structural raw materials. New impetuses for the dynamic development of the socialized small-scale industry sector are created by the recently adopted joint resolution of the Council of State and the Council of Ministers. In sum, the internal market will be better supplied from the point of view of quantity and quality of products and services. This will make it possible to increase the consumption fund by about 15 percent and in individual terms by an average of 1.5 to 2 percent per annum. Thus, there ought to be a gradual improvement in the living conditions.

The policy of retail prcies conducted in the past few years is designed to gradually restrict the general indicator for price increases while at the same time extending the sphere of monetary market equilibrium in individual sectors. With this end in mind, we will appply comprehensive anti-inflation activities and measures such as slowing down the increase in production costs, limiting unprofitable production, reducing subsidies, and applying equilibrium prices on a broader scale.

Changes in food prices in particular will be shaped according to the principles worked out during public consultations. We will see to it that there are rational ratios between food prices and procurement prices and the proper relation to the prices of industrial goods. We should not allow an increase in food subsidies. The result would be that the demand for food would increase above the possibility of satisfying it; it would promote wastefulness; it would decrease some farms' interest in production for their own needs. The size of planned supply sets the scale of possible increases in the real incomes of the population. This presents difficulties for an income policy: first, to maintain the ratio assumed in the plan between money incomes and market supplies; second, to ensure the motivating function of employees' incomes; third, to protect the economically weakest groups which cannot improve their living conditions. In the wages sphere, this means above all a closer link in every enterprise between wages and economic results.

The fundamental instrument for controlling wages is the system of taxing supernumerary wages and remunerations. It takes into account the varied operating conditions of economic units. The scope for individual relief and preference has been curtailed. The interest of enterprises inimproving financial results has been increased. We aim to apply the same rules to all units. We should not and cannot, on the wages issues, apply different yardsticks and assessments. Excessive pay increases, unjustified by results, must be negatively assessed everywhere in the same way. We will be carefully following the operation of the new system for controlling wages. If need be, we will introduce essential changes.

In the sphere of shaping the motivational wages and benefits policy, an important role should be played by collective labor agreements.

The government and the trade unions have devoted much attention to shaping a collective agreement model so as to satisfy the expectations of working people and the needs of the reformed economy. The role of the collective agreements -- one of the important sources of the Labor Law -- is above all to have a bearing on the creation of proper wage relations between professions and jobs in individual branches and on an interbranch level.

This goal can be pursued by a method of evaluating labor as a tool which helps to specify a wage model for posts and professions and a rational direction for wage processes. Collective agreements should be correlated with a wage and benefits policy. At the same time they should not hamper enterprises in creating their own wage system based on incentives. The scale of funds for wages can be exclusively decided by the results of self-financing enterprises. We shall aim for the rules of factory wage systems and the principles of creating collective agreements to constitute the composite whole. Wage expenditure in the nonproductive sphere seriously affects the total wage increase in the socialized economy. This results from the considerable increase in employment, especially in health service and education, and the so-called fixed pay scales which prevail there.

Expenditure on old age and other pensions will also increase considerably. The number of old age pensioners and retired people will increase by 1 million. All old age and other pensions have been considered in the light of current values. In the current year we have also begun to gradually eliminate the so-called old portfolio. The prognosis for the supply of goods and services and the shaping of incomes indicates that despite the stabilization of real wages in the first years of the 5-year period a balance between incomes and expenditure in 1986-90 will not be achieved as planned. We must also recall that we are entering the current 5-year period with a considerable goods deficit from the previous period.

Thus, to achieve a balance the population's income must be adapted to the possibilities of supplying the market. From this point of view the government considers it particularly necesary: first, to rationalize employment in the nonproductive sphere and in state administration; second, to verify the principles of so-called fixed pay and income; third, not to compensate increases in the cost of living which result from the price increase of some goods, such as alcoholic drinks and tobacco; to curtail subsidies for financing investments in the nonproductive sphere; and to reduce budget expenditures at all levels. Most of these issues are not purely economic, and the ways of solving them are of great social significance.

Some of the solutions, looking in the short term, will not make the authorities popular. On the contrary, they might be taken the wrong way and elicit tension. Looking in longer perspective, however, they will bring positive effects for balancing the economy and the correct functioning of the goods and money categories and economic mechanisms.

Esteemed comrade delegates, the rational usage of work resources is a problem which, from the social and economic point of view demands especially penetrating consideration. In the years 1986-90 we can expect the smallest growth in the productive age group for many years. This circumstance can partly be offset by better professional training for youth starting work, and a beneficial age structure of those in employment. In the total working people, we have a greater number of young people than in many other countries. Social considerations have caused a significant increase of employment in education and health protection. In these economic spheres the growth in employment will about two-thirds; the productive sphere can thus only count on one-third of this growth.

In the main departments, and also in industry and building, employment will not increase. The growth of production will have to be attained solely through increasing productivity. However, these difficulties cannot justify the organizational and productive inability of the management of many enterprises. In the current 5-year period technical equipment will decisively improve, which will allow a reduction in labor intensity in the productive process and an increase in productivity.

The analysis of the exploitation of work reserves reveals many worrying phenomena. Over 250,000 workers voluntarily leave their jobs each year; the fluctuation of cadres is excessive. It negatively influences the quality of products and services produced, and causes wage demoralization among workers and the disintegration of motivation. Many irregularities are manifest in the sphere of sick leave. It is a little too easy to acquire paid sick leave not always justified by the facts. On average, time actually worked does not exceed 30 hours per week.

In order to counteract bad work organization and nonfunctional organizational structures of administrational and bureaucratic overgrowth, we are undertaking, on the initiative of our Party Central Committee, a universal attestation of organizational structures and work posts within the production sphere and the nonproduction sphere, including central and territorial administration. The aims which are to be served by the attestation were yesterday extensively submitted by Comrade Wojciech Jaruzelski, first secretary of the Central Committee. Without delay, the government will undertake to prepare the appropriate executive documents and organizational and personnel proposals, thereby initiating the attestation process, and making use of the experiences gained from preparatory work already conducted.

The possibilities for improving the situation should be sought in new forms of work organization, releasing initiative and people's enterprise, for example, work teams for labor and remuneration systems, partnership groups, and task teams. Until now, these forms have been exploited and popularized in too narrow a sphere. This is one of the first priority aims of enterprise management personnel. We will be aiding their universal application through organizational assistance and through the appropriate system of incentives.

Changes in labor law will also be necessary. The Code Commission has prepared comprehensive proposals. They take into account the new requirements brought in by the economic reform, particularly the principles of independence and self-financing by enterprises. They serve the consolidation of professional discipline. The government treats the intensification of disciplinary requirements as an imperative element in the shaping of working attitudes, and as the principle condition for an improvement in efficiency.

Esteemed delegates, the most urgent social needs at the current stage of development were extensively presented in the Central Committee report. The government will ensure their comprehensive and prompt fulfillment. In the course of discussions over the party program and the theses to the 10th congress, solving the housing issue was universally given top priority among social aims. It is frequently presented in dramatic terms. The current state and the prospects for improvement are presented in an especially critical light.

Objectively the housing situation of the population varies greatly. There are approximately 113 households per 100 dwellings. About one-quarter of the country's population lives in conditions where there is at most one person per room. There are no homeless people in our country. There is no need for billeting anybody through administrative measures.

The public perception is, however, burdened by the existence of a housing waiting list running into years and the unresolved problem of 300,000-350,000 families living in the worst conditions. There are nearly 3 million members and candidate members registered in housing cooperatives, more than half of whom have paid their full contribution. The length of the waiting list, however, cannot be the only determinant of requirements. Besides those with urgent needs, it also includes children who will require separate housing in 10 or even 20 years. The action program adopted by the government on the basis of suggestions and proposals of the FRON, the OPZZ and the Housing Council takes this gradation into consideration. In the current 5-year period it envisages parallel action in three directions:

1. The construction of approximately 1.05-1.15 million new dwellings. Even if we consider the increase in new households and the loss of old stock, there will be a clear improvement in meeting the most urgent outstanding requirements.

2. The modernization of approximately 900,000 old dwellings. This means almost doubling the volume of refurbishment as compared to the previous 5-year period.

The elaboration of new official, legal and tax solutions facilitating and speeding-up exchange and improving the principles of housing allocation. It is estimated that improvement in the situation of several hundred thousand families can be attained through exchanges. These issues are already being dealt with; some of them have already been prepared, and others will be presented for acceptance in the immediate future.

Efforts of the economy cannot be judged merely from the magnitude of the outlays assigned directly to housing construction. Housing construction begins in quarries, steelworks, metallurgical and chemical enterprises, in the entire economy working for the construction industry. Comrade Kubasiewicz, first secretary of the Warsaw Committee, spoke of this before we recessed for lunch. Such is the range and scale of the required collaborative ties. One should also add outlays for the provision of utilities, the construction of heating facilities, power and gas mains, social infrastructure, for the development of the building materials and products industry and for the development of contractor enterprises' potential.

The interdependences in this sphere can be illustrated by the fact that the building of each dwelling now requires the consumption each year of energy equivalent to eight metric tons of coal. This example proves that the barriers to the development of housing construction are of an objective nature to a considerable extent. We shall overcome them by introducing modern economical construction and exploitation techniques and by streamlining the programming and design of housing investment projects. The foundations will be created for the structural-qualitative reconstruction of industries supplying the construction industry with the necessary modern materials and products starting with site preparation and ending with the fitting out of dwellings.

Outlays for the development of the construction materials industry will increase by more than 90 percent compared with the past 5-year period. In this way the conditions will arise for considerably increasing the size of housing construction in following years and for ensuring a level of 300,000 newly built dwellings annually at the start of the 1990's.

Considerable savings will also be gained by eliminating subjective conditions, by improving the organization of discipline at building sites, by shortening investment cycles and by exploiting simple reserves, which are still considerable.

While on the subject of solving the problem, one cannot pass over in silence the matter of the size of expenditure needed to obtain a dwelling and to run it in a family budget. There is a real disproportion here between the position of a dwelling in the hierarchy of needs and in the hierarchy of expenditure. In the past few years the relative size of the housing deposit has decreased considerably. In 1970 the deposit for a dwelling covering an area of 50 square meters was more than the equivalent of an average 12-month salary in the socialized economy. At present it has decreased to an average 6-month wage. Among the individual kinds of savings, housing deposits are only in fourth place behind, among others, saving for cars. Contrary to current opinion, the participation of citizens in the costs of obtaining a dwelling is as a rule not great. Last year the cost of a dwelling with a floor space of 50 square meters came to about Z12.5 million. The deposit of a user of a dwelling belonging to a housing cooperative only amounts to 10 percent of this sum as soon as he moves in. The annual subsidies for the housing economy at present amount to about Z300 billion and are more than three times higher than all housing deposits. Such proportions in the division of expenditure between the state budget and the budgets of households cannot be maintained. Everyone, apart from the poorest families, who wishes to obtain a dwelling or improve his standards must be prepared to contribute more to the cost of constructing and running dwellings.

They will therefore have to make a conscious choice, at the expense of savings or giving up other consumer goals. This will, in any case, be a transfer of that choice from the state level to the level of the citizen and his family. By financing almost the whole cost of housing construction from the budget, we curtail the possibility of using those means for other areas of public consumption, such as for the construction and maintenance of schools and hospitals. The rule "something for something" applies both to the home and the state budget. Insofar as this direction gains the political approval of the congress, the government will propose changes in the principles of financing, including giving credits and managing dwellings, aimed at an increase in the share of the population's financial means in the entirety of expenditures for this purpose.

Esteemed comrades, the main problems in health protection derive from the current demographic situation and also the threats created by the technical civilization, urbanization and the life-style of the population. We note a whole series of achievements in solving them. We are successfully carrying out preventative and curative treatment of serious infectious diseases, the majority of which are under control. The infant mortality rate continues to fall as a result of priority treatment for mothers and children. The most serious health problems at present include the increase in circulatory diseases, cancers, traumas and poisonings. They are the main causes of as many as 75 percent of deaths. The excessively high death-rate for men of production age is a worrying phenomenon. The reasons for this are not precisely known. On the recommendation of the Population Commission, the government has earmarked funds for research into determining the nature of the problem and preventative measures. General prophylactic activity involving the whole of society is of particular significance for effective health protection. The solution of these health problems requires intensified measures in the sphere of environmental protection, an improvement in working conditions; increased production of sanitary goods; an effective fight against alcoholism, smoking, and unfortunately, drug addition. This is the obligation of the health service. It is also an important task for educational establishments, for the mass information and propaganda media, for workplaces and public institutions, and also for upbringing in the family. The operation of basic health protection will be improved and its accessibility in one's place of residence gradually assured. This will relieve the ambulance service and specialized medicine of a burden.

Rehabilitation treatment will be expanded, enabling people who have been disabled to have the same possibility of returning to professional and social activity.

Cadre and material resources of health service will be increased. In 1986-90 it is expected that due to considerable investment outlays, hospitals with 25,000 new beds will be commissioned. Furthermore, 8,000 places in social care homes will be created. The network of clinics and health centers will be expanded and partly renewed. The number of doctors in Poland will be considerably increased. Production of home medical apparatus will increase by about 30 percent, alleviating the most urgent needs.

The government has approved the program for accelerating the development of the pharmaceutical industry. We decided on this issue several days ago. As the program is implemented, the supply of medicines will improve by developing domestic production and by importing them. It should be remembered that 54 percent of medicines is today being supplied free of charge. This increases the demand, which is not always justified. It seems proper to consider the introduction of payment for some medications and medicines, simultaneously compensating citizens for the cost. The organization of health service and social care will be improved. The grounds for action in this field will be the prepared laws on health service, medical professions and social care.

Improving the nation's health is closely linked with the use of free time, particularly with conditions of recreation. An essential role in this sphere is being played by physical culture and tourism. The government will support the activity of the trade union movement, the youth movement and social organizations in the sphere of physical culture, tourism and recreation. Estimates indicate that with better use of the existing holiday centers alone about 1 million persons more would be able to rest every year. Particular help will be given in the organization of cheap, mass forms of physical culture and of qualified tourism with rich educational and ideological values.

Esteemed comrades, the assessment of the state of the environment, carried out in accordance with the recommendations of the Ninth PZPR Congress, has shown the extent of neglect. The program worked out on this basis, and accepted by the government, sketched the necessary directions of activity. We have given particular priority in socioeconomic policy to the matter of environmental protection. Despite the exceptionally difficult circumstances and the urgency of many other needs in the years 1981-85, spending on this aim was doubled. Government participation in the whole of the investment program grew; together with the water economy, investment currently comes to over 7 percent. The activities undertaken brought improvements in certain sectors. In others, however, the braking of detrimental processes was not in fact able to undo the negative effects accumulated over many years. Next to issuing new legal provisions, increasing payments for use of the environment, and also fines for polluting water, the air and the soil, the formation of an industry producing protection equipment, and constructing many costly sewage purification plans and water resorvoirs becomes indispensible.

In the draft program it is envisaged in the years 1986-90 to allocate Z800 billion for the protection of this natural environment and the water economy. Despite such a significant investment effort, we are only putting a brake on the processes of environmental degradation. In the next 5-year periods, however, even if we only maintain the level of investment, their collective effort will bring a qualitative change. In the period of the next few years the quality of surface and underground waters will improve. Sewage purification plants will be constructed in the larger cities and also in large enterprises, among others, in the Lenin Foundry in Nowa Huta the chemical works in Oswiecim, and the Azoty fertilizer works in Kedzierzyn.

The supply of water to the population of towns and cities and industry will improve, especially on the territories where there is currently still a shortage. This will result from increasing the capacity of existing water reservoirs and building new ones. The antiflood protection and river regulation program will be implemented. New technical installations, mainly in power stations and electrothermal heating plants, will limit sulphur dioxide emissions. All industrial and communal investments must fulfill the demands associated with environmental protection. Increased investments for these goals are indispensible, but they are enormous. for instance, in building an electrothermal power station, just taking the sulphur out of fumes increases the investment by around 50 percent. As practice teaches, this is still many times cheaper than later remedying of damage.

Regulations obliging industrial enterprises and city authorities to remove existing inadequacies and the causes of environmental pollution will be tightened. Legal and financial rigors will become more severe. We are convinced that such action corresponds to social needs, that it is currently a necessity. Such a necessity can also mean, in especially drastic cases, the closing of enterprises which badly harm the environment, or which lack technical possibilities for the removal of the reasons for poisoning the atmosphere, water and soil.

In such an instance we must even submit to a temporary lack of goods and products provided by these enterprises. We will continue actions for the defense of areas of particular natural value. New national parks will be created, increasing their overall land area to almost 200,000 hectares. An increase in afforestation is envisaged, as is an increase in cultivation and protection measures and a cleanup of forests. Environmental protection is the main issue of the spatial consultation, a plan which encompasses the next 30 to 40 years. The plan for the country's husbandry aims at a harmonious teaming up of the present economy with resources to be used by future generations of Poles. It forms the basis of a favorable course for the process of nature's self-renewal, and for the rational use of the scant resources of water, of the most agriculturally productive soils, and of raw mineral deposits.

Esteemed comrades, in the socioeconomic policy of 1981-85 we undertook the task of the social protection of population groups living in the most difficult material conditions, among them particularly, some retirees and pensioners. This policy will be continued in the present 5-year period. An improvement in the living standard of retirees and pensioners will be ensured by an annual revalorization of pension and retirement benefits, and the (?gradual) abolition of the old pension scheme. The first stage of this revalorization, as is already known, will take place on 1 September this year. For retirees and pensioners who are capable of improving their financial situation by taking up paid work, conditions will be created for supplementing pensions or retirement benefits through incomes from work, and until they temporarily give up pension and retirement benefits and return to professional activity. Through an increase in pension benefits, linked to the years spent in employment and other motivating actions, we will influence people to extend their professional careers in full-time employment, especially in those professions where there is a shortage of manpower.

The employment of invalids and those who are partially disabled is another matter. Of (?3.6) million such people only 23 percent at present work professionally. Many of them do not work, for there are no jobs to suit them, whereas not only can they work but, in fact, they should, in order to regain their ability, to return to normal life, and to confirm their feeling of usefulness in society and their own value. It is therefore necessary to expand more swiftly a disabled people's cooperative. In production enterprises there will be -- on a more wide-ranging scale -- areas of protected work.

Social benefits will continue to be the source of supplementing family income, particularly in families which have many children or which find themselves in the most difficult financial conditions.

The system of social insurances will be gradually put in order. The main thing is to prevent the irrational expenditure of means, their excessive dispersion and to counteract professional deactivation. The scant means available must reach those who are in greatest need. In accordance with a decision included in [illegible] Central Committee report, the government will prepare, in time for the second national conference of delegates, a comprehensive program of changes in the system of social benefits.

Esteemed comrades, demographic conditions necessitate the building of new schools and kindergardens, and securing teaching cadres. The estimated needs for this, taking into account the inviolability of other elements of the educational process -- such as the the length of time education should continue, the tasks of teachers and the program concept -- are enormous. In order to cope with this it is envisaged to increase funds for education from the national income. In this 5-year period, with the help of the national action for helping schools, we will hand over for use about 24,000 units in which classes can be held. This will not entirely satisfy needs. However, in the next 5-year period, in accordance with the demographic forecast, the demand for places in schools will decrease significantly. For this present, difficult period, it is therefore essential to seek other ways to improve the work efficiency of schools and educational centers. Among these one should, first and foremost, consider the task of intensifying the educational process which could create possibilities for shortening the time needed for education. This would have a significant influence on the improvement of the situation as a whole on the job market and on the decrease in the need for teaching cadres, and would cause a reduction in the pressure for investment projects. Successively, and in accordance with the cadre possibilities and the state of textbook supplies, a programmatic reform will be introduced in secondary and higher-level schools. Parallel to this, work will proceed on the formulation of long-range directions in the development of the educational system. The upbringing activity will be intensified, both in the classroom and in school activities outside the classroom.

The main direction will be the concentration of upbringing activities that will shape among the young an attitude of support for socialist ideology, of patriotism, and of a regard for work and social discipline. This needs a proper choice of teaching content, the development of forms and teaching methods, and an expansion of the range of work carried out with the young, under the direction and the control of the school.

The expanded tasks of schools and educational establishments, the modernization of the program, the introduction of computer studies, [word indistinct] and the introduction of pedagogical innovations mean that it is essential to consider a change in the working conditions and principles of remuneration for teaching cadres. The government proposes to present -- after consultations with the Union of Polish teachers -- a proposal for such changes which would assume a proportional increase in educational and upbringing duties and wages. This would greatly influence a decrease in the need to find new teachers. The intensification of the didactic and upbringing process and the increase in social efficiency are the main tasks of higher education.

The speeding up of scientific and technological progress requires the expansion of training of cadres for new fields such as electronics, data processing, robotization and biotechnology. Stricter discipline will be applied in the progress of studies that will contribute to efficiency of teaching and to promptness in completing courses.

Great stress will be laid on increasing the upbringing functions of higher schools. There is the need for greater help in entry-exam preparation for our youth from worker and peasant millieux, as the social structure of successful candidates is still unsatisfactory.

The government has created conditions for wide participation of higher-school employees in central research and development programs and in government orders. In the current 5-year period, higher schools will coordinate 52 central programs of basic research and 10 central research and development programs.

Esteemed comrades, it is a leading task of the state's cultural policy to expand accessibility to culture and to create conditions for the development of creative work of high ideological and artistic values. In spite of the progress achieved in artistic and popularizing activity, there exists an urgent need to look for various forms of expansion. Unfavorable differentiation in attendance at cultural activities conditioned by the place of residence or work, age group, or by a network of cultural establishments in a given region should decrease in 1986-90. In the wake of limited possibilities for a quantitative increase of cultural establishments, their programmatic activity is of particular importance, as well as their catchment range and standard. We are undertaking resolute actions to avoid the improper allocation of funds as to worthless publications and to bad plays and shows. Legal and financial possibilities as provided by adopted resolutions will be used to achieve this goal. This subject was also spoken about in yesterday's and today's discussion. Factory-level cultural activity complements professional establishments. It is considered an important factor in workforce integration, together with folk and nonprofessional creativity. Better conditions will be secured for this movement, which aims at cultivating and developing national traditions.

The cultural education of the young generation will become a sphere of action efforts by all involved ministries, institutions and organizations. A program for the esthetic upbringing of children and young people has been drafted. Its implementation ought to create the possibilities for forming the habit of participation in culture by pupils in all types of school, particularly rural and vocational schools.

In 1983-85, publication output increased to 6 books per person. The resolution of the Ninth Congress on markedly increasing the production of books was implemented. This task was achieved despite tremendous supply problems and outlays, which were more modest than planned, for maintaining the efficiency of the printing industry. The necessary decisions were adopted on the modernization and reconstruction of the printing industry in the 1986-90 period. The implementatin of this plan will make it possible to publish in 1990 from 300-310 million copies of books.

Construction of the National Library will be continued. The government will ensure the allocation of the necessary financial resources so that the library is fully prepared for the tasks it is to fulfill. The National Theater will be rebuilt and fully modernized, and the expansion of the National Museum in Krakow will be completed. Considerable resources will continue to be allocated for the maintenance and renovation of cultural momuments. We are banking on enterprises, social organizations and institutions, and private users playing a broader part in this matter. At the same time legal-organizational solutions which promote these activities will be improved. The principle of consultation over the draft plans for cultural activity with creative associations will be continued. The National Council of Culture, which enjoys great prestige and which started a new term of office 3 weeks ago, will continue to be the government's main advisory and opinion-forming organ.

Esteemed comrade delegates, the achievement of the planned economic and social aims requires strengthening the state organism and improving the work of its apparatus. We can see three main directions in the implementation of this general task: First, an improvement in the law; second, further transformations in the structure of supreme and central organs of the state administration, and third, improvement in the methods of style of work of the administration. The active legal-creative work done in the past few years has been the reason why the conditions for the gradual stabilization of the law have arisen. Main attention will thus be focused on filling gaps and removing inconsistencies, on the strict implementation of adopted solutions, and also on the popularization of the law in society.

After the Ninth Congress, considerable changes we made in the structure of the supreme and central state administrative bodies. The number of ministries was cut. The scope of their powers was changed. Operational methods were streamlined. The government is currently working on the announced speech by the first secretary of the Central Committee -- the third stage of the changes in the structure of the central state administration. Their essence will be the aim to strengthen a uniform, coherent government policy. The organizational structures of the center must fully comply with the requirements of integrated activity. The operation of the administration still has many shortcomings. Public opinion is shocked by cases of dishonesty and bureaucratism. The government will eliminate all signs of improper activity by state administrative offices. Too many formalized requirements have accumulated: enclosures, duplicates, certificates. The objective reasons for difficulties arising in their work will also be removed. We are paying a great deal of attention to the quality of state cadres. The criteria for selection for service in the administration have been raised. Cadre reviews are being made. Observance of the code of practice for administrative officials is being more and more strictly enforced.

An important trend of activity is the strengthening of public order and social discipline. In the light of the report by the Committee for Observance of the Law, Public Order and Social Discipline, the Council of Ministers instructed its organs to implement a comprehensive program of measures to promote combatting the causes of social ills. The implementation of acts aimed at particularly dangerous sources of pathology has been put under intensified control. The measures undertaken are centered around strengthening professional discipline, counteracting neglect of employee obligations, and abandoning the improper use of working hours. Particular attention is being paid to the fight against alcoholism, drug addiction, and social parasitism.

Attention is also being paid to speculation, bribery, dishonest enrichment and tax abuses, which are manifest particularly strongly in the nonagricultural private sector. The appropriate legal acts and organizational intentions to prevent this are being prepared. The steps proposed also encompass preventive and educational undertakings, particularly in relation to the young generation of Poles. The government intends to increase the number of superintendents' youth work centers, diagnostic and consultative centers, and the number of psychologists, teachers and doctors employed by them.

A strong emphasis will be placed upon ensuring a feeling of order and security for citizens. Manifestations of the development of hooliganism and vandalism will be strongly combatted. In this sphere, we are expecting a great deal from the cooperation of society with the militia and security service bodies, who, up to now, have devoted much attention to this problem. We will be creating a climate of condemnation for the perpetrators of crimes and transgressions, as in concrete instances. It must be emphasized that for the effective struggle with social pathology, it is not only necessary to remove the effects, but above all to remove the causes.

The anticipated results may be achieved only by linking activity in aid of balancing the economy and the efficient functioning of its mechanisms with the wide current of educational work, social preventive treatment and disciplinary actions. This method of conceptualizing the problem lies within the government's intentions.

Esteemed comrade delegates, the program and directions of activity presented result from a comprehensive analysis of our country's developmental capabilities as well as of the most urgent social needs and expectations. This is a realistic program, formulated with regard to economic principles and without fantasties. In the government's conviction it creates the chance of favorable and lasting development for Poland. It is also a difficult program, demanding economic reconstruction and changes in social consciousness. Its successful implementation demands positive and disciplined actions in every sphere.

Two elements will decide on the success of the outlined concept -- consistency in its realization, and wide social support. Both of these elements have their source in the strength of the party, in its will to transform the present and create the new reality, in fulfilling the role of the leading force of the nation. The preelection campaign brought many achievements. It contributed to the formulation of the party's stance in relation to fundamental issues deciding upon the country's development prospects, upon Poland's international position, and upon solving social problems.

The creative character of this discussion, the full involvement of all party cells and all its members, allows me to express the conviction that the strength, perseverance, social energy and support needed to follow the formulated concept through to the end will not be lacking. Thank you for your attention. [applause]

Stoph Addresses Congress

LD302234 Warsaw Domestic Service in Polish 1610 GMT 30 Jun 86

[Adress by Willy Stoph, member of the SED Central Committee Politburo and chairman of the Council of Ministers, at the 10th PZPR Congress in the Hall of Congresses in the Palace of Culture and Science in Warsaw -- live, in German with superimposed Polish translation]

[Text] Dear congress delegates: It is with great joy that I convey to the 10th PZPR Congress fraternal greeetings from the SED Central Committee and its general secretary, comrade Erich Honecker, and from the communists and people of the GDR. [applause]

Throughout the years, in good and bad moments, GDR communists have always stood solidly behind the Polish Communists and their struggle for a new socialist Poland. As friends and neighbors we are gladdened by the fact that the PZPR is coming to its 10th Congress strengthened in its ranks and with a feeeling of stronger ties with the working people. A strong Polish People's Republic under the guidance of its Marxist-Leninist party is a prop and support for us in molding a developed socialist society on German soil.

The Central Committee Political Report and your discussion, dear comrade delegates, defined Poland's future socialist path. We are profoundly convinced that your congress will prepare and adopt the resolutions necessary for this. In implementing these resolutions we wish you strength and success from the bottom of our hearts.

In the spirit of the 11th SED Congress, we want to assure you that our party, our state, our nation will continue to stand at your side, and we will develop and strengthen our close cooperation with the PZPR and People's Poland, characterized by trust and mutual, disinterested help.

Dear comrades, both our parties and our states are deeply interested in the peaceful development of the international situation, and in promoting social progress in our countries; we are doing everything to make an active contribution to (?restoring a healthy) world situation. The imperialist arms spiral and the measures by the United States toward the militarization of space, the policy of confrontation and lack of respect for the interests and rights of nations threaten world peace as never before. The question is being asked everywhere: Is this dangerous development, this slide in the direction of uncontrolled confrontation irreversible? We, the socialist states, can answer: The present situation dictates that we rethink the issues of armaments and security; the coexistence of nations on this earth of ours is the only one we have. It dictates that determined action be taken without delay. Today no state can guarantee its security at the expense of other states.

At the recent meeting in Budapest, the Warsaw Pact again pointed out a possible direction for all nations to be freed from the specter of world conflagration. The concept worked out there creates a new chance for peace, linking the bold proposals made by the Soviet Union at the beginning of this year, which speak of entering the third millenium without nuclear weapons, with a proposal to agree on considerable reductions in armed forces and conventional weapons. Those proposals were brought up again by Comrade Gorbachev at this congress. The countries of our community come out in favor of respecting the security interests of all nations. They come out in favor of basing the coexistence of nations on load-bearing, lasting foundations.

More and more people expect and demand that the United States and NATO turn back from their adventurist course. Reason and realism must gain the upper hand in the intertests of the life of mankind. In close union with the USSR, People's Poland, and other fraternal states, the GDR actively works in the interests of a businesslike dialogue, peaceful coexistence, and constructive cooperation among states with different social systems so as to improve the situation in Europe and the world. It is also through our efforts, aimed at achieving normal and equal relations with the FRG, that we are doing all we can to ensure that war never again emanates from German soil.

[applause]

We expect that the FRG Government will reassess its participation in the arms race that the United States is pursuing on earth and in space. The intensified arms race and confrontation are just as incompatible with the peace and security of nations as the revanchist and pan-Germanic pipedreams. It is the highest imperative of the German state of workers and peasants to facilitate the process of strengthening citizens' well-being and prosperity through a fruitful shaping of a developed socialist society. The stronger socialism becomes, the more durable peace is. This has become the leading slogan of our country's working people over the past months, and has become the sign of the 11th SED Congress and the elections to the social representative organs. The activities of the people, elevated to the rank of our program through the resolutions of our 11th Congress, have as their aim the ensurance of the further dynamic growth of an efficient national economy through comprehensive intensification of production and utilization of an accelerated development of science and technology for economic purposes.

By 1990 we intend to increase the national income to reach the level of 124-126 percent: 90 percent of this growth is to be achieved through enhancing labor productivity.

As for crop production, we envisage stabilization and a further increase in harvest yields. In this manner, favorable preconditions are being created for a planned raising of the material and cultural life of the population. We will continue the housing construction program, a key provision of our social policy; we envisage the building or modernization of more than 1 million apartments.

Close cooperation with other socialist community states, above all in the implementation of bilateral and multilateral long-term scientific, technological, and production cooperation programs up until the year 2000, is of fundamental importance for a stable development of our state. A program of this kind was signed in December last year by the leaders, our comrades Erich Honecker and Wojciech Jaruzelski. We are proud of the high level of our friendly relations with the Polish People's Republic; under the leadership of our Marxist-Leninist parties they develop in a planned and directed way. The close cooperation, based on trust among Communists on all levels; the intensive exchange of experiences; and the partner-like relations between districts and voivodships and ending with works party organizations are of exceptional value. Hundreds of thousands of working people in industry and agriculture, engineers and artistic communities, and, above all, the young citizens of our countries -- all of them take part in creating our friendship.

This year, the number of girls and young men who, since 1983, have been taking part in youth exchanges, will reach the figure of almost 1 million. How farsighted were the words of our unforgettable Ernst Thaelmann addressed to German and Polish workers in Zabrze in July 1932. He said then: We, proletarians, irrespective of whether we are Germans or Poles, are united by all that is great and alive in our class, our struggle to liberate ourselves from the capitalist yoke and imperialist slavery so as to attain a socialist victory.

The people's power and socialism have indeed become that which unites, which has broken hatred and discord forever. A live, unbreakable ribbon of friendship and cooperation, uniting both shores of the Odra and Nysa, has been woven from a million threads. Our party will do everything toward further universal consolidation of our fraternal relations.

Long live the alliance between the SED and the PZPR. [applause] Long live friendship between our people. Long live socialism. [applause]

Lenart Addresses Congress

LD302243 Warsaw Domestic Service in Polish 1623 GMT 30 Jun 86

[Speech by Jozef Lenart, member of the CPCZ Central Committee Presidium, at 10th PZPR Congress in Warsaw; Lenart in vernacular with superimposed Polish translation -- live]

[Text] Esteemed Comrade Jaruzelski, dear Polish friends, comrades: I would like to express sincere joy at the fact that I can convey warm party greetings from the CPCA Central Committee, from the working people of my homeland, together with wishes for successful deliberations to the delegates of the 10th PZPR Congress, to the whole of your party and the nation of the Polish People's Republic. [applause]

As your neighbors and good friends we have a lively interest in the development of the situation in Poland.

Together with you, we exprience successes and difficulties on the road to building a new society. We know well what a difficult road has been traversed by the PZPR since its Ninth Extraodinary Congress 5 years ago; It faced a complex struggle against counterrevolutionary forces and for the consolidation of social life. The balance shows that you have achieved considerable successes in overcoming the consequences of the economic and political crisis at the beginning of the eighties, that you have prepared the ground for entering a new stage. We are glad that you have achieved these results despite all the actions by internal and external enemies, in particular, the United States. This bears witness to the PZPR's growth in activeness and force of attraction, to the consolidation of socialism in the Polish People's Republic.

The precongress discussion on the draft party program, the critical and open nature of the PZPR Central Committee report, delivered by its first secretary, Comrade Wojciech Jaruzelski, and the congress discussion convincingly show that you are satisfied with what has already been achieved, that you are moving more and more quickly and consistently along the road of socialist renewal. Inspired by the 27th CPSU Congress, like us in the CPCZ, you are geared in your program assumptions to accelerating socioeconomic development.

Our attention was drawn by the stress you lay on the country's socioeconomic development in the immediate years ahead and in the long term. We assess highly the fact that your party has outlined bold tasks for society, achieving 70-percent increase in the national income and about a 50 percent increase in individual consumption by the year 2000. We wish you, dear friends, many successes on the road you have embarked on, the road of renewal and accelerated development, of intensification and increased quality of work, the road of scientific development and the introduction of new technology.

The 17th CPCZ Congress also adopted resolutions of great significance for the further and universal development of our country up to the year 2000. In the current 5-year period we estimate an annual average growth in the national income of 3 and 1/2 percent. Up to the end of the century it should increase by at least two-thirds and individual consumption by 50 percent. The strategy of accelerating socioeconomic development, which we consider an essential achievement of our congress, is extremely ambitious: For the very first time in the history of the construction of socialism, in 1986-90 the our country's growth in national income is to excede the growth in industrial production. We have allocated ourselves these tasks with the full awareness that there is no road other than economic intensification.

While realizing this we are struggling against inertia and conservatism, which appear most of all in management. We are determined to realize the new tasks. That is why we are creating conditions for a (?good) start everywhere and for actively tackling these difficult goals. At the same time we are intensifying the struggle against all negative social phenomena. We consider the adaption of the whole spectrum of the party's methods and style of work to the level of current requirements a significant precondition for implementing our plans.

We also have higher demands of the leading cadres. We are perfecting all of our cadres in all individual stages of management. We are deepening criticism and self-criticism, striving to increase the effectiveness of party work among the broad masses of society. We are trying to perfect the functions of the state and strengthen the elements of self-management, in particular of people's councils, social organizations, and work forces. We shall not, however, reach the planned goals without cooperation with the Soviet Union, with the Polish People's Republic, and with our countries of the socialist community.

Traditional friendship and cooperation were born in the fire of the joint struggle against facism, deepened in the struggle for the victory of socialism, and are developing today in universal cooperation. A new impulse for the development of Czechoslovak-Polish cooperation was given by the results of the recent friendly meeting of the our leaders, Comrades Gustav Husak and Wojciech Jaruzelski.

It also includes a long-term program for the development of economic, scientific, and technological cooperation with the year of 2000, based on the assumption of the comprehensive CEMA program. In order to achieve a growth in effectiveness it is of fundamental importance that cooperation, specialization, and joint investment increase. Traditional and successful cooperation in our heavy machinery plant at Martin with the Ursus works is continuing. Czechoslovakia wants to continue its participation in developing the extraction of sulphur and hard coal in Poland, in the production of graphite electrodes and electrical equipment, and in the development of other branches of benefit for both countries.

In the current year mutual trade exchange will reach the highest volume in the postwar period. During the next 5 years it is to increase by 40 percent compared with the previous 5-year period. There is a favorable development of contacts between our fraternal parties, state bodies, and social organizations. We have also noted some progress in direct cooperation between regions. This cooperation is an important tool for the development and improvement of socialist societies in our countries. We are very pleased with the exemplary cooperation between the Ostrava and Katowice metallurgists and miners, which secures for both partners regular and effective production and extraction and the utilization of the latest scientific achievements.

Today we are aware that merely friendly visits by delegations are not enough. One has to search for new effective forms that bring concrete results favorable for the development of the whole socialist community.

Our countries also have common interests in the area of foreign policy. On the grounds of historical experience we base ourselves on mutual alliance within the Warsaw Pact which, thanks to the Soviet Union, constitutes the guarantee of peace and stability in Europe. Like all peaceful forces of the world we are also concerned about the dangerous course of U.S. imperialism. U.S. militaristic circles and reactionary forces in NATO striving for world supremacy are intensifying a hectic rearmament and transfering them into space, threatening Europe with missiles and chemical weapons.

In the interest of humanity we are fighting against this dangerous policy, giving active support to disarmament proposals -- first of all for a halt to nuclear arms tests. With the SED and the SPD we are striving for the formation of a zone free of chemical weapons.

We do not look silently on provocations by those inheritors of fascism who call for a revision of European borders, nor to official support for revisionism by the FRG's ruling circles, which in this way negate their eastern policy.

These trends undermine the foundations of security in Europe and deserve our unequivocal condemnation. We assess highly the Soviet Union's principled peaceful foreign policy, which seeks any possibilities for halting and reversing the dangerous development of the situation in Europe and in the world. The Czechoslovak community fully supports the policy of the leadership of the CPSU, of the Soviet state, and of Comrade Gorbachev. It approves the results of the Warsaw Pact's recent Political Consultative Committee meeting in Budapest.

The program of reduction of armed forces and conventional arms in Europe that was mapped out at the meeting constitutes an organic part of the entire complex of disarmament and peace initiatives by the Soviet Union and the other states of the socialist community, which seek to prevent the danger of the annihilation of human civilization. We are convinced that by joint efforts we can reverse the threat and reactivate the policy of detente.

Comrades, in conclusion I would like to wish the Communists, the working class, and the entire Polish people success in the implementation of the 10th Congress resolutions, in the further consolidation of socialist Poland, in our common struggle for peace, socialism, and social progress [applause]

Long live the PZPR; long live the unbreakable fighting alliance of the CPCZ and PZPR; long live the joint friendship with our liberator and protector, the Soviet Union. [applause] Long live peace and socialism. [applause]

Orzechowski Speech

LD302059 Warsaw Domestic Service in Polish 1743 GMT 30 Jun 86

[Address by Marian Orzechowski, minister of foreign affairs, at the 10th PZPR Congress at the Congress Hall of the Palace of Culture and Science in Warsaw -- live]

[Text] Esteemed delegates, dear guests: there are values that have only one, great dimension for the Poles -- the independence and sovereignty of the homeland, its territorial integrity, security, and peace. This is invariably served by the foreign policy of our state as laid down by the party. The words of the PZPR Central Committee's report point to -- in the most difficult years of the existence of People's Poland -- the tested goals and principles of our foreign policy.

Let us go back to the recent past -- not to ponder over it again, but to draw conclusions for the future. Our homeland had then become a weak link in the socialist community and the sick man of Europe. In NATO staffs it was given the role of a detonator under the building of peace. From the Polonia operation, the chain process of partitioning the socialist community and of drawing European history back was to begin. The international position of our state had been considerably weakened. It struck not only our national pride and national dignity but also the strength of the socialist community. Ominous, scoffing opinions reappeared about the Polish economy and about an anarchic republic.

We shattered this opinion. We defended socialism. We protected from anarchy and collapse the state that was regained and rebuilt with such great effort; we defeneded the revolutionary achievements without which our march toward the 21st century would have been impossible. Our resolute action in defense of socialism, our search for the best ways of building it under Polish conditions gained the respect of our friends. This was strongly emphasized by Comrade Mikhail Sergeyevich Gorbachev from our congress' rostrum.

Comrades, Poland today is not a weakened link of the socialist community and the sick man of Europe anymore. It rebuilt its position in the socialist community; it reached a high level in its relations with the Soviet Union and enriched them with new content and forms; it consolidated it position among developing and neutral countries; it efficiently broke the barrier of restrictions and sanctions erected by imperialism; it considerably advanced the normalization of relations with almost all capitalist states:

It also regained economic and financial credibility in the international division of labor; it restored and consolidated its authority in internal organizations and conferences; and it revived great traditions of peaceful initiatives, marked by the names of Adam Rapacki and Wladyslaw Gomulka.

It enriched them with new initiatives, presented by the first secretary of the PZPR Central Committee at the 40th UN General Assembly session. Behind the statements of: It rebuilt, overcame, and consolidated, there are concealed themes full of drama: the persistent struggle with internal weaknesses and the offensive of international imperialism; the unity of the nation in primary matters; consistency and determination in realizing the line of the Ninth Congress;the effects of political and economic stabilization; the accomplishments of the Polish worker, farmer, and intellectual, who perceived within the program of socialist renewal a realistic opportunity to drug the country out of the crisis and to be equal to the challenge of civilization; decisiveness and adherence to principles in countering the policy of restrictions and sanctions; not backing down to pressures but also [word indistinct] the voice of the United States and its allies; the gradual restoration of our position in the alliance with the Soviet Union and in the socialist community; and the paving of the way on this basis by rational circles in the West for the conviction that without Poland, and moreover, going against it, the vital problems of Europe cannot be effectively solved -- I am thinking of its lasting security and cooperation.

We are presenting conclusions for the future from the past 5-year period. The first conclusion: The international policy of our state expresses the aspirations and strivings of all social and political forces concerned about the Polish state. It is then a wide plan for national accord. We will be consolidating and expanding this role and function of Polish foreign policy. We see in this one of the important directions of the development of our state's democratism and the shaping of the its citizens' political culture.

The second conclusion: the fundamental condition for independence, sovereignty, and territorial integrity is not only a strong army -- competent in a defensive capacity -- not only lasting, sensible alliances and friendships, but also an efficient economy -- meeting the needs of the nation and finding a favorable place for the state in the international division of labor and exchange.

The third conclusion: In the most difficult period for us, we understood the meaning of the saying that one finds real friends in times of trouble, and particularly the special value of the Polish-Soviet friendship, the great achievement of many generations of the Polish nation and the nations of the Soviet Union, as Comrade Gorbachev described it. It has historical traditions that go deep into the history of Poland and Russia: to the cooperation between Russian Decabrists and Polish patriots who dreamed about a free Russia and a free Poland linked by fratenral bonds; to Nikolay Hertzen, who, by his stance on Polish freedom aspirations saved the honor of Russian democracy, as noted by Lenin: to Russian participants in the January uprising who fought under the slogan "For our freedom and yours," who were put before execution squads or deported to penal servitude; to the cooperation between the great proletariat and Naradnaya Volya; to bonds between Lenin's party of Bolsheviks and the social democracy of the Kingdom of Poland and Lithuania; to the participation of tens of thousands of Poles in the Great October Revolution, and Polish-Soviet brotherhood-in-arms in the World War II period; and to the sacrifice of 600,000 soviet troops who gave their lives on Polish soil so that Poland could be free and independent.

Polish-Soviet friendship, the fruit of historical experience, supported by solid ideological and political foundations on the identity of aspirations, has been proven in the most difficult period for Poland; in very bad weather for Poland. We will guard this friendship, we will consolidate it. [applause]

The fourth conclusion: In the part years we have learned that alliances and friendships created secure and lasting conditions for an independent way in guiding the fate of the state. However, the wisdom of its people and farsightedness of its policy rests on the fact that alliances and friendships should be used successfully in making them the source of its strength and greatness.

The fifth conclusion: The position and the role of Poland in the community of socialist states have not been given once and forever; we must constantly care for them, confirm and consolidate them by the results of management, by achievements in the creation of socialism, by active and successful international activity, by efforts toward the material and intellectual strengthening of the potential of the entire community.

The sixth conclusion: Past experience once again demonstrates how far from the truth is the myth that the West, capitalist governments and states, care about the fate of Poles and Polands; there attitude to Poland has controlled out by their class interest.

The seventh conclusion: The logics of the development of forces hostile to socialism and the socialist state, which undermine its alliances and its supreme aims and foreign policy directions, leads, as the draft PZPR program says, into the wilderness of serving the enemies of Poland and of betraying national interests.

We subordinate the foreign policy tasks over the next few years to the main strategic goals: the acceleration of Poland's socioeconomic development. We will not achieve it unless we guarantee for Poland lasting security and peace and conditions of mutually advantageous cooperation, which faciliate accelerated economic development and joining the fundamental undercurrent of the world's technological progress, or unless we ensure increased Polish participation in socialist integration.

The new stage of development that the socialist community states are now entering requires a qualitatively new approach to their mutual cooperation and relations. In these relations we will be guided by loyalty to the idea of Marxism-Leninism and at the same time, by intellectual boldness and innovation, the principle of real efficiency. We will support everything that serves the needs of today, that helps solve its problems, but which looks ahead to the future and corresponds to its trends and challenges. Poland is unfailingly interested in normalizing relations with the West and in the restoration of mutually advantageous economic cooperation.

Unfortunately, for some political circles in the West, relations with Poland are still one of the instruments in the struggle against socialism. They attempt to interfere in our internal affairs. They try to teach us how national accord, dialogue between various social forces, and the form of the trade union movement and of the political system, and so forth should look. They need a weak Poland -- tormented by internal contradictions and weaknesses -- which is mistrustful of the Soviet Union and is in turn mistrusted by the Soviet Union. They instruct and support antisocialist forces. They step up propaganda aggression. They are invariably banking on a conflict between the state and church. The United States disciplines its NATO allies so that they do not go too far in their relations with Poland without first looking back at Washington.

In the struggle against us they cynically exploit everything, even human tragedies and the noblest human feelings. The tragedy in Chernobyl is a particularly glaring example of this.

We have to implement the aims and tasks of our foreign policy in an era full of tension and threats. States and nations, all of us, are still faced with the dramatic question: Which direction will the course of events proceed, how can we guard against nuclear self-destruction? Bellicose, arrogant and unpredictable circles of modern imperialism are throwing down a military and political, economic and ideological challenge to socialism.

Their goal is clear: To gain superiority over the USSR, to go from containing socialism to making inroads in it, to push it back and gradually eliminate it, so as to be able to impose upon the world the Pax Americana -- their own laws and norms of social life. The acceleration of the arms race is subordinated to this goal, as are the spread of the arms race into space, the efforts to frustrate the social and economic development of socialist countries, and the undermining of credibility of the socialist path of development in developing countries.

In view of these threats, the cause of defending peace is one that surpasses all others in its importance. The maintenance of peace and diversion of the threat of nuclear war constitute an expression of the historical role of the working class at the present stage. The USSR counteracts the philosophy of war and domination over the world with the philosophy of [illegible] peace and of cooperating, the philosophy of humanism and optimism, the victory of reason over the madness of war. Comrade Mikhail Sergeyevich Gorbachev outlined its most important elements today. This is also our own, Polish philosophy, one that accords with our national interests and the interests of socialism, one that arises from Poland's historical experinces.

As a state with a considerable economic, intellectual, and military potential, situated in an important position in Europe, as a nation with great traditions, we feel we share responsibility for the destiny of our continent and the entire world.

We express this by endorsing our Soviet friends' peaceful initiatives, by making use of all opportunities to reach European and world public opinion in international organizations and institutions drawing on a considerable capital of international appreciation. It is in this way that we interpret our patriotic and international duty and our obligations arising from the Polish-Soviet alliance, from Polish-Soviet friendship. Poland needs the USSR to be mighty so that it may successfully implement the 27th CPSU Congress program; Poland needs it friendship, it needs the cordial ties that link both parties, states, and nations. [aplause] The USSR needs an allied and friendly Poland, a Poland that is independent, strong, and stable, a Poland that lends sovereign support of its own accord, to its peaceful initiativese, through active and creative cooperation. [applause]

This opens up enormous opportunities for our foreign policy. It also places a great responsibility on it. We are fully aware of this. We will expand our Polish contribution to enriching the struggle for disarmament, to winning allies and sympathizers in searching for rational solutions for the sake of peace, to expanding the front of those who oppose the arms race, to building bridges of agreement and cooperation in Europe. This is in the interest of Poland, the socialist community, and all Europe.

Europe, which needs peace and stability, is the main area of our interest and concern, our alarm and hope. It is also the main arena of the struggle for peace, for equal security for all, for mutually advantegous cooperation.

Europe, the pioneer of detente between the East and West in the seventies can now become the pioneer of disarmament. It has all the prerequisities for becoming a region of stable peace and exemplary cooperation in conditions of the mutually advantageous exchange of material goods and spiritual values, and of cooperation in solving economic, ecological, and cultural challenges common to the whole continent. We are as interested as our Soviet friends that the hijacked Europe should return to its historical and traditional place, that it should realize its own individuality and identity -- the community of vital interests of all its states, which tower over the differences and contradictions that divide them, aware of its responsibility not only for itself, but also for our planet earth, for the peace and secure future of all its inhabitants.

Comrades, not in 40 years have the tasks of Polish foreign policy been as complex as they are now. Only a responsible foreign policy -- one that is uncompromising in the cause of peace and in the defense of national interests; one that is present in all areas and fronts of struggle for a world of peace, trust, and cooperation; one that is active and full of initiatives, open to all that serves peace and security, searching for what unites, ready to conduct a dialogue with any person who wishes to enter a dialogue, who is ready to listen to our voices and arguments on the principle of reciprocity; one that is realistic, based on a sober appraisal of reality, chances, and opportunities, not on emotions and wishful thinking -- can prove equal to these tasks.

What do we need? What should we do to ensure that Poland's voice in the international arena is ever more far-reaching and better heard, to ensure that (?our) foreign policy should ever more efficiently suport our accelerated march forward? First of all: we need more boldness, more daring, and more agressiveness in breaking down the barriers that still face our country and are constantly put up again, in promoting our own peace initiatives and those of the whole socialist community, in reaching milieux friendly toward us or even those which are just neutural, and in attacking our opponents and in forcing them onto the defensive, to reveal their true aspect.

Second: We need to break off the habits of pure diplomacy that still exist -- to which, apparently, such basic things as trade, new technologies, and new markets for Polish producers are quite foreign. The economic front, if one can put it that way, is becoming a particularly sensitive and important area of foreign policy. In Poland's present economic situation and in the historical foreign policies which significantly contribute to the development of economic, scientific, and technological cooperation, especially to the growth of the export of goods and services.

Third, there should be more consistency in the implementation of the cadre policy determined by the party; an increase in the ideological, moral, political and professional demands made on the foreign service cadres; and more of a bold connection of the knowledge, experience, and diplomatic expertise of the older cadre with the enterprise, courage, and initiative of the young. The foreign policy, the implementation of its tasks -- this is service for the nation, for the state, and for the cause of peace and socialism. This service can be performed only by people who are fully aware of its significance, its sense, and the responsiblity taken for its effects, knowledable in the essence of things, capable of noticing new problems and of solving them in the right way.

Fourth: We need modern organizational structure that will answer the present-day needs, that will allow for the comprehensive solving of new problems such as economic issues, disarmament, and international cooperation in the humanitarian field and that of human rights.

Fifth: We need a decisive eradication of exclusivity in ministries [resortowy partykularyzm]; of a separation in the treatment of political and economic matters, of cultural and scientific and technological matters; and of the waste of scattered effort. There is but one Policy national interest; it is to this interest that we must definitely subordinate the activities of all the foreign services, all institutions and organizations that act on the international scene. There is also just one foreign policy, determined by the PZPR and implemented by the socialist state and, by the force of law, coordinated by the Ministry of Foreign Affairs.

Sixth: Intelligently planned and coordinated cooperation among the foreign services of the states belonging to the socialist community.

Comrade, in the memorable speech made on 13 December 1981, Comrade Jaruzelski said: We desire a Poland that is great, great by its achievements, its culture, its forms of social life, and its position in Europe. The only road leading to this goal is socialism accepted by society and constantly enriched by the experience of life. We will build such a Poland, and such a Poland we will defend. In building such a Poland, Polish foreign policy has served and will continue to serve. [applause]

Wozniak, Gorbachev Speak

LD302119 [Editorial report] Warsaw Domestic Service in Polish at 1759 GMT on 30 June, during its live relay of the 10th PZPR Congress, carries a speech by Marian Wozniak, member of the PZPR Central Committee Politburo, in which he thanks CPSU General Secretary Mikhail Gorbachev for his participation in the Polish congress. Wozniak says:

"Tomorrow the congress will meet in working groups, so permit me, comrade delegates, to address our dear guest, Comrade Mikhail Sergeyevich Gorbachev, general secretary of the CPSU, with warm thanks for working with us during the 2 days of the plenary session. Tomorrow Comrade Gorbachev will also be at the working meetings and discussions, and at meetings in Warsaw with the milieus of our country -- in factories. I would therefore like -- as we will not be meeting in the evening and because, of course, urgent duties call him home -- to express thanks for the work the Soviet delegation conducted with us. The Soviet delegation will be staying on, but I would like to say to our guest, thanking him warmly...[interrupted by applause] that for all of us...[applause continues] I would like to say a few words, despite the applause. We have, after all, some things to talk about.

"I would like to say first and foremost that we think that Comrade Gorbachev has made an important contribution to our congress. This is an important matter with a political significance not only for out party and the country, but also what he said here has a significance for the whole socialist camp and for the whole world. At the same time, I would like in a very simple, human way to say: Comrade Mikhail Sergeyevich, you have met with great warmth and goodwill here. I think that the best example, a very human one, is the requests for dozens, hundreds, in fact, of autographs from delegates and invited guests. I would like you to know that every autograph means dozens, hundreds of friends in Poland who will look at it and remember you and your participation. I would also like to say...[applause interrupts] I would also like to say that after these 2 days, it is with great warmth that we convey best wishes to you, to you personally, for good health and endurance in the great work that is of significance not only for building the Soviet Union's strength and power, but has significance for the consolidation of cooperation between the socialist countries and for world peace.

"I would like to say, Comrade Mikhail Sergeyevich, that the Poles are full of admiration. Your struggle for world peace is a struggle not only for the peoples of the socialist countries, it is a struggle for all peace-loving people in the world. We will be with you and with the peoples of the Soviet Union in this struggle. Accept best wishes for the peoples of the Soviet Union, for yourself personally, for all the Soviet people. I thank you warmly."

Following more applause, Gorbachev responds. He speaks in Russian with superimposed Polish translation. The Polish translation often overrides the Russian original, which begins as follows:

"I am leaving with great impressions from the meetings that took place during our delegation's stay in the first days of the 10th PZPR Congress. The greatest and strongest impression is that the 10th Congress, the report delivered by Comrade Jaruzelski, the new program of your party, and the delegates' proposals [words indistinct] open up a new, fruitful stage in the movement of Poland forward with broad steps to fresh frontiers of socialist (?construction) for the sake of the flourishing of Poland, of the happiness of the Polish people [words indistinct], and for the cause of peace and socialism. I wish you, dear [words indistinct], on behalf of the Communists [words indistinct] complete success...." The remainder of Gorbachev's remarks, approximately 20 seconds, is overridden by the Polish translation.

The Polish version of Gorbachev's remarks, which differs from the audible portion of the original Russian, follows as heard:

"I am leaving great impressions behind me. I am under the impression, here in Warsaw, during the first few days of the 10th PZPR Congress. The greatest experience, the strongest impression for me was that the 10th Congress, the report by Jaruzelski, the new program of your party, the proposals and postulates of the delegates that I heard and that will still continue to resound here, (?and the remaining decisions) -- everything opens up a new, fruitful stage in the movement and forward march of Poland with great strides toward fresh frontiers of socialist construction and for the sake of the flourishing of Poland, for the sake of the happiness of the Polish nation, in the interests of the cause of peace and socialism. I wish you, dear comrades, as a brother in fraternal terms, on behalf of the Communists of the Soviet Union, on behalf of the peoples of the Soviet Union, complete and great success both in the work of the congress and in the implementation of its plans and intensions, its resolutions -- great and bold plans. And what is most important is that these plans accord with the hopes and aspirations of the Polish nation. I wish you great successes. I thank you very much for these warm feelings and words addressed to me and the Soviet Union and, I think, also to our Leninist party and the Soviet nation. Thank you very much."

After Gorbachev's remarks, Wozniak announces that the congress will meet for 10 minutes in closed session after a brief recess.

Mokryszczak at Closed Session

LD012153 Warsaw PAP in English 1657 GMT 1 Jul 86

[Text] Warsaw, July 1: A closed session of the PUWP Tenth Congress here yesterday [30 June] adopted amendments to the party Statute and the regulations of election of party delegates, authorities and internal control organs.

Following are highlights of an address on the issues, delivered to the session by chairman of the Statute Commission of the Congress Wlodzimierz Mokrzyszczak:

The amendments into the party Statute stem from the experience of the entire party, and take into account the postulates and opinions from party members, cells and authorities, as well as ideas and suggestions formulated during the campaign preceding the present congress. The proposed amendments are aimed to strengthen many innovative mechanisms of working of the party, encouraged by the Ninth Congress.

They propose to give greater emphasis to the class character of the party as well as the vanguard and leading role of the working class in the building of socialism, stress that in determining the programmes and objectives of socio-economic development the party is guided by the interest of workers, which it combines with that of the peasants and intelligentsia. The proposed changes seek also to point out that it is the party's duty to ensure that workers and peasants are adequately represented in party ranks and authorities as well as representative organs and self-government bodies.

In order to increase the influence of society on party policies, it is proposed that worker consultative teams be formed at party committees, made up of best non-party workers and peasants. Obligatory open meetings of basic party cells at least once a year are also proposed along a possibility to admit new candidate members into party ranks at such open meetings. The proposed changes offer a clearer definition of the tasks and role of party members in the system of socialist democracy -- the people's councils, worker self-management bodies and territorial self-government.

There is a socially and politically weighty part of the proposed changes which aim to strengthen the principles of party personnel policy formulated by the 13th Plenum of the CC. They give wider powers as well as duties to basic party cells and committees, especially with respect to recommending candidates for executive posts, and oblige them to carry out regular personnel evaluation, particularly incisive consideration and response to mismanagement, waste and lack of discipline with people vested with state or public property.

Regular interviews with party members and candidates are proposed as a permanent form of work of the basic cells, to be carried out twice during a cell's term of office: Ahead of the national conference of delegates and the congress. A statutory rank is proposed to be given to a new form of work of the Central Committee, the briefing and consultative meetings of members of the party's central authorities, a form proposed to be extended down to every tier of activity, too.

A whole package of proposals is aimed to strengthen the ideological, political and organizational cohesion of party ranks, and raise the responsibility of its cells and authorities for quality, social composition and size of the ranks. It also places more emphasis on the basic cells' duty to regularly review the attitudes, views and activity of each member, introduces new mechanisms obliging party committees to verify basic link decisions on admitting new members, strike them off the list as well as on ruling internal reprimands and distinctions, and clarifies the regulations on the party's internal judicature.

One proposal is to give the Central Committee a statutory right to search for and establish various experimental structural innovations in the party, especially with respect to the work of party cells in multi-factory companies and industrial giants, town residential areas, rural areas, as well as professional milieux.

A group of amendments proposes to give a clearer definition to the programmatic and legislative competence of the conferences and committees and their executive organs. Bringing the length of the terms in office of every level of party authorities to the same five years as well as fewer plenary meetings would enable the committees to focus on implementation of the resolutions, carrying into effect the committees' inspiring and control functions, and work with the basic cells and rank-and-file members.

The position and role of the basic cells in the life of the party should be enhanced by more detailed definition of their duties and rights, and introduction of regulations singling out the tasks of (the sub-basic) section cells and party groups. It is proposed that basic cells be given right to cut the member candidate's probation period as well as that required for standing for congressional mandate, party authorities or control organs, or political work in the apparatus.

It is proposed that the committees consult congress delegates on the candidates to stand for first secretaries, during the congress or report-and-election conferences. The provision stating that an elected post on executive organs can be held for only two consecutive terms is proposed to be upheld. Likewise, a delegate's mandate is proposed to be held valid throughout the entire term of given party authorities.

In the course of the pre-congress consultations, the delegates have given general approval to the idea of forming control and audit commissions at every tier of the party. The respective commissions would continue to be appointed by the congress and report-and-election conferences, before whom they would be accountable. This aims to raise the importance of the control organs and simplify party structure.

The proposed amendments reflect the search for new and more effective mechanisms and ways of the party's functioning, aimed to make its work more effective. The amendments retain the continuity of the ideological, political and organizational principles and solutions adopted by the Ninth Congress, and strengthen, improve and elaborate the results of that congress.

Session Ends

Jaruzelski Speaks to Workers

LD012125 Warsaw Domestic Service in Polish 1609 GMT 1 Jul 86

["Extensive excerpts" of speech by Wojciech Jaruzelski, PZPR Central Committee first secretary, to the work force at the Swierczewski precision tools plant in Warsaw on 1 July -- recorded]

[Text] Dear Mikhail Sergeyevich Gorbachev, dear comrades: In preparing for today's meeting I was furnished with rich material -- in my view a serious and important speech -- but after listening to the words of our greatly esteemed and dear friend -- words with such profound content, but at the same so lofty in the feelings they express -- I think I should not keep to the text, which otherwise would be so apt, but should also say a few words that I would like to be considered as being a conversation with you, the kollektiv of the Swierczewski works, and as being words addressed to our dear guest and to the whole Soviet delegation. At the same time, these words will be a form of statement by the delegates of the 10th Congress, who are also with us today and who yesterday received with great satisfaction the announcement that Comrade Gorbachev would come to the Swierczewski works in the Wola area of Warsaw. I also thank you for such a warm, friendly reception for our guest and for the conversations he was able to have at work stations, which made it possible to bring the Soviet leader closer to matters pertaining to Poland and its workers. He reacted in such a lively manner to these matters and with such deep understanding for our affairs.

We are very happy when we see and hear in these conversations the great interest being shown in our 10th Congress. At all work stations where we stopped, one could tell that no one was indifferent to matters pertaining to the congress, neither party members nor nonparty people. This makes us exceptionally happy, but at the same time places exceptional obligations on us.

We do not view the 10th Congress as a closed party conference. All the preparations for it, the great precongress discussion, and the deliberations that are in progress in full view of the entire working class and all of society are confirmation -- and at the same time our fervent wish -- that this congress should be a congress of the party, the working class, and the Polish nation; for the understanding and support of the working people will, in the final analysis, determine its success. Active support in implementing the congress resolutions will, after all, be of fundamental significance for the further development and success of our fatherland. As you undoubtedly know from the reports and discussions, an enormous task stands before us -- that of undertaking a geat organizational and structural reform that will accompany the economic reform and will be strictly interdependent with and harnessed to it.

At the same time, in this same process, the optimization of cadres must be carried out. The most appropriate statement in this respect would be: the right person in the right place, the best people to the front rank. We will see to this. A still greater and more difficult problem is the process of reorganization, which requires that outdated habits, obstacles, and bureaucracy be surmounted. Above all, count on the working class, the working people. The best engineers, economists, and all progressive people will be our allies in this regard. After all, the dignity of the working man is offended when a man does not work at the level of his abilities. There is a bitter joke -- surely you know it. In one of the enterprises two workers are pushing a rattling wheelbarrow along. Someone comes up and asks: Why are two of you pushing this wheelbarrow? They answer: Oh, the third guy is sick today. Such twos and threes pushing not wheelbarrows but papers sit at desks in various workplaces. From top to bottom, we must liberate people from unnecessary burdens and give them every possible chance to take action.

We shall begin with ourselves in the Central Committee. I would like to say that at yesterday's closed session of the congress the delegates decided to merge the party Central Control Commission and the Central Auditing Commission, two hitherto operational and very necessary organs of our party. We came to the conclusion that their merger will increase the dynamism of their activities and their degree of effectiveness and will result in specific cadre economies.

We will continue in this direction. We will, in this regard, set even more stringent demands. One must never forget about the past, particularly when our people's past is so complex, beautiful, and bitter. However, one must constantly think about the future; this is the greatest duty and obligation of the present, living generation, particularly the generation of young people who are building the future of Poland and their own future. They cannot be indifferent to anything that is happening in the country today.

Since we are talking about the past and the future, let us note that the importance of our friendship, alliance, and cooperation with the Soviet Union is obvious and natural. The 10th Congress has not only become one more manifestation of this friendship but has also become an essential confirmation of its significance and magnitude. The congress has become even greater thanks to the presence of Comrade Mikhail Gorbachev. His physical presence, his contacts with the people, and his directness are all excellent human traits that we were able to recognize here and that draw people to him. Naturally, I highly appreciate the chance to conduct talks with him, as well as --perhaps I have the right to say it -- his friendship.

His presence also has programmatic significance; his presence is extremely important for Polish-Soviet relations and even goes beyond this. Here, in a way, our thoughts and feelings are combined as we jointly take up what has been brought about by the 27th CPSU Congress, the congress of great opportunities for socialism, great chances for acceleration, and great results for Poland, for our people, and for the 10th Congress. What is no less important is that it was from here, heroic Warsaw, the Polish capital, raised from ashes, from the Palace of Culture and today from workers' Wola, that the voice of the leader of the great socialist power resounded in the name of and in defense of peace.

This is not the voice of a propaganda appeal. This is the voice behind which there is correctness, strength, and an honest offer. I think this voice is not only that of the greatest political standing -- which history will [word indistinct] assess -- but also of great moral standing, to which no honest person can remain indifferent -- not one son or daughter of the Polish nation, which suffered such great losses, which suffered so much, and which understands what war and peace mean, can be or is indifferent.

We join these warm words of Comrade Gorbachev with all our hearts and all our desire for action, and with the considerable force of our People's Poland. [applause]

Dear comrades, we were reminded today by this tribute from the pages of our history, but above all by the fact that what we have achieved today is the greatest heritage, which ought to unite us today. This is our future and our hope. General Swierczewski is a great symbol and a wonderful figure. But, after all, let us return to the tragic years of the war, to the liberating mission of the Soviet Army, and to the joint struggle with the soldiers of People's Poland. The first lights in Warsaw, the first Warsaw streetcars, and Warsaw life in general revived thanks to Soviet assistance. All the older people in this hall remember those days very well. We recall walls and houses on which was written: No mines [no threat of mines exploding].

The father of Comrade Gorbachev was a Soviet sapper. He came down the long, difficult, heroic fighting road. He was heavily wounded. He recuperated in Krakow, our old capital. What marvellous symbolism there is in all of this! Our cooperation and friendship must have, apart from historical and emotional support, a strong material basis. This support has been built up ever more strongly. We spoke about this today at the congress, saying that we will ceaselessly concern ourselves with this. It involves more improved and more effective integration of our economic efforts. In strategic measures -- I should say macrostrategic, where a lot still remains to be done in the CEMA framework -- we are moving in this direction: I am convinced that we will reach new heights.

This also applies to tactical [as heard] measures, but let us not treat this aspect as if it were insignificant. It means a great deal, above all, to the character of the cooperation between the work collectives, such as the cooperation of the Swierczewski plant with the Kalibar plant, of the many other Polish and Soviet enterprises, institutes, and labor and academic teams that cooperate with each other. We will broaden this process.

We sometimes use the words -- yesterday they also came to us from the congress rostrum -- we desire a great Poland. We do not understand this in a simplified way. This is not megalomania. A small country, but one which is well organized, dynamically developing, modern, and cultural can be great. A country that is large but which lags behind is small. We have the chance to be a great country -- by which I do not mean the sort of greatness that we have historically known, in which there was so much pettiness and which eventually ended in defeat, in the elimination of Poland from the map. Nor do I mean a big power's superiority, the deprivation of allies, which in turn ended in the tragedy of September 1939. We mean the true greatness of a dynamically developing socialist Poland, whose people are living ever better, wiser, and nobler, from whom one can learn much, whose glorious history is valued -- a country respected above all for what it stands for today. Such a great Poland can exist only in alliance with the Soviet Union, [applause] and only within the fraternal cooperation of the fraternal socialist community. This is the Poland we desire. This is the Poland that we wish to build, guided by -- I am certain -- a good resolution from the 10th Congress.

Allow me, dear comrades, to once again thank our dear guest and the whole Soviet delegation, among whom there are eminent personages from Soviet life, and all our friends for their participation in the congress, for this meeting with you, and for all that they are doing for our cause in an unchanging, immortal friendship. Long live Polish-Soviet friendship! [applause] Long live Comrade Mikhail Gorbachev [applause], our great friend and a wonderful, superb man! [applause]

RPC MESSAGE TO CPC ON 65th ANNIVERSARY

AU011336 Bucharest AGERPRES in English 1730 GMT 30 Jun 86

[Text] Bucharest AGERPRES 30/6/1986 — The CC of the RCP sent the following telegram to the CC of the Communist Party of China:

Dear Comrades, On behalf of the Romanian Communists and of the entire Romanian people we address you, the Chinese Communists and friendly people cordial congratulations and best wishes on the 65th foundation anniversary of the CPC.

A continuator of the people's glorious revolutionary traditions, the Communist Party of China has brilliantly organized and led the struggle waged by the masses of people against the imperialist domination and the feudal oppression, for national and social liberation, to overturn the old system and set in the people's power. The victory of the Chinese revolution and the passage to building socialism represent events of exceptional importance in China's millenium-old history, that opened a new era to the life of the whole country, to the destinies of the Chinese people and dealt a powerful blow to the imperialist strongholds in Asia and throughout the world, making an important contribution to altering the world balance of forces, exerting deep-going influences on the struggle waged by peoples for freedom, national independence and social progress.

While applying the principles of scientific socialism to the actual conditions of China, the Communist Party of China has mobilized and guided the people's energies towards implementing the strategic goals of the socialist revolution and construction along the path of profound, renewing changes in all the domains of the economic and social life. Under the leadership of the party the people have achieved important successes in developing and modernizing industry, agriculture, science and culture as well as in improving the people's material and spritual welfare. The People's China achievements in building the new system and its active contribution to strengthening the might and prestige of socialism in the world, of peace, security and international collaboration.

The Communists, the Romanian people appreciate highly the relations of tight freindship, solidarity and collaboration between the RCP and the CPC, between our peoples and countries, that have grown constantly in years, on the lasting foundation of mutual esteem and respect, of the principles of national independence and sovereignty, fully equal rights, noninterference in the domestic affairs and comradely mutual heip. The RCP and the Romanian people will do everything so that in tight collaboration with the CPC and the Chinese people they may provide an ever stronger development, in all the planes, to the traditional friendly relations, to the fruitful Romanian and Chinese peoples, of the general cause of socialism and peace.

On the day of the glorious anniversary, dear comrades, we wish you, the Communists and fraternal Chinese people, new ever greater successes in materializing the programmes for economic and social development as established by the 12th congress and the national conference of the party, and in all the work of building the country in a socialist way, in the struggle for progress and peace in the world.

[Text] Bucharest, AGERPRES 29/6/1986 -- Turgut Ozal, prime minister of the Republic of Turkey, arrived in Bucharest on an official visit to Romania, on June 29, as guest of Romanian Prime Minister Constantin Dascalescu.

The Turkish prime minister was welcomed by Constantin Dascalescu. Gheorghe Oprea, first deputy prime minister, Gheorghe Petrescu, deputy prime minister and other members of the cabinet were present. Romania's ambassador in Ankara and Turkey's ambassador in Bucharest attended.

Talks With Dascalescu

AU301802 Bucharest AGERPRES in English 1719 GMT 30 Jun 86

[Text] Bucharest, AGERPRES 30/6/1986 -- Official talks started in Bucharest on Monday, June 30, between the prime minister of the Socialist Republic of Romania, Constantin Dascalescu, and the prime minister of the Republic of Turkey, Turgut Ozal.

The two premiers made an in-depth assessment of the current stage of bilateral ties, on an economic plane, more particuarly, as well as of the possibilities to expand them, in keeping with the decisions made during the meetings and with the understandings between Presidents Nicolae Ceausescu and Kenan Evren.

During the talks, both sides showed satisfaction at the positive course of Romanian-Turkish relations in areas of major significance for the two countries' progress. Stress was laid on the fact that the possibilities afforded by the Romanian and Turkish economies, the advantages deriving from their geographical proximity allowed of more powerfully expanding economic and technical-scientific collaboration and cooperation, of diversifying and substantially increasing goods exchanges on mutually profitable bases, in accordance with the two countries' development programmes.

In that respect, new ways and means were examined for the expansion of long-term economic and industrial cooperation, and production specialization, both in the areas where experience has been acquired in bilateral cooperation and in other spheres of activity. Measures were covenanted for the building, in Turkey, of new projects in the petrochemical, energy, mining, metallurgical, transport, geological explorations and other areas of joint interest, with Romanian support and technical assistance. Emphasis was also placed on the two countries' interest in carrying out cooperation ventures in third markets, both in production and in the marketing of products.

During the talks, which proceeded in a constructive spirit, of esteem and understanding, the two prime ministers exchanged views on current problems of the international life.

Received by Ceausescu

AU301940 Bucharest AGERPRES in English 1844 GMT 30 Jun 86

[Text] Bucharest, AGERPRES 30/06/1986 -- Monday, June 30, President Nicolae Ceausescu of Romania received Turgut Ozal, prime minster of the Republic of Turkey, who pays an official visit to Romania. The interview was attended by Constantin Dascalescu, Romanian prime minister.

During the talk, emphasis was placed on the steadily ascending course of the friendly and cooperative ties between Romania and Turkey, which grow in the spirit of the understandings convenanted during the summit dialogue in Bucharest and Ankara. An assessment was made of the results scored in diversifying commercial exchanges and expanding economic cooperation, in third markets included, in jointly building major economic units, and of the positive experience acquired on that occasion, as well as of the broad prospects of such achievements in future.

Premises were shown to exist for further boosting Romanian-Turkish collaboration on a political, economic, technical-scientific and other planes of joint interest, based on the principles of national independence and sovereignty, non-interference in internal affairs, full equality of rights and mutual advantage, to the benefit of both countries and people's of the cause of peace, security, cooperation and understanding in the Balkans, in Europe and in the world. Aspects of the international political life were also approached.

President Nicolae Ceausescu showed that, under the current circumstances, when the international situation is still extremely serious, all states, whatever their social system, should closely cooperate and take resolute action to check the dangerous course of events towards confrontation and war, to assert the policy of detente, understanding and coolaboration among nations. Stress was laid on the need to do everything for the cessation of the arms race and the achievement of a general disarmament programme, with nuclear disarmament as its centrepiece, which should also cover all conventional weapons, as well as arms and troops and military expenses reductions, for the building of a world free of arms and wars, a world of peace and understanding among peoples.

During the talk, emphasis was placed on the significance of strengthening collaboration, friendship and good neighbourliness among the Balkan states, in the interest of the peoples of the area, of the cause of peace, security and cooperation. In context, President Nicolae Ceausescu underscored the need to reach an agreement on the transformation of the Balkans into a nuclear- and chemical-weapon-free zone, without foreign military bases. The Romanian head of state highlighted the importance of stepping up efforts for the settlement of all inter-state litigious issues only by peaceful means, politically, by way of negotiations. It was pointed out that action should be taken so that the Stockholm conference should end with the best possible results.

In connection with the world economic situation, the significance was underscored of a global and equitable resolution of the underdevelopment-related problems, of the inordinately high foreign debt that burdens the poor countries, the bridging of the gap between developed and developing countries and the establishment of a new international economic order.

During the interview with two countries' resolve was expressed to cooperate more actively in the international arena, in the struggle for the resolution of the major problems that confront mankind, for the building of a better and more just world on the plant.

Monday, June 30, the prime minister of the Turkish Republic, Turgut Ozal visited the heavy machinery manufacturing enterprise of Bucharest, a representative unit of the Romanian machine-building industry. During the visit the guest was accompanied by Ioan Avram, minister of electric power, chairman for Romania in the Joint Governmental Commission on Economic Cooperation between Romania and Turkey. Other Turkish officials participated, too.

The visit gave the guest a chance to get in touch with the varied range of power-generating equipment a highly technological and complex products. The visit also revealed opportunities for an expansion of the collaboration between the two countries in these sectors where Romania has a rich experience. At the conclusion of the visit, while signing the visitors' book, the Turkish guest said he was impressed with Romania's achievements in the field.

REPORTAGE ON SOCIOECONOMIC RELATIONS COMMISSION

26 June Session

LD271052 Belgrade TANJUG Domestic Service in Serbo-Croatian 0828 GMT 26 Jun 86

["13th LCY Congress Commission for Socioeconomic Relations" -- TANJUG Headline]

[Excerpts] Belgrade 26 Jun (TANJUG) -- Responsibility, the word so frequently used at republican congresses and provincial conferences, has also attracted thegreat attention of delegates and guests participating in the work of the Commission for the Development of Self-Management and Socioeconomic Relations and Economic and Scientific-Technological Development. We have found, Radoslav Sekulic said not without certain overtones of irony, who is to blame for our economic crisis, by noting that all of us are to blame. However, not everyone, he elaborated, should be made equally responsible. He spoke with optimism about the great human and material potential available to overcome the crisis. With a million engineers and technicians, with 25,000 researchers in institutes, and with the technology which we are making little use of at present, he stressed, we could "achieve miracles." All we need are incentives just as "a machine needs power in order to operate."

Avgust Vrtar spoke about science, which is always necessary everywhere and at all times. He told delegates of the great scientific potential which the Yugoslav People's Army offers the economy. Army experts are already participating in the elaboration of 27 projects of significance for the entire country.

Dr Branislav Soskic spoke in favor of resolutely abandoning the "personal union" between the party and state organs, from the basic LC organization up to the top. To those who believe or maintain that Yugoslav society is abandoning socialism, Soskic had an answer (greeted by applause). Yes, we are abandoning socialism -- he said -- but it is that administrative-etatist socialism. He added that to achieve progress it is both essential and urgent to apply the principle of general compulsory additional employment for those waiting for jobs. At the same time this proposal, which could also be made law, should include the proviso that those who are incompetent should leave their jobs and receive financial help from the social community.

Today, 26 June, is the deadline for handing in tenders for the construction of nuclear power plants in Yugoslavia. It is the 11th hour to save the country from catastrophe, stressed Professor Dr Dragisa Ivanovic. A specialized scientific commission, comprising scientists of the highest rank, should be set up as soon as possible. It should objectively state whether we really need obsolete nuclear technology or whether we should wait for something better and safer. People who have shown to be dyed-in-the-wool buyers of such equipment should not be included in the work of this commission. There should be more specific words about this matter in congress documents and we should not hide behind generalized and vague references.

There are proposals to build nuclear power plants on the Sava River, despite international regulations. This is very dangerous because the down-stream waters of this river are used for drinking water. There is insistence on nuclear power plants as if they are water mills and not exceptionally dangerous installations.

Slobodan Ljumovic also spoke about the purchase of nuclear technology. He said this purchase could not be left to science, experts, and state organs but, in view of this being a question of strategic orientation, the people and their delegates should have their say in this.

The long-term economic stabilization program should be implemented in its entireyy and without hesitation, along with changes in the political system which should at least make its implementation possible and ensure efficiency in the decision making and activity of all organs. These are the irreplaceable demands of life and practice and of the challenge of the future, stressed Kiro Gligorov. Gligorov believes that the LCY cannot implement the established strategy of society's development if it wanders aimlessly and vacillates on the economy's fundamental issues, now here, now there, as this also introduces ideological confusion. To bypass the law of values and the laws of commodity production is, in his view, a utopian belief that it is possible, by mere revolutionary act and socialization of property, to ignore the effects of objective economic laws. The constitutional orientation toward a single Yugoslav market has also determined the frameworks of macro-economic decisions and plans which are necessary for the stable development of the economy, but this has been neglected in our country, Gligorov pointed out.

Inflation has been tolerated for a long time because it ensures social peace and continuation of the established way of life. This is a high price to pay for social peace and the LCY should come to grips with such opportunism and hesitation, Gligorov stressed.

What we need to do is to demystify pseudosocialist solidarity according to which we, by rescuing those who incur losses, are rescuing the working class and the working man. Things are actually the other way round, according to Ljubisa Igic. By taking away from those who are highly productive to give to those with poor results we are not protecting the working class but are working against its interests.

What we need is not only political differentiation but also differentiation at work, said Ali Sabani thinks. Many people use admission to LCY membership as an alibi for idleness and a destructive attitude. In this context we overlook the fact that authority is created by work and commitment and not by raising a political noise. Bureaucrats should not be allowed to talk about self-management and the lazy ones about work.

The fate of the unemployed is now in the hands of those who have jobs, and not only in Kosovo. Without their greater and better work, exports and associating processes, there can be no new jobs. Because of all this, mood has been created in the whole of the country, Mikulic stressed, that we should extricate ourselves from the crisis and that to this end concrete measures and actions should be taken without delay. The Federal Executive Council has decided to propose and take measures which would halt the negative trends in the economy and on the market and encourage production, particularly production for exports, as well as foreign exchange earnings, begin the financial consolidation of the economy and banks, stop inflation and start bringing it down, curtail all aspects of consumption and coordinate with real possibilities, exert the most necessary influence on market relations, and protect the population's standard of living.

This is the aim of the measures, Mikulic stressed, which will be proposed for adoption in June and July, while in the fall measures will be proposed which will, by proceeding from the long-term economic stabilization program, exert a substantial influence on the conditions of economic activity in 1987 and the following years in which the current medium-term plan will be implemented.

Mikulic spoke at greater length about measures planned for June and July and stressed, among other things, that under their influence the income of the economy in the first 6 months of the year would be relieved of obligations by about 1 billion dinars, while in relation to the level already achieved, inflation could drop by about 20 points. The expected positive trends, in Mikulic's conviction, will have, in addition to the economic, also a powerful psychological, moral and political significnce. The working people and citizens' self-confidence in the ability of our society to resolve -- as in the past -- the most difficult problems as well as their readiness to commit themselves to this task, will grow.

We agree to express our disatisfaction with the results achieved so far in implementing the economic stability policy, Mikulic went on. However, when it comes to practical actions and measures which should be taken to implement the policy of our future socioeconomic development, questions and dilemmas are again raised, on which clear ideopolitical stands and social orientations have already been taken. Attempts to impose models and solutions in development and economic policy, the aim of which is to preserve acquired positions, and to thrust on others particularist and group-property interests, are often concealed behind various theoretical and ideological guises. This is the reason for exclusivity and lack of readiness to coordinate one's own interests democratically with the interests of others, with joint and general social interests; this is the reason for the wide-spread phenomenon of calculating and defending, when a solution is at stake, one's own interest down to the last fraction and "to do the slaughtering elsewhere for one's own piece of meat." Such selfishness and greed, with regard to the interests of others and of society as a whole, is a reliable indicator of the crisis of consciousness and of the blindness when thinking of tomorrow and the future. Communists in responsible posts in society are also often among the exponents of such narrow-minded and egotist behavior. They are apparently greatly influenced by petty and cold-blooded planners in the state, political, and economic machine who promote their own interests.

the topical situation, Mikulic went on, also calls for a principled discussion at this congress about the type of attitude our society should have to the established policy at which we arrive by democratic means. I think we should ask ourselves whether we can tolerate -- and for how long -- everyone looking upon the adopted policy in the way he wants to, without obligation to implement it, because this in not in some narrow or individual interest.

We also have the growing phenomena of raising public polemics, only after conclusions, stances or economic policy measures have been adopted, with organs which had passed them, of negating any significance or effect of the adopted stances and measures, labelling, and of insisting on every occasion on one's own proposal, on one's own stance, on one's own assessment as the only correct and salutary one. As Mikulic stressed, labelling federal organs, for which a common denominator in the words "federal administration" has been found, has become particularly attractive; the administration is said to be the exponent of centralism and red-tape, of the distribution of privileges and money, of suppressing legitimacy, etc. In this context inaccurate information, even of the kind which represents a state secret, is being publicly bandied about.

Two very minor things are lost sight of in this context, Mikulic warned: That this is paid for by the already exhausted Yugoslav consumer and that the only sound economic orientation is to compensate it with more productive and more economical work and not at the expense of consumers on the closed market. Furthermore, is it not our duty to ask the question: How long and how intensively should we protect, in particular, one section of the economy from the foreign one and even from domestic competition, and where could this lead us to? Is it not logical to reduce the level of protection of individual products gradually from year to year and not to keep it at the level of first or second year?

Many do not want to restrict and coordinate with real opportunities and adopted policy, the general, joint and personal consumption, noneconomic and nonproduction investments, yet at the same time they expect "someone or other" to ensure both accumulation and additional money for investment -- of course, at the lowest possible interest rates and the longest possible periods of repayment, as well as above all to have the prices of products of their organizations of associated labor formed freely and, moreover, protected from foreign and domestic competition. I have not heard a single professor of economics say, nor have I read it in the economic literature, Mikulic added, that inflation can be reduced in this way; on the contrary this is the way of rushing headlong into 3-digit or 4-digit inflation, that is, into total economic failure.

I am speaking in dramatic terms not in order to frighten anyone but in order to express in this way not only my impression but also my conviction that many are still not aware of the gravity of the economic situation and in this context of the consequences of high inflation. This is the reason why they do not commit themselves to reducing it; what they do is resist measures adopted in this direction. Many have become accustomed to living with inflation, some even benefit from it, but the majority of the population which lives off its work, and society as a whole, are suffering and becoming poorer.

It is beyond dispute that there are open problems in activities outside the economy (education, health, children's protection and others). But they cannot be resolved, Mikulic stressed, by taking more and more money from the economy and thus increasing the budgetary expenditure, yet leaving untouched the existing network of institutions, all acquired rights and the private income of the population from property, production and services carried out by citizens with their private means and others. But our tax policy and system are very weak and extremely inefficient. It would be no exaggeration to say that we have many weaknesses in this sphere and that at present we cannot assess realistically how many social resources have been left and continue to be left in the pockets of individuals and how many have enriched themselves in this way. We cannot at present reliably answer why this is so -- is it a question only of influences by individuals who in this way protect their own personal interests, is it a question of the failure of organization and cadres of administration, is it a question of corruption or perhaps, of a broadly deformed consciousness that everything which is personal and private is sacred and untouchable, while that which is social is "free for the taking." How else can one explain the fact that when questions are raised about the need to tax people's profits, prevent illicit activities in the transactions of money and property, evasions to declare profits and such like -- immediately negative consequences which could arise because of that are pointed out while damaging economic, social, and political consequences which we have been suffering from for years are ignored.

Regardless of what is at stake we must ask ourselves: Why have we not made even a small step in implementing the long-term stabilization program in the sphere of tax policy and tax systems? We can no longer delay the answer to this question. With regard to our standing still for such a long time on this issue, it is our duty to establish whether -- as the popular saying goes "the devil is either in the ox in front or in the back wheel." Both have to be put right or changed, Mikulic stated categorically. It is quite certain that it is necessary to protect, with appropriate regulations, the income of the economy from exaggerated appropriation in order to finance general social and joint needs as well as from non-self-managing "associating processes" or joint consumption in sociopolitical communities and at the same time ensure, with relevant tax policy and system, more resources for these needs by taxing the population's private income.

We shall not win the struggle to reduce inflation and implement other goals of the stabilization policy only by changing the economic system and policy but also by persistent involvement of all the working people and citizens in implementing the adopted policy and development strategy, Mikulic added. This, however, implies that ideological vacillations and differences of opinion on the causes of the crisis and of the way out of it, of the implementation of the long-term economic stabilization program, of the socioeconomic and political system of socialist self-management, etc., must be eliminated in the first place in the LCY.

I am convinced, Milulic said, that the time in which we were artificially divided into "reformists" and "defenders of the constitution," into "progressives" and "dogmatics" is behind us. We agree that we must resolutely demolish polycentric statism, re-examine the legislation and concrete practice of self-managing organization processes in associated labor, promote and rationalize the system of self-managing decision-making in organizations of associated labor, make the de-statization process a functon of the further development of self-management, together with simultaneously ensuring those functions of the state which are a prerequisite for stability and democratic development of our society.

Branko Mikulic said at the end of his speech that much greater ideopolitical and action unity by Communists is assumed. If we do not achieve this we shall not extricate ourselves from the crisis, while potential powder kegs in society will increase; fragmentation of Yugoslav society will continue and at the same time pressures for centralization will intensify.

Both of these could further worsen the political situation in the country and lead us into an increasingly difficult situation. As the vanguard of the working class and the leading force in society, the LCY must not permit this. History would never forgive it.

The time has come for calling to account -- by name, demanded Mira Ceran. It is said that we are all responsible for the present difficult situation. However, I do not feel responsible in any way, because I did not participate in taking important decisions. This congress has heard amazement expressed at why and how we got into difficulties, and it should be known who is responsible for the economic crisis, schooling, nuclear power stations, etc. So that this is not repeated, all those who make mistakes should be called to account by name, Mira Ceran considers.

After more than 10 hours of work, today's session of the Congress Commission for Socio-economic Relations ended late this evening. Fifty-four delegates and guests took the floor, but there are 60 delegtes who have asked to speak on economic development, science and technology in tomorrow's continuation of the work.

27 June Session

LD272327 Belgrade TANJUG Domestic Service in Serbo-Croatian 0823 GMT 27 Jun 86

[Excerpts] Belgrade, 27 Jun (TANJUG) -- Another 62 delegates and guests who asked to speak on the 3d day of the congress in the Commission for Socioeconomic Relations show that at the highest meeting of Communists efforts are made to speak in simple, but open and frank words, most often about the problems of their environment and economic activity. It is interesting that almost not a single delegate from the ranks of farmers missed the opportunity to take part in the discussion, and this morning one of the first speakers was Andra Tasic who spoke about "aged" villages in the Vranje area. Rather than being agricultural producers, he complained, young people are leaving to join the army of food consumers in towns.

Augustin Papic touched upon the "wound" called the "participation of Yugoslavia in the international division of labor," claiming that this participation is turning into its opposite. Preference in the structure of the international exchange is increasingly enjoyed by services (tourism, transportation, construction projects abroad, and so forth), while or lagging behind is particularly prominent in these areas.

We can only realize changes and emerge from the crisis with unity, both actional and ideological, Budimir Kostic said. Individuals might have become used to the crisis, but not the people who are asking for changes. Stressing that at this congress also there are instances of the lack of unity in assessments of the situation our society is in, Budimir Kostic expressed the view that reports which showed vacillations should not be adopted. The Central Committee must carry out differentiation and advocate a clear way of emerging from the present difficulties and lack of unity. I am afraid, Kostic said, that nobody in the world sees us any longer as a society in which new alternatives of social development are created, since it seems that we are not in a position to offer a perspective of development for our own country, which would be based on new, fresh ideas. There are forces for this, they only have to be given a chance, which also implies the cadre regeneration.

Vlado Klemencic devoted most of his speech to the efficiency of economic activity. The struggle to reduce production expenses and increase work production is one of the most important tasks without which there is no success in the struggle against inflation, or in increasing exports.

Gojko Stanic spoke in favor of establishing deadlines for implementing the established policy. If this is not realized within the established time limits, then the Federal Executive Council and the SFRY Assembly should be given the right and obligation to adopt emergency measures. Only thus can unnecessary delays and inefficiency in implementing the adopted policy be prevented. The Federal Executive Council should not be blamed for the fact that a part of the long-term economic stabilization program dealing with agriculture is not being implemented, Dr Petar Markovic said. The power of the Federal Executive Council depends on the strength of the ideopolitical unity of the LCY. In this aspect agriculture is left on the side, and we are suffering increasing damage.

The League of Communists must make assessments whether differences in the degree of development are decreasing, whether they are maintained at the same level, or have deepened. On the basis of this, future tasks and obligations should be established, Dr Avdul Kurpejovic stressed.

According to him differences in development have not decreased, rather they have deepened. Therefore, it is necessary to amend the part of the congress resolution that deals with stimulating the speedier development of economically insufficiently developed parts of the country by saying that further efforts will be made on decreasing differences in the degree of development in relation to the country's average, Kurpejovic suggested.

Speaking about the need to prevent degradation of human environment, Augustin Lah stressed that in Slovenia, for example, as a result of variuos types of pollution almost half of the forest areas have become diseased. This, among other things damage the timber industry and agriculture, as the erosion of soil is spreading. To a great extent environment is threatened by dangerous gases from thermoelectric power plants. Harmful effects from carbon dioxide could be prevented, according to Lah, by using it in manufacturing sulfuric acid. Acid factories should be built next to thermoelectric power plans, and we have our own technology for this. At the same time it is necessary to strengthen preventive protection.

Integration of the Yugoslav economy, Slavko Jokic said, should take place within the framework of the country's joint economic development strategy and by creating opportunities for a freer circulation of the social capital. Accumulation, as the basis of the associating process, has now been reduced to an accounting category which is beyond the workers influence and it is thus not surprising that we have investment "cemeteries" [discontinued investment projects] throughout the country.

In Dragutin Veselinovic's assessment it would be a good thing if the Federal Committee for Agriculture were to become a secretariat in view of the need to orientate agriculture toward becoming a large producer and exporter of food.

Arbitrary behavior by anyone, though as a rule it comes mostly from bureaucracy, is chiefly to blame for the party and other conclusions not being implemented. Having made this assessment, Milos Perovic made an additional one, that the workers are not to blame for the economic crisis and in particular not for failed investments which had been taken on with the techno-bureaucrats' blessing. Not happy about the scope of decisionmaking by workers extending only as far as the workers council, he demanded that a Chamber of Associated Labor be set up at the SFRY Assembly. Perovic stressed that he had no ulterior motives in demanding this and that he only wanted the worker to extend his sphere of activity right up to the top of the state machine.

Radivoje Nikcevic, in warning about poor cooperation in non-ferrous metallurgy, also mentioned the example of some Yugoslav organizations prospecting for bauxite in Africa, while it had been proved that Yugoslavia had the richest deposits of good-quality bauxite ore in Europe. Vasil Popovski sees work stoppages as a disgrace to our revolution and believes that trade unions and other political organizations did not do what was necessary to prove that the workers in our country had no one to strike against but that they did so only at the expense of their own interests. Comrade Tito also said this, Popovski recalled. And Tito's work lives on, he said (applause) because we do not forget this for a single moment at this gathering.

The congress rostrum provides the opportunity to hear those who do not often have the opportunity to be heard. It is not there for officials to be heard because we hear from them every day anyway, Ljubica Medic believes.

She devoted most of her speech to the cadre policy and said that in Yugoslavia only election results up to the municipal level were uncertain. From then on further progress or at least rotation at the horizontal level, regardless of the results of work, is on the whole ensured. Officials are mainly preoccupied with what post they will get in the next elections when they should in fact concern themselves above all with the implementation of the agreed on policy because only then can they enjoy our trust. It is, therefore, no surprise that we link the present crisis chiefly with leaders at all levels, Ljubica Medic says.

She also objected to former officials, now in retirement, severely criticizing the present state of society and demanding responsibility while not mentioning with a single word their own contribution to the crisis which has been going on for some time.

We labor under the grace illusion about the necessity for absolute social security of the employed. People firmly believe that one cannot be without a job, regardless of how the work is done. The prevailing moral is to know about one's rights while work and responsibility are rarely mentioned. This must be changed even at the risk of severe struggle, conflicts and upheavals. With these words of self-criticism by Selimir Manojlovic, the afternoon session of the Commission for Socioeconomic Relations began.

There should be sanctions for idleness, irrational management, faulty investment decisions or bad cadre policy. They would quickly force us to change our attitude. If sanctions are introduced, Selimir Manojlovic believes, there would be less opportunism, spurious solidarity, passiveness, isolationism and divisions.

If all of us are looking for help then there is nobody left to help us, Sreto Radanovic believes. The prevailing sentiment among us should be that we should help ourselves, but to by having everyone grab as much as he can but only as much as he has contributed to social wealth. Social differences are growing and the workers are the ones who suffer most because of that. The party and the congress should draw a line and show how much burden can be placed on associated labor, Sreto Radanovic stressed.

Borislav Mikelic also proposed taxing the rich strata of society, even including confiscation of property which is not the result of work or inheritance.

Most delegates speaking at the Commission for the Development of Socioeconomic Relations deal with the agricultural situation which is lagging far behind the goals set by the long-term economic stability program.

These goals could precisely be implemented, Ratko Svilar said, if we could find a way of increasing agricultural production in the individual sector. Furthermore, the number of agricultural crops we grow should be expanded, from wheat, corn, and cattle feed which we grow now, to at least 30 others. After all, this was what we used to produce a long time ago.

An interesting polemical review of some earlier speeches in the debate also took place at the session. With his slogan "Efficient workers, unite!," Avgust Majeric wanted to express the essence of the changes that should be made to the conditions of frightening inefficiency which hinders our progress. There are competent workers in all republics and provinces.

Yet, it is striking how everyone swears by commodity production yet loses sight of the fact that the market will appreciate goods made in the socially accepted amount of time. Goods and competitive production, in Majeric's words, imply, in fact, diversity, not uniformity. He described this picturesquely by saying that not everyone could expect the same personal income for 8 hours spent working because not everybody uses this time equally successfully and productively. Hence the differences in the economy working for the market.

Steven Santo referred to the frequent complaints about low personal incomes in many industries or parts of the country and sounded a warning about such incomes falling even further, because, everybody wants more but nobody mentions the source of these funds. This can only be created through work.

Vladislav Mocnik stressed that Yugoslavia needed no new nuclear power plants at least up to the year 2000 because, judging by the results of research, we have enough untapped hydroelectric potential and coal. But, these reserves are not evenly distributed throughout the republics and provinces. Coal reserves, which are practically untapped, are largest in Kosovo, but negotiations by the power industries in the republics and provinces on prospecting and use last too long. Mocnik, therefore, believes that as soon as possible agreement should be reached to ensure the use of these reserves and at the same time provide new jobs in Kosovo Province.

With regard to distribution, workers do not complain about how little they get; but about injustice, Marija Todorovic said at the end of the debate at the 13th LCY Congress Commission for Socioeconomic Relations. Over 130 delegates and guests took part in the debate in the 2 and a half days while a considerable number submitted their statements in writing.

Having been acquainted with the proposed report of its work prepared by a special working group, the commission tried in a 2-hour debate to improve the wording of this document. The proposals referred to the unity of the Yugoslav market, the role of science, relief of the economy, specific forms of achieving responsibility, and other issues. The working groups will incorporate these proposals in the text of the report tonight. Reservations voiced about the construction of nuclear power plants and the stance on criticism in the LC and society in general being specific and directed at those responsible will be given greater emphasis. The report with these supplements was unanimously accepted.

Socioeconomic Resolution

LD282236 Belgrade TANJUG Domestic Service in Serbo-Croatian 1123 GMT 28 Jun 86

["Thirteenth LCY Congress: LC Resolution on the Development of Socialist, Self-Managing Socioeconomic Relations and the Political System of Socialist Self-Managing Democracy" -- TANJUG headline]

[Text] Belgrade, 28 Jun (TANJUG) -- Our society must be open to the flow of ideas and the ceaseless transformation that leads to a greater harmony between the ideas which set it in motion and the real situation, between wishes and material possibilities. Today the most important thing is that the clear strategy of self-managing socialist development is being rapidly implemented as a vital requirement and as the practice of workers and working people, said the resolution on the development of socialist, self-managing socioeconomic relations and the political system of socialist self-managing democracy.

The worker attached greater value to one practical step in the de facto matter of self-managing control and the area of self-managing democracy and humanism in the factory, and, through the delegate system, in the whole of society, than to all, even the most beautifully composed, conclusions which repeat the need to master this control. The open problems in society, the resolution stressed, show that the LC is confronted by the situation in its ranks; by an ideopolitical unity that has been undermined; by the consciousness of its members; by its own historical responsibility for socialist self-management and the mobilization of the working class, the popular masses and all progressive people at the crossroads of further social progress and comprehensive development of Yugoslavia.

This document noted the serious material position of our economy, its liquidity problems and overindebtedness, the low efficiency of economic activity and low productivity. It is assessed that this is a consequence of many years of administrative voluntarist exhaustion [as received] and the irrational squandering of the social resources and natural wealth of the country. Hence radical changes in developmental and economic policy are being sought, and it stressed that without changes in the distribution of incomes to the benefit of the economy and the maintenance of domestic consumption within realistic limits, the revitalization of the economy, its development along modern technological and technical lines, and efficient adaption to the difficult conditions of engaging in economic activity and business operations cannot be expected.

Indeed, the priority task is the battle against inflation. This can only be won by increasing production and exports and by removing the causes of the stagnation in material development. It is only on a strengthened material basis that workers in the economy can be the real exponents of the free exchange of labor in the development of social activities and a factor in social policy as well as a factor in socioeconomic development. Decisive changes are only possible if the worker ties his social security to the results of his work, or rather to the business performance of the basic organization of associated labor. The LC must fight to enable youth to build its future so as not to deprive our society of the force which, by its nature, has the most ambitions and the greatest aspirations to self-management and creativity. A society in which young people cannot ensure any prospects for themselves has no future, the resolution stressed.

The political system must ensure the firmer integration of society, the strengthening of the democratic system of agreement-seeking and negotiating, and supporting the aspiration toward a greater mutual integration in joint ventures, joint income, and the contemporary export structure of the economy. It is not possible to get out of the existing crisis, the resolution stressed, by employing the same means and methods which led us into it. It cannot be achieved by skirting the Constitution; by disrespecting laws and not being ready to implement them consistently in practice; or by violating social norms and yardsticks in making decisions about investments, the use of accumulated funds, indebtedness abroad, and the ineffective implementation of decisions. The way out of the crisis is possible only by other means and with new political contents of sociopolitical actions and changes in the method of work of the LC and of subjective forces.

The LC cannot accept the artificial and destructive dilemma as to whether it is fighting for or against changes in the political system. The LCY has been and remains clear in its orientation that the achievements of the revolution and of socialist self-managing democracy can and must be defended by revolution alone.

This orientation can, in present conditions, only be implemented in line with the class position of the LC, by changing the relations of social production and social practice and also by normative changes -- by those which seek new solutions in the creative application and development of the basic assumptions of the Constitution. The LCY highlights this question as the basic class question of today. The greatest danger to, and enemy of, the historic process that is leading toward socialism, and thus also our self-managing society, is bureaucratization. A settling of accounts with this danger must begin in the LC itself, the resolution emphasized.

The most significant and immediate task of the LC is to develop a socioeconomic system that will ensure that workers have control over income and accumulation. Basic organizations, constituted in line with the bases of the Constitution and the law of associated labor, must be open and capable of adapting quickly to the demands of economically rational production and business operations, and to the needs of the market and the possibilities of mastering and using modern scientific and technical-technological achievements. Workers cannot win this battle to achieve this situation in the basic organizations of associated labor without the LC and the trade unions. The LC insists that, in basic organizations and in the whole system of associated labor, partial and group ownership interests that hamper or frustrate the self-managing integration of labor are overcome. This, in practical terms, is the answer to the technocratic and voluntaristic pressure directed toward the abolition of basic organizations of associated labor but also toward tendencies for basic organizations or work communities to take over the role and function of the work organization. The resolution laid particular stress on the necessity of strengthening the role of the workers council and also on worker control. The working collective has the right to independently elect its management organs, and bears the consequences of these decisions.

A common political development is particularly important for the creation and functioning of self-managing integrated entities of associated labor. Self-managing organization and integration of associated labor cannot be the result of a decree, or of political voluntarism. At the same time, enslavement to organizational models constructed in advance and any form of political interference whatsoever are unacceptable.

The system and policy of prices must proceed from economic and market criteria that will ensure that high productivity in the world economy has a positive influence on our development. Economic measures and instruments, particularly those in the domain of credit and fiscal policy, should be brought to bear on economic subjects to reduce operating costs, primarily by doing business in a more qualitative and efficient way. The social control of prices should be realized as a form of involving the self-managing organization of society [in action] which facilitates the positive operation of economic laws under conditions of an unstable market and prevents high and irrational costs of production from being easily transferred to prices.

Part of the resolution is devoted to the delegate system, whose development, it stresses, must be advocated by the LC as well. However, it added, any formalistic, bureaucratic and dogmatic insistence on solving the crisis by new regulations, and by fundamental changes in the normative organization of the political system, would only lead to its further intensification and exacerbation and to our overall disunity.

Neither can the execution of decisions be approached in the way of conventional managements and executive powers.

The principle of agreement-seeking and negotiation between the republics and the provinces in the process of decisionmaking in the federation, is an irreplaceable factor in the democratic and conscious strengthening of the cohesion and stability of our community. It best expresses the essence of the relations in the federation and the equality of the nations and nationalities, or rather, the republics and provinces.

A component of this principle is also the obligatory agreement on issues envisaged by the Constitution and on which depends the genuine equality of the nations and nationalities in disposing of income and surplus value. However, the resolution stressed, this principle must be implemented as part of the need and responsibility to achieve unity and togetherness in adopting and carrying out decisions and not in a way that would put this equality against unity. In changing agreement into veto, means of confrontation and blockade, of pressures and deals, deprives this principle of its democratic character and paves the way for political arbitration. For our community to function efficiently and to be able to adopt on time decisions on the most vital issues of the country, the LC must be the most active ideopolitical force in this process.

The development of relations in the federation is based on 1974 constitutional solutions which, as regards the achievement of national freedoms and equality of the nations and nationalities, represent a confirmation of the principles of the Anti-Fascist Council of the National Liberation of Yugoslavia. The task of the communists as a whole and of the leaderships of the republican and provincial organizations of the LC is to fight successfully for the consistent implementation of the jointly agreed and determined policy, federal laws and regulations. To a large extent, the country's unity and a more harmonious and more efficient functioning of the Federation depends on this. Republican and provincial organs are responsible for the implementation of the agreed policy and federal regulations and their attitude to them should be the same as that to their own acts. The entire delegate mechanism, and in particular the delegations of the republics and provinces in the Chamber of the Republics and Provinces and those delegates in the Federal Chamber, should be made to participate in carrying out the joint policy.

The resolution pointed out in particular that the functions of the Federation could not be effectively and efficiently carried out if the republics and provinces did not bear their part of the responsibility for cadre policy in federal organs and organizations. Without the active role and unity of views in LC action as a whole, and particularly in the LCY Central Committee, the concept of the Federation laid down by the Constitution cannot be successfully realized. By effective activity and influence on the entire decisionmaking process in the Federation, the LCY Central Committee should, more than previously, manifest the initiative to build uniform ideopolitical stances that will direct on time the LC as a whole, and its activity in the SAWPY and in the delegate system, to resolving essential issues of the development and functioning of the Yugoslav community, the Resolution on the Development of Socialist, Self-Managing Socioeconomic Relations and the Political System of Socialist Self-Managing Democracy stressed.

RESOLUTION ISSUED ON ECONOMIC DEVELOPMENT

LD282255 Belgrade TANJUG Domestic Service in Serbo-Croatian 1131 GMT 28 Jun 86

["Resolution on Economic, Scientific and Technological Development" -- TANJUG headline]

[Text] Belgrade, 28 Jun (TANJUG) -- Reduction of the inflation rate, financial consolidation and unburdening of the economy are three priority tasks laid down in the Resolution of the 13th LCY Congress on the tasks of the League of Communists in economic, scientific and technological development.

The period ahead should, as the document states, be a period of internal economic consolidation and normalization of the country's foreign liquidity, but also a time of major socioeconomic changes and of scientific and technological advances toward realizing the long-term program of economic stabilization. This requires that communists and other social factors should be committed to ensuring that social resources are employed in the most rational manner and, in programs which can give the most rapid effect. At the same time, the mutually-linked criteria must be respected: creation of greater income and accumulation in relation to the invested labor and means, achievement of greater exports, and currency inflow and involvement of our economy in the world technological process. Workers should speed up the self-managing concentration of social accumulation and increase its rational usage. It is therefore essential, the resolution underlines, to guarantee stable conditions for economic activity, unburden the economy's revenue and accomplish a destatization of decision-making on the means of expanded reproduction.

It is of special importance for overcoming economic difficulties and halting stagnation that full support be given to economic and systemic solutions and measures by those organizations of associated labor which are the most capable in economic and developmental terms.

In order to create the most favorable possible conditions for further socioecnomic development, communists must above all wage a struggle to ensure that relations in acquisition and distribution of income and division of funds for personal incomes are settled in such a manner as to satisfy the demands of efficient work and management, ensure the required relation in allocating income for consumption and accumulation, and achieve equality of workers in associated labor in the unified Yugoslav market. the most important thing in this, the resolution states, is that only labor and the results of labor determine the material and social position of the worker.

It is also up to the workers to struggle to ensure that all those responsible for making decisions and all beneficiaries of social resources adopt programs toward unburdening the economy, including reduction of credit and other forms of indebtedness on the part of associated labor. The implementation of these programs would achieve a redistribution of income in favor of organizations of associated labor in the economy. One should already expect this year, the document states, a growth in the degree of self-financing reproduction which, by its constant increase, will represent a powerful material basis for association of labor and means in the unified Yugoslav economic area.

The reform of financing joint and general consumption should be oriented in this direction, too, in order that this could be brought into accord with the requirements of the time and the real possibilities of the economy. Radical changes are also required in the taxation system and policy.

The aim of these changes is to increase the proportion of direct taxes at the expense of indirect taxes, to reduce the taxation burden on the economy by increasing taxation on income from property and other sources of the population's income. The document also advocates that bases and criteria should be laid down to identify the share of income realized in exceptional favorable conditions, and to direct this toward development.

The document goes on to state that economic policy, its instruments, and the measures by which the general conditions for economic activity are determined, must be in accord with the long and medium-term goals. It is particularly important that economic policy measures should be worked out in an integrated way, should be adopted in a timely manner, should be mutually synchronized, and should nip in the bud and close the channels for inflationary methods of conducting economic activity.

The LC's attention must be focussed upon strengthening the position of our economy in international economic relations, by means of increasing exports of goods and services, rational imports, and successful involvement of our economy in the international division of labor. The key factors of exports should be the organizations of associated labor which are linked by joint programs for developing output for export. The formation of a rational export structure, the resolution states, demands specialization and division of labor, linkage of organizations of associated labor on a Yugoslav scale and also with foreign partners.

A vital condition for breathing fresh life into production and exports is more rapid and more rational substitution of imports, as well as increasing imports of things we do not have or do not have enough of for export-oriented production. Only by increasing the net currency inflow is it possible to create conditions for importing what is necessary for new production, the document underlines.

Creation of conditions for normalization of the country's foreign liquidity is considered to be one of the most vital tasks for communists in the period ahead. It is emphasized that the most important thing is that the country's relative indebtedness should be reduced by constant increases in exports and currency inflow. Alongside regular repayment of foreign loans and credits, the share of accumulation based on foreign loans must be guaranteed, in order that funds are directed in accordance with stricter economic criteria.

A real dinar exchange-rate policy is exceptionally important for the realization of the export orientation of our economy, as one of the basic instruments for establishing real economic criteria in relations with foreign countries. There is clear support for establishing unhampered circulation of foreign currency by means of an organized currency market, as well as for the dinar to be the sole means of payment in the country and a real measure of value.

In the section of the resolution which deals with instilling dynamism into economic growth and with structural changes, emphasis is laid on the orientation toward production problems which will guarantee greater exports, income and accumulation. In addition to the development of the propulsive industry [propulzinvna industrija], stress is placed upon the need for more rapid development of other production and service activities, especially tourism, for support for the economy and increased food production. The further development of power engineering and more intensive use of our own possibilities in this sphere are put forward intensive use of our own possibilities in this sphere are put forward as a vital precondition for the development of these as well as other economic areas.

Acceleration of scientific and technological progress and increasingly wide and effective use of this in social practice is of exceptional importance to the development and transformation of the economy and of society, for the realization of the economic stabliization policy, and for securing the effectiveness of the system of socialist self-management. Hence, the advocation of more rapid development of science, technology, innovativeness and education. All plans for development, the resolution underlines, must be founded upon application of the modern achievements of science and technology, as vital factors of reproduction. In addition to advocating using "our own brains", more rational transfer and more creative use of imported technology is sought, as well as unified criteria for selecting and utilizing this. Where importation of nuclear technology is concerned, the criteria and opinions of scientific workers must be respected, but so must those of the broadest circle of working people and citizens.

As a long-term task, attaining more rapid development of the underdeveloped republics and the rapidest possible development of the Socialist Autonomous Province of Kosovo should be founded predominately upon self-management association of labor and means on the basis of income, and upon the joint interest of organizations of associated labor and all of all the republics and provinces. The development of the SAP of Kosovo, the resolution underlines, demands the greatest attention and support of the entire Yugoslav community.

Halting the growth of unemployment and creating conditions to reduce the number of unemployed is ranked among the chief goals of socioeconomic development in the period ahead. It is therefore demanded that in all environments specific programs for more rapid and productive employment should be drawn up and consistently implemented. In employment, policy priority must be given to more rapid and effective employment of qualified and educated cadres, especially young people, jobless workers, women, and also those who have no opportunity to earn their living in agriculture or outside the social sector. Employment of those starting their first job, the resolution states, must be under much stricter legal, political, and social control. Incidences of keeping young people and women from jobs in certain environments, and various abuses and manipulations of competition by the institution must be vigorously prevented through political and other measures.

Tasks in the sphere of social policy are also laid down in the resolution. In addition to advocating consistent distribution in accordance with labor and the results of labor, particular attention is given to relations in the sphere of housing, protection of the standard of living, as well as removing social differences which are not based upon labor. The further development of health care, education, child care, and social protection are laid down in the Resolution on Economic and Scientific and Technological Development as serving to strengthen the productive forces of society, raise labor productivity, and more fully satisfy social needs.

HASANI SPEAKS ON KOSOVO AT 13TH LCY CONGRESS

AU011401 Pristina RILINDJA in Albanian 27 Jun 86 p 5

[Report on speech by SFRY President Sinan Hasani to the Commission for the Ideopolitical Activity and the Statute of the 13th LCY Congress in Belgrade on 26 June: "Sinan Hasani: National Equality -- A Class Interest of Everybody"]

[Text] I would like to recall the historical fact that the new Yugoslavia was born of the War of National Liberation and the socialist revolution and has built and created its overall social character on the foundations of working class interests and the equality of peoples and nationalities.

It can therefore be said that the progress of the new Yugoslavia to the present day has mainly and frequently depended on a correct understanding and application of the class component in its construction and general development, said Sinan Hasani at the opening of his speech in the third commission.

He spoke about this class definition and about behavior in the LC as a necessity and a prospect. Sinan Hasani said that the workers and the working class, in relation to the principled guidelines of the LC, are not only a basic driving force of the entire Yugoslav social reproduction, but are also a revolutionary force which opens new horizons, horizons which exceed all others in their farsightedness. Communists and workers should not only not ignore, but all costs must devote attention and care to the direct interests of all sections of the community. They should also not support and represent every partial and transitory interest, without taking into consideration what meaning these interests might possess for the whole of society, Sinan Hasani then added.

Without Idealism

It is irresponsible behavior to have social and general consumption above the framework of social regulations and outside the framework of earned income. The often advanced view that productive labor should be remunerated in the most adequate way has not received the recognition it deserves, with serious consequences in production and in attitude of young people. Sinan Hasani went on to say that it is clear to every patriot that Yugoslavia as such can only exist as a socialist self-managing community of equal peoples and nationalities, of socialist republics and their autonomous provinces. Disintegrative tendencies which have enveloped almost every field and area, are opposed to the interests of the working class, to whom every form of barrier, separatism, and unitarism is alien. There is no need to idealize the interests of working class unity, but it is more than certain that the aims of the working class are the strongest basis for sociial integration. Furthermore, it must be added that the interests of self-managing workers relate in the same way to every area and to the nation as a whole.

The Albanians have Linked Their Destiny to This Yugoslavia.

As is well-known, national equality among us has been won through and during the single and joint national liberation struggle and through our revolution. During the decades of socialist development and construction, brotherhood and unity among all our peoples and nationalities throughut our country has been developed and deepened continually. This has been and remains a guarantee of all our victories. But what is happening today? Various nationalists and other enemies desire to turn our struggle for national equality to their own dark ends, as they attempt to present themselves as guardians of their own peoples, and even of the working class itself. Such attempts have been noticed throughout the country but they emerged, in brutal illustration, in the counterrevolutionary events in Kosovo in 1981. If more attention and care had been shown to the class breadth of our society, I believe that the enemy would not have been able to achieve what he did. The struggle of the LC and other subjective socialist forces against Albanian nationalism and irredentism should assume to a greater extent the character of a class struggle. It must be explained to the working people of Kosovo, and to the Albanians in particular, that a nationalist monster has risen up against them, a dark alliance of overthrown clases and of so-called Enverist Maxism-Leninism. Their goal is the destruction of socialist Yugoslavia, in which they have become their own masters, have achieved unprecedented results in their development, in peace, freedom, and equality. The Socialist Autonomous Province of Kosovo is the common achievement of all those who live and work there.

As an undeveloped part of the SR of Serbia and the SFRY it belongs to them, I am thinking of those who live in Kosovo. [sentence as published] Its blossoming requires the joint efforts of Albanians, Serbs, Montenegrins, Turks, Romany Gypsies, villagers and workers. In this concrete instance, there can be no villagers and workers. In this concrete instance, there can be no flinching on the part of the true Albanian worker, villager, or intellectual in Yugoslavia before that part of his people which uncritically glorifies everything that is its own, and appeals to brotherly blood ties and a sacred tongue and encourages national self-satisfaction, hatred of others, bureaucracy, arbitrariness, arrogance, etc.

Nostalgia for Kosovo.

In opposition to the real truth, and to the feelings of the Serb and Montenegrin people in Kosovo and beyond, nourished with an ideology alien to the working class, and in a fashion excessively laden with nostalgia in Kosovo intertwined with the myth of Kosovo, and linking the destiny of Kosovo exclusively with the Serbs and Montenegrins, among other things, attempts are being made to sow suspicion of all Albanians, as if they were not properly trustworthy elements, loyal to Yugoslavia. Through the revolution and the socialist construction of the peoples and nationalities of Kosovo on a working class basis, the basis of their own complete quality has been laid, the basis of a single common front for the present and the future. They have sealed their destiny once and for all through fraternal coexistence. It is, of course, quite natural in this common life that Albanian and Serb and Montenegrin working men should be friends and comrades and neighbors, for they fought together during the National Liberation War and built the socialist community which has created socialist and self-managing and nonaligned Yugoslavia. So their common life is a historical and class necessity, just as Yugoslavia is a historical necessity for all its working people and peoples and nationalities.

Resolution On Albanian 'Interference'

LD281519 Belgrade TANJUG Domestic Service in Serbo-Croatian 0937 GMT 28 Jun 86

["Resolution on the LCY Tasks in the Implementation of the Platform on Kosovo -- TANJUG headline; ALL QUOTATION MARKS AS RECEIVED]

[Text] Belgrade, 28 Jun (TANJUG) -- Significant results were achieved in the period between the 12th and the 13th congresses in suppressing overt activity of Albanian nationalism and in consolidating organized socialist forces. In addition, a process began of reciprocal economic openings and links between the associated labor in Kosovo and the country as a whole, especially in the SR of Serbia. However, the 13th Congress assesses that the situation brought about by the counterrevolutionary events in Kosovo continues to represent one of the most difficult political, moral and socioeconomic problems in the Yugoslav community.

On the basis of this statement, it is stressed in the resolution on the tasks of the LC for further implementation of the political platform for LCY action in the development of socialist self-management, brotherhood, unity and togetherness in Kosovo that some important tasks from the platform on Kosovo and their elaboration into conclusions are not being carried out by the two presidiums with the necessary decisiveness and consistency. Irredentists, although they have been dealt severe blows, have not been smashed but are continuing to organize themselves illegally and to operate in a counterrevolutionary way. LCY and society's policy on the most rapid development of Kosovo is being implemented sluggishly and incompletely. This is exacerbating the otherwise difficult problems in the economic structure and in the field of employment.

The emigration of Serbs and Montenegrins under duress is continuing and represents one of the most difficult political problems in Kosovo and throughout the country.

After these general introductory assessments the authors of the draft resolution speak very concretely about the further tasks of the LC in this province. "The LCY struggle for the further development of socialist self-management, national equality, unity and togetherness in Kosovo must be carried out through a unified action of the LC and of all organized socialist forces in Yugoslavia, in which context the biggest commitments and responsibilities devolve on the communists in Serbia and Kosovo."

The development of the Socialist Autonomous Province of Kosovo, it goes on to stress, merits the special attention and maximum support of the entire Yugoslav community, not only to arrest its relative stagnation but also the start amending the difference between the general level of Kosovo development and that in other areas of the country. This obliges the communists in the province to make maximum efforts to use more rationally production resources and the means of production already available in Kosovo; and also the significant resources which our entire social community is setting aside for the development of Kosovo.

Kosovo's greater reliance on its own resources will not disminish the need for material support from the resources of the fund of the federation and for additional monies from the federal budget, and also for resources from other sources. The overall development in Kosovo should be based primarily on the pooling of labor and resources along self-management lines. The stance implicit in the resolution is that in Kosovo special attention must be paid to the development of the processing industry, agriculture, craft industries, the service industry and tourism; that is to say, the branches which make the biggest contribution to more speedily solving the unemployment problem.

The major part of this congress document is devoted to the tasks of the LC in the development of intranational relations and brotherhood, unity and togetherness in this province. The League of Communists stresses that overcoming nationalistic passions and prejudices, mistrust and intolerance which lead to intensified emigration under duress by Serbs and Montenegrins, is indispensable. In this context the greatest responsiblity for the state of intranational relations in Kosovo is borne by members of the Albanian nationality who constitute the majority in Kosovo. Of course, members of other nations and nationalities also bear their share of responsibility.

"Emigration of Serbs and Montenegrins under duress, in its political sense, is directed at the gradual implementation of the strategic objectives of the enemy expressed in the demands like "an ethnically pure Kosovo," "Kosovo a republic" and "greater-Albania."

Consistent implementation of legal, political and other measures which prevents emigration under duress is one of the basic commitment of LC organs and of communists in state organs and institutions...Communists are duty-bound to fight for economic, political, legal and other measures which will more efficiently foil the implementation of the aim pursued by Albanian nationalists to "clear" Kosovo of Serbs, Montenegrins and members of other nations and nationalities."

The resolution stresses in particular the need to intensify the struggle against Serb, Montenegrin, Macedonian and other nationalists who are trying to identify Albanian nationalists and irredentists with the Albanian nation.

In conclusion the document stresses that despite the well-known principles implicit in our foreign policy, the People's Socialist Republic of Albania continues to interfere in Yugoslavia's internal affairs. "Irredentist and nationalistic indoctrination of our citizens, which is inspired and organized from the People's Socialist Republic of Albania represents a serious threat to peace and security in the Balkans and beyond. Propaganda and subversive activity carried out on this basis from the People's Socialist Republic of Albania represents flagrant interference in our internal relations and poses a threat to the territorial integrity of our country, which will continue to be met by a resolute condemnation by all communists, people, nations and nationalities of Yugoslavia." Nevertheless, the resolution notes in conclusion, despite everyting, Yugoslavia will continue its policy of good-neighborly relations.

NEW CC TO HANDLE TITO WIDOW'S 'COMPLAINT'

LD281301 Belgrade TANJUG in English 1157 GMT 28 Jun 86

[Text] Belgrade, June 28 (TANJUG) -- The 13th League of Communists of Yugoslavia Congress, which closes later today after four days of work, has received 1,112 complaints and proposals from groups and individuals.

The majority relate to dissatisfaction with bureaucratism and various injustices. There are some, however, which refer to personal problems.

Among the latter is a complaint sent by Josip Broz Tito's widow, Jovanka. The content of her letter to the congress was not revealed since none of the complaints were read out at the plenary session.

At the proposal of the Complaints and Proposals Commission, the congress took the stand that Jovanka Broz's complaint was of such a nature that the new Central Committee should be engaged with in the same way.

The commission also said that solutions to most of the other proposals and complaints should be sought in republican, provincial or communal LC organizations.

BULGARIAN-USSR AGRICULTURAL AGREEMENTS SIGNED

AU011247 Sofia BTA in English 1214 GMT 1 Jun 86

[Text] Sofia, June 1 (BTA) -- Bulgaria and the U.S.S.R. are promoting successfully their cooperation in agriculture and the food industry. It helps meet important targets on the long-term programme for economic and techno-scientific cooperation between the two countries up to the year 2000. This assessment is contained in the 1986 cooperation protocol signed here today between the National Agro-Industrial Union, the Food Industry Association, and the Agricultural Academy, on the one side, and the U.S.S.R. State Agro-Industrial Committee and the All-Union Academy of Agricultural Sciences, on the other.

Both the document and the talks held here centred on the utilization of the two countries' experience in improving the structure and the management of agro-industrial complexes. Emphasis is laid on the important role of the Comprehensive Programme for Scientific and Technological Progress of the C.M.E.A. Member countries up to the Year 2000, and above all of the tasks set in the area of biotechnologies, agricultural electronization and setting up joint research teams and science-and-industry associations. An agreement was reached on signing a branch programme on the promotion of economic and techno-scientific cooperation between the two countries in the field of agro-industrial complexes up to the year 2000.

Two agreements were also signed. The agreement on techno-scientific cooperation in the 1986-1990 period between the National Agro-Industrial Union and the Food Industry Association, on the one side, and the U.S.S.R. Agro-Industrial Committee, on the other, envisages the carrying out of joint research and development and the formation of Bulgaro-Soviet research teams. The other agreement provides for the establishment of a joint research laboratory in dairy cattle breeding.

Today Mr Ognyan Doynov, deputy premier and chairman of the Economic Council, and Mr. Andrew Lukanov, first deuty premier, received Minister Aleksandr Iyevlev, first deputy chairman of the U.S.S.R. State Agro-Industrial Committee.

RUMORS OF IMPENDING PRICE INCREASES DENIED

AU021819 Sofia Domestic Service in Bulgarian 1730 GMT 2 Jul 86

[Text] In recent days, in Sofia and other cities people have been speaking about a forthcoming increase in the prices of some foodstuffs. In line with this, a BTA representative approached Petur Balevski, chairman of the Committee on Prices at the Council of Ministers, who said: I would like to state categoriclly that no correction in the retail prices of any foodstuffs is being discussed or prepared; no such correction is forthcoming. This applies to foodstuffs and other goods. It is true tht the credulity of some citizens has prompted them to purchase unusually large quantities of sugar, oil, flour, cigarettes, and so forth. However, the trade network has a sufficient quality of goods. There are not enough goods at certain places, this is merely the result of organizational weaknesses. Our economy is developing at a stable pace and has enough reserves of consumer goods, something which guarantees the regular supply of the population.

FURTHER ON VISIT BY GREEK INTERIOR MINISTER

Talks With Strougal Reviewed

LD261801 Prague CTK in English 1140 GMT 26 Jun 86

[Text] Prague, June 26 (CTK) — Greek Interior Minister Agamemnon Koutsogiorges has said that this talks with Czechoslovak officials confirmed the interest of both sides in strengthening cooperation and expanding their relations based on mutual advantage and respect.

In an interview for CTK at the close of his four-day visit to Czechoslovakia, Minister Koutsogiorges said his meeting with Federal Premier Lubomir Strougal had indicated the great importance for the development of bilateral relations of Greek Premier Andreas Papandreou's visit to Czechoslovakia two years ago. He stressed that the two countries are agreed on the effort to halt the arms race, they are against the arms race being moved into outer space and support the establishment of zones free of nuclear and chemical weapons in Europe.

Referring to bilateral relations, the Greek minister stressed the need for a more effective use of possibilities existing in trade and in cooperation in the economy, science, technology and culture.

The Greek government seeks to introduce the most effective possible system of local administration in the country, the Greek minister said and spoke with appreciation of Czechoslovakia's system of local administration. He said he was convinced that the reciprocal visits by the Czech and Slovak interior ministers to Greece, planned for the nearest future, will help enhance Czechoslovak-Greek cooperation.

Bilak Receives Official

LD261759 Prague CTK in English 1227 GMT 26 Jun 86

[Text] Prague, June 26 (CTK) -- Greek Interior Minister and member of the Panhellenic Socialist Union Central Committee Agamemnon Koutsogiorges was received by Czechoslovak Communist Party Presidium member and Central Committee Secretary Vasil Bilak here today.

The two officials stated that the good cooperation between the two parties helps promote relations between the two countries and their nations, and is a contribution towards their joint struggle for strengthening world peace, and called for a further expansion of relations between the two parties.

Vasil Bilak and Agamemnon Koutsogiorges stressed their countries' endeavour to halt the arms, and voiced support for efforts aimed at disarmament, the liquidation of nuclear weapons and at preventing the militarization of space.

The two representatives said that respect for the independent development of the individual countries helps to strengthen European and world security and promote mutually beneficial cooperation.

Visit Ends; Minister Departs

LD261820 Prague CTK in English 1509 GMT 26 Jun 86

The Greek minister came to Czechoslovakia on June 23 to learn about the structure, organization and management of state administration in this country. He was received during his stay by Federal Premier Lubomir Strougal, Czechoslovak Communist Party Presidium member and Central Committee Secretary Vasil Bilak and other officials.

FOREIGN TRADE MINISTER URBAN SPEAKS ON EXPORTS

LD261317 Prague CTK in English 1530 GMT 25 Jun 86

[Text] Prague, June 26 (CTK) -- Czechoslovakia's exports to socialist countries will rise by 22-25 per cent and to non-socialist countries by 15 per cent by the year 1990, Czechoslovak Foreign Trade Minister Bohumil Urban stated here today.

Evaluating the prospects of Czechoslovakia's economic cooperation with socialist and non-socialist countries in the 8th Five-Year-Plan period (1986-90) at the plenary session of the Czechoslovak Chamber of Commerce and Industry, the minister pointed out that goods exchange with socialist countries accounts for about three-quarters of the country's foreign trade. In the past five years it increased by more than 50 per cent - with the Soviet Union by 87 per cent, with Bulgaria by 97 per cent, with Cuba by 100 per cent and with China by 150 per cent.

The growth rate of Czechoslovakia's exports to socialist countries in the current five-year-plan period will be about half that of the previous five years. In the past, the growth of goods exchange was ensured mainly by raw materials and semifinished products but this sphere is now practically exhausted. If Czechoslovakia wants to ensure further raw material resources for the future, it must actively participate in the construction of new production and processing facilities, Bohumil Urban said.

An example of this is Czechoslovakia's participation in the construction of the Yamburg gas pipe-line, and in the use of new iron ore deposits in Krivoy Rog in the Soviet Union. Czechoslovakia has also provided means for the continuation of sulphur production in Poland with an aim to have its supplies secured for the long term. It participates in the development of nickel and cobalt deposits in Cuba, in the production of mineral raw materials in Mongolia, and cultivation of new rubber and coffee plantations in Vietnam. Czechoslovakia has also delivered equipment for two power-plants to China in exchange for raw materials, food and consumer goods.

The further development of goods exchange with socialist countries can be ensured only by a substantially wider cooperation and specialization, particularly in engineering, electrical engineering and in the chemical industry, Bohumil Urban stressed.

He added that Czechoslovakia will therefore support establishment of direct contacts between production enterprises of the Council for Mutual Economic Assistance (CMEA) countries.

Czechoslovakia's exports to non-socialist countries rose by 13 per cent in the past five years -- to advanced capitalist states it was by 8 per cent and to the developing countries by 26 per cent, Bohumil Urban said.

The structure of Czechoslovak exports to non-socialist states is to be substantially changed in the current five-year plan period with the share of metallurgical products, rolled materials, fuels and raw wood strongly decreasing already this year. High demands are therefore placed on engineering whose production must substitute for these items. This year's plan of exports to non-socialist countries set 6 per cent higher tasks for engineering and 10-per cent higher tasks for electrical engineering compared with last year.

The minister stated that Czechoslovakia seeks a long-term and more conceptual approach in exports of machinery and equipment to capitalist countries. In this connection he mentioned the government's decision of last year which makes it possible for Czechoslovak enterprises to start joint ventures with foreign firms from socialist as well as non-socialist states. The share of foreign capital must not exceed 49 per cent. Profits can be transferred abroad, the foreign partner is expected to participate in management, and also envisaged are free prices -- all this is the framework of Czechoslovak rules and specially adjusted permits.

Bohumil Urban went on to say that Czechoslovakia intends to expand mutually advantageous forms of cooperation with the development countries, supply them with complete plants and equipment including technical aid in exchange for their home products.

The plenary session of the Czechoslovak Chamber of Commerce and Industry discussed the results of its activity in the past five years and the activity envisaged for the 8th Five-Year-Plan period. It elected Jaroslav Jakubec, in the past 12 years deputy foreign minister and head of the section of trade with non-socialist countries, its new president.

CONFERENCE HELD ON FUEL, ENERGY DEVELOPMENT

LD011318 Prague Domestic Service in Czech 0900 GMT 1 Jul 86

[Summary] Today, the leadership of the Federal Ministry of Fuel and Energy is discussing the long-range outlook for the development of the sector of fuel and energy at a conference held in Ostrava - Radvanice, attended by a whole number of economists from the sector and management officials from the Czechoslovak Academy of Sciences and scientific institutions. Vlastimil Ehrenberger, federal minister of fuel and energy, in opening the conference, stressed that the aim is to reappraise the attitude toward the concentration of the research and development base, as well as on a higher degree of utilization of more flexible organizational structures of the sector. Although the sector has fulfilled the tasks set for the first half of the year in terms of supply of energy, there exist reserves heat and coal, tapping of which must be tackled immediately. Above all, great structural changes are taking place in favor of nuclear energy, whose share is to be doubled by 1990. Further issues are the development of central supplies of heat and a greater utilization of natural gas, the domestic extraction of which is also to be doubled by the end of the current 5 year period.

On the other hand, coal extraction will be gradually reduced in line with Czechoslovakia's ecological program and the extraction of bituminous coal for use as a raw material will be the only one to remain at this year's level.

CTK INTERVIEWS TU OFFICIAL ON NEW MINERS' UNION

LD012255 Prague CTK in English 1133 GMT 1 Jul 86

[Text] Prague, July 1 (CTK) -- "The Czechoslovak Revolutionary Trade Union Movement fully supports the targets of the International Organization of Miner (IOM) as a new independent trade union organization which defends the rights of workers in the mining industry, and works in favour of social progress and in the struggle for peace and disarmament". This point was stressed in an interview for CTK by Chairman of the Central Committee of the Czechoslovak Trade Union of Workers in the Mining and Power Generating Industries Vladimir Polednik, who attended a recent session of the IOM political commission in Paris.

"Czechoslovakia was a founding member of the International Organization of Miners as an appeal to found it was lodged at an international conference of miners and power industry workers in Prague in October, 1984. The establishment of the organization last September in Paris, where the IOM Secretariat is based, manifested strengthening of the unity and solidarity of workers in the mining industry. Today, the organization has its branches in 36 countries of all continents", Vladimir Polednik said.

Asked about Czechoslovakia's share in the IOM activity, Vladimir Polednik, who is an alternate member of the Czechoslovak Community Party Central Committee and since 1984 chairman of the Trade Union of Workers in the Mining and Power Generating industries since 1984, said that Czechoslovakia presides over the Commission of Occupational Safety and Hygiene.

"It is recognition of the level of care for workers in a socialist state. We wanted our methods and experience from the sphere of social and health ensurance of miners to be used in the framework of the international organization. This point will be on the agenda of a session of this commission in Prague next October. "At the same time we are preparing for a world conference on employment in the mining industry which is to be held at the invitation of the British National Union of Mine Workers in London next November. The conference is to help solve the most urgent problems from the life of miners in capitalist and developing countries -- that means mainly organizing actions against closures of mines, dismissals, unemployment, etc.", Vladimir Polednik stressed.

CULTURAL FESTIVAL FOR RESIDENT HUNGARIANS HELD

LD301055 Prague Domestic Service in Czech 0230 GMT 30 Jun 86

[Text] The cultural festival of Hungarian working people living in Czechoslovakia culminated in Combasek yesterday with a peace rally and a gala program: in the light of peace. The festival was dedicated to the 65th anniversary of the founding of the CPCZ and to the International Year of Peace. Viliam Salgovic, the head of the party and state delegation, CPSL Central Presidium member and Slovak National Council chairman, in his speech to the participants in the rally, stressed that the festival in Gombasek is a convincing reminder of the firm internationalist unity of the nations and ethnic minorities living in Czechoslovakia, which, under the Communist Party leadership, are building a happy socialist home for both the present and future generations.

3D ACADAMIES OF SCIENCES MEETING HELD IN BERLIN

Honecker Receives Academy Heads

LD021523 East Berlin ADN International Service in German 1315 GMT 2 Jun 86

[Text] Berlin, 2 Jul (ADN) -- Erich Honecker, SED Central Committee general secretary and GDR Council of State chairman, received the heads of the delegations currently participating in the 3d meeting of the presidents of the Academies of Sciences of socialist countries in the GDR for a friendly talk on Wednesday.

Erich Honecker briefed the guests on the movement of the working people, which is rich in initiatives, for the fulfilment of the resolutions of the 11th SED Congress. He referred to the prominent role of science in mastering the decisive tasks for the acceleration of scientific-technological progress and to the importance of international socialist research cooperation. The general secretary paid tribute to the exertions of GDR scientists for closer collaboration between science and production and outlined the party's resolutions on shaping economic relations between combines and academies and colleges of the GDR.

During their meeting, the leading scientists from 11 socialist countries are discussing matters regarding the scientific community's responsibility for preserving and safeguarding peace, the close linkage between science and production, and the further development of cooperation in the areas of information and computer technology. During the friendly meeting in the SED Central Committee building, Prof Dr Werner Scheler, GDR Academy of Sciences president, and Prof Dr Anatoliy Aleksandrov, USSR Academy of Sciences president, and the presidents of the academies of the other fraternal socialist countries reported on the course and the results of the consultations thus far.

Appeal Issued at Meeting's End

LD021810 East Berlin ADN International Service in German 1527 GMT 2 Jul 86

[Excerpts] Berlin, 2 Jul (ADN) -- The most important issue of the present is maintaining and safeguarding peace. This waa affirmed by the presidents of the Academies of Sciences of socialist countries at the end of their 3d meeting in Berlin today. They expressed their unqualified commitment to the special responsibility of the academies and all scientists in the solution of questions of peace and disarmament.

The comprehensive disarmament program submitted by the USSR, which foresees as an ultimate goal the complete destruction of nuclear weapons by the end of this century, met with unanimous approval. An "Appeal to the Scientists of the World" was passed unanimously in this spirit.

The presidents of the Academies of Sciences from 11 countries state in a final communique that they will do everything to support the further development of international socialist research cooperation in the spirit of the resolutions passed recently at the party congresses of the communist and workers parties of their countries and to attain a high efficiency in research work.

HORST SINDERMANN CONTINUES VISIT TO ROME

Meets Andreotti, PCI Officials

AU011237 East Berlin NEUES DEUTSCHLAND in German 26 Jun 86 p 6

[Text] Rome, (ADN) -- On Wednesday [25 June] morning Horst Sindermann, president of the GDR People's Chamber, met Foreign Minister Giulio Andreotti in Rome. During the talks Horst Sinderman pointed out that with the Budapest appeal of the Warsaw Pact states a number of proposals is on hand to achieve specific agreements for a gradual and controlled disarsmament in both the nuclear and conventional spheres and to make the world safer.

Foreign Minister Andreotti replied that Italy has noted these proposals with interest. He endorsed the continuation of the policy of dialogue and a strategic equilibrium of armaments. The Italian foreign minister stressed the need to adhere to the SALT II and ABM treaties. Research related to the SDI program should be restricted to laboratories.

A meeting took place between Horst Sindermann and Prof Amintore Fanfani, president of the Senate, at the Palazzo Madame, the seat of the Italian Senate. Central to the talks were the tense international situation, the quest for ways to defuse conflicts, and the chances for joint efforts to achieve a breakthrough at the negotiations on arms control and disarmament. Both sides noted in agreement that the dimension of a nuclear holocaust requires a new approach in international politics and an effort for joint security and that political dialogue and constructive negotiations constitute the only possible ways to a secure peace.

In the afternoon Horst Sindermann conducted talks with Achille Occhetto and Giordano Napolitano, members of the national leadership of the Italian Communist Party [PCI] at the PCI headquarters in Rome. The two sides appreciated the traditional and fruitful relations between the PCI and SED and stressed their determination to also develop these relations in the future. They emphasized the urgency of undertaking every possible effort to prevent an arms race in outer space and to arrive at specific agreements for securing peace.

The leadership of the bilateral Italy-GDR section of the Interparliamentary Union gave a banquet for Horst Sindermann. Cocktails were served in the evening at the GDR Embassy in Rome.

Conveys Message to President

AU011235 East Berlin NEUES DEUTSCHLAND in German 26 Jun 86 p 2

[Text] Rome, (ADN) -- On Wednesday [25 June] morning Horst Sindermann, president of the GDR People's Chamber, member of the SED Central Committee Politburo, and deputy chairman of the GDR State Council, was received for talks by State President Francesco Cossiga at Castel Porziano near Rome.

The cordial greetings from Erich Honecker, general secretary of the SED Central Committee and chairman of the GDR State Council, conveyed by Horst Sindermann were accepted by Francesco Cossiga with gratitude and reciprocated with best wishes for the well-being of the GDR head of state. Horst Sindermann presented to the Italian state president a personal message from Erich Honecker as well as an invitation for an official visit to the GDR. Francesco Cossiga accepted the invitation with gratitude.

The interlocutors valued the high level of the relations between the GDR and Italy. Dialogue between leading politicians particularly helps to develop relations and exerts a beneficial influence on the climate in Europe. In agreement, Cossiga and Horst Sindermann voiced their concern about the exacerbated world situation and stressed that war must not be an instrument of politics. Detente and a peaceful solution of all conflicts are necessary. All states, regardless of their size or social systems, should contribute to this. Horst Sindermann affirmed that the GDR, in accordance with its alliance partners, is doing all it can to actively exploit every chance for banning the danger of war. A comprehensive approach and respect for the security interests of each side could put an end to the disastrous developments in the world provided there is a constructive response from the NATO side.

CSSR MILITARY DELEGATION ARRIVES FOR VISIT

Received by Army General Kessler

LD011205 East Berlin ADN International Service in German 0947 GMT 1 Jul 86

[Text] Berlin, 1 Jul (ADN) -- GDR Defense Minister Army General Heinz Kessler, SED Central Committee Politburo member, received a CSSR military delegation for a friendly talk on Tuesday. It is led by Colonel General Milan Vaclavik, CPCZ Central Committee member and [federal] minister of national defense. The delegation, which was welcomed with military ceremony at Berlin's Schoenefeld Airport on the same day, is scheduled to visit the GDR for several days.

The meeting in the Defense Ministry concentrated on current issues in the international situation and the tasks resulting from it for both states and their armed forces in safeguarding peace and socialist achievements. In this connection, the partners in the talk asserted that they would unceasingly deepen the armed alliance and cooperation of the GDR National People's Army [NVA] and the Czechoslovak People's Army which are firmly allied to the Soviet Armed Forces and the other fraternal armies. In view of the adventurous course of confrontation and arms build-up [being pursued] by the most aggressive circles of U.S. imperialism and their striving for military superiority over the Soviet Union and the other states of the socialist community, the responsibility of the soldiers of socialism in fulfilling their mission to maintain peace is growing.

Army General Kessler briefed the guests on the achievements of NVA members in the creative implementation of the class task [set] by the 11th SED Congress. This was reflected in the ambitious commitments in the competition through which the soldiers of the German workers' and peasants' state intend to attain a further increase in fighting strength and combat readiness in the second half of the year of training.

Col Gen Vaclavik presented greetings from the brothers-in-arms of the Czechoslova People's Army. He expressed the conviction that the forthcoming meetings, talks, and exchange of experiences with the members of the GDR Army will contribute toward further deepening friendship between the two parties, states, and armies.

Visits Potsdam Bezirk

LD022255 East Berlin Domestic Service in German 2010 GMT 2 Jul 86

[Text] The CSSR military delegation led by Defense Minister Colonel General Milan Vaclavik, which is at present in the GDR, visited Potsdam Bezirk today. After a tour of the historic site of the Potsdam agreement in Cecilienhof Palace and a visit to a training center of the NPA ground forces, a brotherhood-in-arms meeting in the afternoon formed the highlight of the day. Wolfghan Henning reports:

A brotherhood-in-arms meeting was held this afternoon at the end of the second day of the visit by the CSSR military delegation to the GDR here in the NVA Julius Fucik barracks: The motorized infantry units gave Heinz Kessler, Politburo member of the SED Central Committee and GDR minister of national defense, and Col Gen Milan Vaclavik, member of the CPCZ Central Committee and CSSR minister of national defense, a warm soldiers' greeting. After the CSSR and GDR national anthems, the commander of the hosting troop unit, Lt Col (?Armin) Schneider opened the meeting of the regimental club, which was the first to be established in the NVA in 1956 and which has had long-standing and close relations of partnership with the Ernst Thaelmann regiment of the CSSR People's Army. Army General Heinz Kessler then addressed the participants at the meeting. He stressed in his address that only a few months ago at their party congresses, the leading parties of our two countries decided on goals up to 1990 and beyond for the further shaping of advanced socialist society. They are goals, said Army General Heinz Kessler, for which it is truly worthwhile to combine all our forces even more closely in order to further raise the material and cultural living standards of our peoples and reliably protect their achievements. This is also fully in line with the will and spirit of the Budapest appeal for the preservation of peace and the maintenance of a peaceful future for our own, and other peoples.

Amid the hearty applause of the soldiers, NCO's, sergeants and officers of the regiment, Army General Heinz Kessler presented the CSSR defense minister a souvenir, a bust of Friedrich Engels. Col Gen Milan Vaclavik then took the platform. He conveyed the warm militant greetings of all members of the CSSR People's Army. Referring to the visit to the GDR by his military delegation, he stressed that the delegation has been able to convince itself at every stage of the successes of the GDR working people in socialist construction and the NVA's readiness to defend socialism. He was able to say with pleasure that the CSSR was linked to our country in a firm tie of friendship, military alliance, and cooperation, on the principles of Marxism-Leninism and socialist internationalism. This is also a link with the traditions of the struggle of the Czechoslovak and German working classes, associated with the work of personalities such as Julius Fucik and Ernstd Thaelmann, Klement Gottwald and Wilhelm Pieck. He could say satisfactorily here at the meeting that the brotherhood-in-arms between our two people's armies was developing successfully, that it is strengthening through joint military exercises, in the exchange of experiences in training, and the political work between our Army units.

The CSSR defense minister ended his warmly applauded speech with the statement that the CSSR People's Army, like the NVA, was fulfilling the most humane task at the side of th Soviet Army and the other fraternal armies of the Warsaw Pact. They are jointly defending socialsm and the socialist achievements of the working people. They are defending progress and peace.

Tours Training Center

Accompanied by Colonel-General Horst Stechbarth, deputy minister of defense, the guests acquainted themselves with training methods and installations.

Earlier the delegation was received by Guenther Jahn, first secretary of the Potsdam SED Bezirk Executive. A brotherhood-in-arms meeting in the afternoon will form the highlight of the 2d day of the visit.

HAGER RECEIVES FRENCH COMMUNIST DELEGATION

LD022214 East Berlin ADN International Service in German 1823 GMT 2 Jul 86

[Text] Berlin, 2 Jul (ADN) -- A delegation from the French Communist Party headed by Rene Le Guen, member of the Central Committee Politburo, arrived in the GDR today at the invitation of the SED Central Committee. The delegation intends to familiarize itself with experiences of the SED in the mastery of the scientific-technical revolution.

Kurt Hager, Politburo member and secretary of the SED Central Committee, briefed the guests on the implementation of the decisions of the 11th SED Congress for the further shaping of advanced socialist society of the GDR. He stressed that the close linking of scientific-technical progress with the advantages of socialism is an important precondition for continuing the SED policy aimed at the people's welfare and preservation of peace. The development and application of key technologies, the integration of science and production, the education and qualifying of the working people, and the promotion of creative initiatives of the youth and new generation of scientists play a great role here.

Rene Le Guen expressed the high regard of the French Communists for the GDR's successes. He reported on the implementation of the decisions of the 25th PCF Congress and the struggle for the social and political interests of French working people. Here the assessment of the conditions of the struggle, changed through the scientific-technical revolution, and the concrete alternatives proposed by the communists are of growing importance.

Both sides agreed to continue the close, trusting cooperation and mutual exchange of experiences between the SED and PCF.

FELFE, FRG AGRICULTURAL OFFICIAL VIEW COOPERATION

LD022116 East Berlin ADN International Service in German 1759 GMT 2 Jul 86

[Text] Berlin, 2 Jul (ADN) -- Werner Felfe, member of the Politburo and secretary of the SED Central Committee, and Josef Ertl, president of the German Agricultural Society (DLG) of the FRG, today discussed the international situation and relations between the two German states, and especially agriculture in the GDR and the FRG. Ertl is visiting the GDR at the head of a DLG delegation.

In the business-like and constructive discussion, the two men agreed that the preservation of peace is the paramount task of our time and that everything possible must be done to prevent the arms race. They noted that the existing relations between the GDR Society for Agricultural Sciences and the DLG could be steadily expanded for mutual benefit, especially with a view to scientific-technical progress in agriculture.

Werner Felfe explained, in light of the decisions of the 11th SED Congress, the GDR's readiness to cooperate with all reasonable and peace-loving forces in the interest of preventing a nuclear inferno. It strongly supported the Soviet disarmament proposals and the Budapest appeal of the Warsaw Pact states. Werner Felfe reaffirmed that the GDR was in favor of further expanding relations between the two German states on the basis of the basic treaty.

Josef Ertl expressed agreement with the view that mutual relations had to be based on reason and realism and directed toward the safeguarding of peace. The deepening of relations with the GDR Society for Agricultural Sciences was very much in the interests of the DLG and its efforts were encouraged to contribute to understanding. There were sufficient starting points for concrete cooperation in implementing scientific-technical cooperation in agriculture.

Taking part in the talks were the members of the Central Committee Bruno Lietz, minister for agriculture, forestry, and foodstuffs; Helmut Semmelmann, department chief in the SED Central Committee; Professor Wili Breunig, president of the GDR Society for Agricultural Sciences. Josef Ertl was accompanied by Hans-Christian Seeliger, vice president of the DLG; and other members of the board. Also pesent was Dr Hans Otto Braeutigam, head of the FRG's permanent representation in the GDR.

This evening, Werner Felfe gave a dinner in honor of Josef Ertl.

BRIEFS

ERFURT BEZIRK COMPETITION TARGETS -- In Erfurt today, more than 1,000 of the best workers and competition initiators met with Gerhard Mueller, Politburo candidate member and 1st secretary of the Erfurt Bezirk Executive Board, on new competition targets following the 11th SED Congress. By the end of the year, 1,000 CAD/CAM work stations will be in operation. The Bezirk's construction workers want to build or modernize 13,600 apartments in 1986 -- 1,000 more than planned. Consumer goods worth M200 million will be produced in excess of the plan, involving a replacement rate of at least 40 percent. The work collectives want to achieve an increase of 6 days in net production by the end of the year. [Excerpt] [East Berlin Domestic Television Service in German 1730 GMT 11 Jun 86 DW]

1985 STATE BUDGET DEVELOPMENTS REPORTED

AU301116 Budapest MAGYAR HIRLAP in Hungarian 27 Jun 86 p 4

[Text] State Budget Balance (in billion forints)

Receipts	1985 fulfillment	Distribution (percentage of the main sum of expenses)
Enterprise (cooperative) tax payments	286.7	47.1
Social Security Contributions	94.4	15.5
Consumption-related taxes	92.2	15.5
Total	473.3	77.7
Payments effected by the population	55.7	91.1
Payments by budget-financed institutions	53.0	8.7
International and other receipts	11.5	1.0
Main sum of receipts	593.5	97.4
Deficit	15.7	2.6
Expenditures
Enterprise (cooperative) subsidies	51.4	8.5
Tax returns and socialist interstate accounts	51.2	8.5
Consumer price addition	50.2	8.2
Total	152.8	25.1
Accumulation expenditures	61.8	10.1
Social security expenditures	131.5	21.6
Budget-financed institutions; expenditures	206.9	34.0
International and other expenditures	56.2	9.2
Main sum of expenditures	609.2	100.2

The total receipts of the 1985 state budget were 593.5 billion forints and total expenditures came to 609.2 billio forints. The receipts were 2.3 percent less than stipulated and the expenditures stood within the planned amount. The budget deficit stood at 15.7 billion forints. The decisive percentage of the budget receipts originated from the enterprise economic organizations. The payments of the enterprises and cooperatives were 22.3 billin forints less than stipulated; within this, the profit taxes and the differential producer turnover tax lagged considerably behind the planned amount.

The amount of the taxes and contributions paid by the population, including the social security and pension contribution, stood at 55.7 billion forints. The number of private persons involved in small ventures and subsequently the taxable income originating from these ventures continued to increase. As a result of the modification of the regulations on these ventures and cooperation taxes, the tax incomes from these associations exceeded the stipulated amount by 5.1 billion forints, some 13 percent. The increasing payments resulting from the modification of the customs regulations affecting the population led to significant increase in the receipts from customs dues.

The amount of the budget-financed institutions' income and of the payments of the social security contribution stood at 53 billion forints. This amount is larger than planned by close to 3 billion forints. This surplus is mainly the result of the assertion of the interest in increasing their own income. Some 10 percent (61.8 billion forints) of the state budget expenditures served to facilitate the activity of accumulation. Additional support had to be provided to investments, as in certain basic material manufacturing and energy sectors -- in view of the difficult financial situation of the enterprises -- the previously used state loan structure had to be modified in certain cases into a basic allocation, which placed a more direct burden on the budget.

The amount paid for the return of taxes and the support of enterprises and which faciliated their production and turnover stood at 152.8 billion forints, one-quarter of the total expenditures. This sum is 11.7 billion forints more than planned. The bulk of this surplus expenditure was due to imports of energy and greater energy consumption.

The amount provided for the budget-financed institutions to carry out their tasks stood at 206.9 billion forints, 34 percent of the total expenditures. This greater expenditure, 5 billion forints more than planned, was made possible primarily by the increasing surplus income of the councils and of the central bodies as well as by their financial surplus available from the previous year. The expenditure was divided among the main tasks as follows:

-- 39.3 billion forints for the tasks of health and sociasl organs;
-- 65.9 billion forints for educational, cultural, and scientific research rasks;
-- 37.6 billion forints for the tasks of economic, administrative, legal, and internal order and security organs.
-- 64.1 billion forints for the tasks of economic, administrative, legal, and internal order and security organs.

The social security expenses in 1985 stood at 131.5 billion forinits, 11.5 billion forints (9.5 percent) more than in 1984. The social policy measures carried out in 1985 increased budget expenditures by 4.4 billion forints. In 1985, 91.7 billion forints were allocated for pensions and other pension-like contributions, 69.8 percent of the total social security expenditures. Compared to 1984, this sum was higher by 1.4 billion forints due to an increase in the number of pensioners, and by 6.3 percent due to the increase in the average pensions.

A total of 20.6 percent of the overall social security expenditures was allocated for the support of mothers and families with children -- excluding the child care allowance -- an amount of 27.1 billion forints. This was 3 billion forints more than in 1984. Some 20.7 billion forints were allocated for family allowances, 1.9 billion forints more than in 1984. The amount of sick payments and other aid funds in 1985 stood at 11.7 billion forints, 600 million more than in 1984.

FURTHER ON VISIT BY FINNISH DEFENSE MINISTER

Losonczi Decorates Official

[Text] Budapest, June 29 (MTI) - Veikko Pihlajamaki, minister of defence of the Republic of Finland, concluded the official friendly visit he paid to Hungary at the head of a delegation. Invited by Colonel General Ferenc Karpati, minister of defence, he held talks on issues concerning the two armies, paid visits to military units, industrial and agricultural plants and saw the sights of Hungary. On Sunday the Finnish delegation was seen off at Ferihegy Airport by Ferenc Karpati, and several Members of the Militry council of the defence Ministry.

COMMUNIQUE ISSUED ON ZIMBABWEAN PRESIDENT'S VISIT

AU241437 Budapest NEPSZABADSAG in Hungarian 20 Jun 86 p 3

[MTI report: "Communique on the Hungarian-Zimbabwean Talks"]

[Text] Canaan Sodindo Banana, president of the Republic of Zimbabwe, visited our country from 16 to 19 June at the invitation of Pal Losonczi, president of the Presidential Council.

Janos Kadar, general secretry of the MSZMP, received the guest.

The Zimbabwean head of state laid a wreath at the Memorial of Hungarian Heroes, visited the Medicor Works and the Voros Csillag agricultural cooperative in Nadudvar, and the historical and cultural sights of the capital city and Hajdu-Bihar County.

During the visit the parties signed a health agreement, a trade cooperation accord, a cultural-academic agreement, an agreement on technological and scientific cooperation, with a relevant working plan for 1986-88, and an agreement on cooperation between their news agencies.

At the friendly talks which were conducted in the spirit of mutual understanding, Pal Losonczi and Canaan Sodindo Banana briefed each other on their countries' domestic situations and the tasks they were facing. They reviewed Hungarian-Zimbabwean relations and the possibilities of extending them. They exchange views on the most important international questions and paid special attention to issues related to world peace and international security, as well as to the situation in southern Africa.

They stated with satisfaction that relations between their countries have shown progress in recent years and this is partly due to high-level meetings. They stressed that the positive improvement in political relations has created favorable opportunities for improving mutually advantageous cooperation in the fields of economy, trade, technology, and science. They expressed their conviction that the agreements signed will promote manifold improvement in interstate relations.

Canaan Sodindo Banana highly appreciated the socialist achievements and peace-loving foreign policy of the Hungarian People's Republic, as well as its contribution to easing international tension, promoting the cause of disarmament, consolidating the policy of detente, intensifying dialogue, and eliminating all vestiges of the colonial past on the African Continent.

Pal Losonczi praised the success the Republic of Zimbabwe has achieved in complicted internal and external circumstances under the leadership of the Zimbabwe African National Union (Patriotic Front) to consoliate political independence, promote social progress and natinal unity, and improve the people's living conditions. He highly regarded the Zimbabwean Governent's progressive foreign policy and its efforts to achieve a just and peaceful settlement of problems in southern Africa and to end apartheid, as well as its active role in the Organization of African Unity and in the Nonaligned Movement.

The two heads of state expressed their concern about the developments of the international situation. They stressed that the reason for the increasing tension is the imperialist policy of power which aims at increasing the arms race and extending it to outer space. They pointed out that it is a vital question for all of mankind to stop the arms race, especially in the nuclear field. To achieve this, it is necessary to unite and join the efforts of all peace-loving forces in the world.

The parties highly appreciated and expressed their intention to support the proposals of the Soviet Union and the member countries of the socialist community for furthering the cause of detente and world peace, as well as the initiatives of the Warsaw Pact states at the June session of the Political Consultative Committee in Budapest. Pal Losonczi and Canaan Banana considered that it is essential to settle disputed issues through negotiations based on equality and mutual security and to continue and intensify bilateral and multilateral political dialogues. They agreed that increasing European security and cooperation and improving confidence in Europe are important factors in consolidating world peace. They underlined that a constructive agreement on disarmament would release significant financial resources for economic development, the solution of global problems, and assistance to developing countries.

Both presidents expressed their concerns over the political, social, and economic problems of the African continent and over the situation in its southern region. They confirmed that their countries continue to provide support for African nations in their struggle to remove the burdens of their colonial past, to preserve and consolidate their independence, and create independent economies.

They stressed that the government policy in the Republic of South Africa constitutes a serious threat to peace and security in Africa and the world. They condemned the racist policy of the South African regime which is used to brutally oppress the majority of the population, to openly interfere in the internal affairs of neighbouring countries, and to illegally occupy Namibia.

They expressed their solidarity with the South African people, with the African National Congress and other forces fighting for the removal of apartheid, with the South-West African People's Organization and the Frontline States fighting for the independence of Namibia. They urged a guarantee for Namibia's independence based on resolution No 435 of the UN Security Council. They praised the work done at the emergency sessions of the UN General Assembly dealing with the critical economic situation in Africa and expressed their hope that the implementation of the resolutions passed at the session will contribute to easing the difficulties and making progress in the economies of African nations.

They highly regarded the positive role of the Nonaligned Movement in international affairs and its contribution to maintaining world peace, reducing international tensions, reducing the arms race, creating equal rights for economic cooperation, and solving local conflicts. They stressed the importance of the summit taking place in August and September with the participation of the leaders from member countries of the movement.

Both parties evaluated the visit as being successful and having contributed to the expansion of friendly relations between the two states and peoples, and having opened up new possibilities for increasing mutually advantageous cooperation. Pal Losonczi accepted an invitation from Canaan Sodindo Banana to visit Zimbabwe.

BRIEFS

EXPORT PLAN OVERFULFILLELD -- Budapest, July 1 (MTI) -- In the first six months of 1986 the Szolnok-based Mezaget Company, a major manufacturer of farm machinery, increased output by 12 per cent as compared to the same period last year, with 1,413 million forints worth of modern hay and straw harvesters and farm machinery. Half the products, more than planned, are being exported to socialist and capitalist countries. Export markets were also expanded by the West German "Mercanta" joint venture to which Mezogep and Komplex Foreign Trade Company are partners. The joint venture provides for the sale of products on third markets, and helped include Dutch and British firms on the list of purchasers. Mezogep is to start delivery of unimix-10 fodder-distributors to the Netherlands in the second half of 1986. The company also received an order for 100 balers from Britain. FURTHER REPORTAGE ON WORK OF 10TH PZPR CONGRESS

Congress Resumes Work

LD010851 Warsaw PAP in English 0825 GMT 1 Jul 86

[Text] Warsaw, July 1: The 10th PUWP Congress resumed debates here today. On the third day of the congress work, discussion on the CC's report continues in fourteen study groups. The delegates examine the most important areas of the party work and the PUWP operation in all spheres of Poland's life.

Congress Teams Meet

LD011502 Warsaw Domestic Service in Polish 1030 GMT 1 Jul 86

[Excerpts] [Announcer] Good day. We are in the radio studio for the 10th PZPR Congress. We welcome you on the 3d day of deliberations. Today the delegates began differently from on the previous 2 days. The congress hall in the Palace of Culture and Science is still empty. The plenary debate will begin this afternoon. Since 0900 work has been going on in the 41 congress subject teams. They have the task of compiling the congress stance on the most important issues concerning our political, social and economic life. The teams are still in session, but our reporters are already in the studio; they have been at the debates of several teams and will report on what is happening there for you.

Here is Jan Gadomski, who was at the foreign policy team meeting.

[Gadomski] This team is chaired by Comrade Jozef Czyrek. The discussion was introduced by Foreign Minister Comrade Marian Orzechowski, broadly referring back to the report by Wojciech Jaruzelski. I would like to quote one sentence from the introduction: Polish foreign policy must be one of the most dynamic and mobilizing factors in state policy, promoting accelerated socioeconomic development. So far, I have listened to 10 debaters.

The fundamental theme of the statements was Poland's place and role in the world and especially in Europe. Our capability to promote the cause of detente, international cooperation and peace was assessed. As Deputy Ryszard Wojna said in the discussion: This is an area of common danger, on both sides of the line which divides the system formations. We are threatened by military confrontation. We are threatened by the possibility that modern technology will get out of control. We are threatened ecologically. Apart from this, we are linked by a common cultural (?heritage). This is enough for difficult, controversial problems to be tackled in a new, realistic way.

What did all the statements have in common? Well, probably satisfaction at Poland's restoration to its rightful place; the awareness that this happened thanks to our own efforts, but that it is also a function of our standing in the socialist community, of the inviolability our friendly and allied relations with the Soviet Union; the ambitions resulting from this but also the realism in outlining ways to satisfy them; the awareness of the activities of national and class opponents and an optimstic approach to the difficulties.

[Announcer] Thank you very much. So much for the deliberations of that team.

Now let's look at party affairs. Jerzy Malczynski took part in the team discussing the party's ideological and propaganda activity and the problems of national accord.

[Malczynski] The theses are very numerous. The deliberations are chaired by Central Committee Secretary Comrade Henryk Bednarski and the deputy chairman is the editor in chief of TRYBUNA LUDU Jerzy Majka, already known to listeners as the congress press spokesman. Very many problems were tackled. Briefly, many statements positively assessed the provisions concerning the party's ideological and propaganda activity and national accord in the draft program of the party and also the way of presenting these matters in the Central Committee report delivered on the first day of the congress by Wojciech Jaruzelski. The ideological problems were discussed, in fact, on three different planes: party unity; ideological struggle; and the change on the issue of national accord, which was mentioned in the Central Committee report. So formerly, it was a question of political accord, and now it is one of cooperation in the socioeconomic sphere. A great deal of space was devoted to the party's propaganda activity. Particularly in the statements by workers there was the stance that ideology is treated as something very great, very secret and not subject to dispute and criticism, whereas the way this ideology is presented was given a varied reception and radio and television to a greater extent came in for a great deal of adverse comment. Among others, Vlodzimierz Sokorski said that we conduct propaganda as if we do not appreciate what an intelligent society we have.

[Announcer] That probably doesn't apply to all our work. I think that one can find in our propaganda a good many good examples of reliable journalism work.

[Broszczak] I would like to draw attention to another stand in the discussion: matters of education in schools. It is said that in the education system, signs of an indifference regarding world outlook are manifesting themselves for various reasons; nevertheless, these are phenomena which should be eliminated somehow, for a teacher cannot pretend to be indifferent to the content of what he is teaching. And the last word, which I must talk about, is the issue of how society sees the state and the shaping of an attitude toward the state. This was very broadly tackled by several participants in the discussion. They stressed that even in such school subjects as civics, too little is said and too little emphasis is laid on the attitude toward the state and the legal system. Furthermore, young people are not being acquainted with how the state administration should function, so those young people come humbly to the administrative office and can't get what is simply their due. That is, in brief, what was discussed mainly in the part of the session I listened to.

[Announcer] Thank you very much. I would add that, during the plenary deliberations, both matters of education and the functioning of the state administration were discussed and many speakers also made statements on them.

Defining the brief of the next subject teams are these headings: Poland's economic development policy in 1986-90; the development policy for rural areas and agriculture and the food economy; the proexport reorientation of the economy; science and technological and organizational progress in the service of the country's development. Let's begin with economic development policy, with the work of that team. Andrzej Borkowski was an observer.

[Borkowski] This is an important team; almost 400 delegates are taking part in its work and discussing matters which are decisive for success, for achieving our goals which the congress will outline for this 5-year period and the (?long-term).

As one of the participants in the discussion said, this is beyond argument -- the credibility of what the party approves will depend on the development of the situation in the economy, on the rate of the transformations introduced to speed up the growth of production; and so a better meeting of social needs. One of the general conclusions which ran through the statements can be put like this, and although it is no new discovery, it is worth reiterating: Everything will depend on management efficiency in the very broadest sense. It is conditioned, however, by the introduction of mechanisms which would compel it. There is no other way. It is significant and cheering, as I see it, that all of those who spoke -- I listened to nine delegates -- came out firmly in favor of economic pressure and therefore of radical methods of action in the economy. These may turn out to be painful for everybody at the beginning, but I think that this is better than taking the economy on to a quicker path of growth by little steps. Of course, many problems are being pointed out in the discussion: detailed problems and macroscale ones: pro-export undertakings, structural changes in industry, the motivational system, and so forth. The most important, however, is the general longing for discipline, order and effectiveness of action.

[Announcer] I would add, perhaps, that during the plenary discussion and in the Central Committee report as well, there was great stress on the vital need, first, to improve management efficiency, and second, to raise discipline in implementing decisions and resolutions. On matters concerning the countryside, agriculture and the food economy here is Andrzej Dobrowolski.

[Dobrowolski] This was team nine. The deliberations are under the chairmanship of Central Committee Secretary Comrade Zbigniew Michalek. There are 175 delegates participating and 44 invited guests from various fields and branches of industry cooperating with the food economy. I listened to the deliberations from 0900, when they began, to 1200 and in that time, after the introduction by Comrade Michalek, some 12 people spoke, although some 50 had signed up to speak. The theme of the majority of the speeches stressed the fact that food production in our country has obtained lasting foundations; it has been based above all on our own possibilities. That they are sufficiently large is shown by the dynamic growth of agricultural production and the growing supplies of food to the population. Growth would be even greater, the delegates said, if the tasks in the resolution of the 11th plenum on increasing industrial means of production to agriculture were fully implemented.

Comrade Jerzy Janicki, deputy director of the Ursus Engineering Works, said that the future of tractor production is none too clear. Tractors produced under license are the main case in point here. They have been talked about for 12 years, and it is still only the beginning of the road.

[Announcer] Thank you very much. We will return to these matters in our next report; now Jan Rzedzielski will talk about the economy's reorientation towards exports. We can start from the statement that if we don't gear the economy towards exports, it will be hard for us to get off to a start at an accelerated rate.

[Rzedzielski] This belief dominated the discussion, chaired by Krzysztof Klinowski, with the introductory remarks made by Deputy Premier Wladyslaw Gwiazda.

[Announcer] Here is Maciej Drus on the 10th group, concerned with science, technological and organizational progress.

[Drus] The precise title of the team is: Science and Technological and Organizational Progress in the Service of the Country's Development.

The team's brief goes far beyond this name and takes in everything which serves or hampers progress as broadly conceived. People are discussed above all: people of science and industry.

[Announcer] We still have for you reports on work of two teams. The 13th team has been examining the issues of health and natural environment protection. Here is Barbara Gardowska.

[Gardowska] As might have been expected there was more talk about shortcomings than good points. The first part of the deliberations was devoted to health service issues, but I would like to quote a sentence from a speech on ecological matters: Our approach toward environmental protection, one of the delegates said, is the expression of the civic attitude, the expression of the attitude toward our homeland. These remarks concerned both all citizens who litter the forest or wash their cars in rivers, but most of all citizens who by virtue of their position and place of work decide on the construction of a new factory with the construction of a water purifying plant, who decide on switching on and off the necessary equipment. It was said that if everything that should be switched on is switched on we could reduce the pace of devastation of the natural environment by 30 percent without any investment outlays.

[Announcer] On tasks of education, culture and art, the 14th subject team, here is a report by Barbara Syczewska.

[Syczewska] The subject team for educational and cultural matters was chaired by Comrade Heronim Kubiak, who included many interesting thoughts in his introduction. He drew attention to the fact that education and culture are complementary, and they form a certain continuum. The point of each is to form the individuality of man and his system of values.

He recalled that culture as understood according to Marxist thought is the whole of the content and methods of human life. Such an understanding of culture, he said, is strongly rooted in Marxist tradition and the tradition of the Polish left. Comrade Heronim Kubiak referred to some documents, which could have helped the discussion, namely those which were prepared by appropriate Central Committee commissions before the 10th Congress for the 10th Congress, and also the 19th and 24th Central Committee plenum resolutions. He talked about the need for a closer look at the documents and for their possible updating. Well, I listened to only part of the discussion. I have to say that my attention was drawn to an attitude full of involvement. All the participants in the discussion aimed at clear, straight and precise discussion of the matters at hand. Both general and particular subjects were discussed.

SRV Guest Salutes Congress

LD011535 Warsaw Domestic Service in Polish 1337 GMT 1 Jul 86

[Speech by Chu Huy Man, member of the Central Committee Political Bureau of the Communist Party of Vietnam and deputy chairman of the Council of State of the Socialist Republic of Vietnam to the 10th PZPR Congress; Chu speaking in vernacular with superimposed Polish translation — live]

[Text] Allow me to express fraternal solidarity with the working class and the entire Polish nation, and warm greetings. [applause] In the millenium history of Poland the past 40 years have been a relatively short period, but the fraternal Polish people waged various wars, and won many glorious victories.

Rising after the heavy destruction and losses caused by the war started by the Fascists, the Polish people, led by the PZPR, and with considerable help from the Soviet Union and other fraternal socialist countries have achieved many revolutionary feats. Poland has been transformed into a developed industrial and agricultural country, the population's standard of living has improved considerably both materially and spiritually.

Recently you scored a great success, comrades, by overcoming the serious crisis afflicting you. This is further proof of the fact that the Polish nation, led by the PZPR and with esteemed Comrade Wojciech Jaruzelski at the helm and with the effective timely assistance by the Soviet Union and other fraternal countries of the socialist community, was able to inflict a shattering defeat on numerous intrigues concocted by imperialism and the forces of the reaction and was able to defend the gains of the socialist revolution.

This victory has confirmed that Poland continues to be an important member meriting the confidence of the socialist community, of the Warsaw Pact and of the Council for Mutual Economic Assistance. The position and prestige of the Polish People's Republic on the international arena are constantly increasing and gaining strength. And all these successes are the result of linking genuine patriotism with the unconquered Marxist-Leninist thought and proletarian socialist internationalism.

The Communist Party of Vietnam and the Vietnamese nation, which also struggled many years for freedom, independence and socialism, were in deep sympathy with you comrades in every hour and minute of your difficulties and stern tests. And they were proud and happy when you, comrades, overcame your crisis and brought about the strengthening of the political situation and the stable development of the country. We feel the triumph of the PZPR and of the fraternal Polish nation as if it were our own.

The present 10th PZPR Congress accompanies [word indistinct] that have been prepared exceptionally carefully. It has concentrated the whole effort of collective reflections and has momentous importance for political life in Poland. We are deeply convinced of the fact that on the basis of the program of the Polish United Workers Party and of the resolutions to be adopted by the congress, the fraternal Polish nation, in its fervent patriotism, will achieve even more numerous fresh successes, will lead the country resolutely and surely along the road of socialism, will make the life of Poles better and more beautiful, and will raise the standing and prestige of Poland in the international arena.

Esteemed comrades, at present the strength of the Soviet Union, the mainstay of world peace and revolution and of the whole socialist community, is a decisive factor determining the directions of the development of the international situation.

Never before has humanity had such serried and united forces -- which allow it to frustrate the aggressive designs of American imperialism.

The recent 27th CPSU Congress was an important event not only for the Soviet Union but for the whole of the socialist community, for all the forces which support peace, democracy and social progress in the world. Today the struggle to achieve world peace and to eradicate nuclear arms is the first and most important duty of all nations.

The Communist Party and the Vietnamese nation fully support the comprehensive [word indistinct] program which envisages the complete eradication of nuclear arms -- presented in the (?famous) moratorium of the secretary general of the CPSU Central Committee, Comrade Gorbachev, on 15 February 1986. We are fully in accord with and support most heartily the statement made by the Government of the Soviet Union on 29 April 1986 on the subject of the situation in Asia and the Pacific Ocean region. We heartily support the program, made up of specific activities, on the subject of utilizing outer space for peaceful means, presented by the Soviet Union on 12 June 1986. We fervently support the recent appeal of the Political Consultative Committee of the Warsaw Pact countries on the subject of restricting the armed forces and conventional arms in Europe.

Standing together in solidarity with the Soviet Union, the fraternal socialist countries, with the Nonaligned Movement countries and all nations which support progress in the world, we give relentless battle to imperialism, colonialism, neocolonialism, all reactionary forces, in the name of peace, national independence, democracy and social progress.

In the Indochinese Peninsula, the Socialist Republic of Vietnam will always uphold close ties of solidarity with the Democratic Republic of Laos and the People's Republic of Kampuchea. It will decisively fight for the affairs of Southeast Asia in which peace, stability, and friendship and cooperation between countries will reign.

Esteemed comrades, more than 10 years have elapsed since the total liberation of our country, and we must still continue work on the eradication of the results of the long war, we must still stand up to the forces of imperialism and reaction which do not recoil from any intrigue which has a chance of frustrating the achievements of the Vietnamese revolution, and that of Laos and Kampuchea.

However, our party stands firm by the correct political line and the nation has sufficient strength and will to implement victoriously our basic strategic tasks, to build socialism and to defend the socialist homeland.

At present we are carefully preparing ourselves for our sixth party congress. This congress will comprehensively assess the recent past period, present a target-task for socioeconomic development for the years 1986-90 and will set out directions for tasks in future years.

Our party is fully aware that now, just as in the past, the success of the implementation of tasks set out by the congress cannot be separated from solidarity and cooperation with the Soviet Union, with Poland and with other fraternal socialist countries. The tasks cannot be separated from the alliance in struggle and the multilateral cooperation with the Democratic Republic of Laos and the People's Republic of Kampuchea.

Esteemed comrades, Vietnam and Poland are fraternal countries linked by common histories, struggles for existence and the development and common ideal of socialism. In all the most difficult moments we stood by each other; we commiserated with, supported and helped each other. All our communists and the whole of our nation highly esteem and will never forget the presence of Polish comrades in the International Commission of Control and Supervision. We will never forget the [word indistinct] revolutionary feelings of the significant support and the valuable help given to Vietnam by the Polish Party, the Polish Government and the Polish nation, both in the past times of our struggle for freedom and independence and at the present time of building socialism and the defense of our country.

We thank you sincerely and heartily, comrades. We thank the whole fraternal Polish nation. We wish the 10th PZPR Congress fruitful debates. May the friendship and solidarity in struggle, the multinational cooperation between the Communist Party of Vietnam and the PZPR and between the Vietnamese and Polish nations develop every day more broadly and more gloriously. [applause]

Cuban Official Addresses Congress

LD011907 Warsaw Domestic Service in Polish 1350 GMT 1 Jul 86

[Speech by Juan Almeida Bosque, member of the Politburo and chairman of the Central Control and Auditing Commission of the Cuban Communist Party, at the 10th PZPR Congress in Warsaw; Almeida in Spanish with superimposed Polish translation -- live]

[Text] Esteemed Comrade Jaruzelski, comrade delegates, esteemed guests: We are extremely pleased to take part in the proceedings of the 10th PZPR Congress, which is occurring almost on the eve of the 42d anniversary of Poland's rebirth. This anniversary marks the event when the country regained its independence and was given an opportunity to commence socialist construction and life within safe frontiers. On behalf of the fraternal Cuban Communist Party [CCP], its Central Committee, and above all, on behalf of Comrade Fidel Castro, first secretary of the CCP [applause], I wish to convey to you, dear comrades, combat greetings and expressions of solidarity. The struggle of the Polish nation to regain its independence, its sacrifices and suffering during the years of the Hitlerite aggression, and the internationalist stance of its greatest sons give rise to deep admiration and respect within our hearts and are an example for all Cuban fighters to follow.

Our party highly appraises the significance of the decisive action for Poland and for the cause of socialism and peace that was undertaken on 13 December 1981. On that memorable day the Polish patriots and revolutionaries, led by Comrade Jaruzelski, frustrated the plans of imperialism and internal counterrevolution, charting the course down the difficult path that led to the country's normalization and further development.

The report delivered by the first secretary of the PZPR Central Committee bears witness to the efforts made by the Communists and all Polish working people to overcome the consequences of the crisis, to continue the development of all areas of the national economy, and to work out an extensive program for the country's social and economic development so as to raise the material and spiritual level of the nation's life.

These goals have been outlined with great precision in the party program. Following consultations and creative discussion within the entire Polish society, this program will be passed during the congress. It is a foundation for the future development of this socialist society.

Esteemed comrades, 5 months ago the CCP held its third congress. This congress allowed us to sum up our achievements during the previous 5-year period and to carry out a critical analysis of that period's shortcomings and errors. In so doing we were guided by our firm resolve to eliminate all shortcomings and to make a transition to begin implementing new, higher goals in all areas of social life.

Our congress again reiterated the importance of the existence of socialism a few dozen kilometers from the frontiers of the mightiest fortress of world reaction.

Socialist Cuba, which in the 27 years of its existence found within itself the means to rebuff countless attacks mounted by the United States, is an object of the hatred with which the Reagan administration's anti-Cuban policy is permeated. This hatred is reflected in the maintenance of an economic blockade of Cuba, the stepping up of spy operations, the organization of hysterical propaganda campaigns, and in the resorting to crude and insolent threats. We do not treat this lightly, since we are aware that those who throw down these challenges have no scruples or principles. However, neither are we afraid of them; we shall not retreat, not even by a single step. [applause]

Faced with this unprecedented attitude of the imperialists, our people, who have rallied around their party and its first secretary, Comrade Fidel Castro, demonstrate now more than ever a readiness to defend the people's gains and their inalienable right to independence. One can expect anything from our sworn and perfidious enemy. However, let our enemies make no mistake: The communists who are leading the Cuban people can oppose and rebuff any aggression with the same decisiveness and perseverance that has always characterized our revolutionaries, both during the period of the anticolonial war in the 19th Century and during the Bay of Pigs attack, as well as during the current stage, when we are fulfilling our internationalist mission.

We must acknowledge that our economic and social achievements and defensive potential are also the fruit of internationalist solidarity shown to us, especially by the fraternal Soviet Union and other socialist countries, among which Poland occupies a worthy place.

Comrades, a few months ago we all witnessed an event of timeless significance: the 27th CPSU Congress. This event, justly described as historic, constituted for the international communist and workers' movement and for all revolutionary, progressive, and peace-loving forces an example of the indomitable spirit of the internationalism of the communists and the entire Soviet people. It demonstrated conclusively the Soviet sense of responsibility and the resolute will of the Soviet political leadership, which with wisdom and renewed vigor is tackling the challenge of graduating from the task of socialist construction to the implementation of more complex goals. At the same time, it picked up the gauntlet thrown by the U.S. militarists and imperialists and their allies.

Your 10th congress is taking place at a time when the international situation has become extremely difficult and complex, due, above all, to the efforts of the U.S. Government, which wishes to turn back the merciless tide of history. This is a time, when, in their madness, imperialists do not shirk from launching daily attacks against the governments and peoples who are defending their independence in the face of the imperialist diktat or are fighting to throw off the yoke of (?colonialism). These nations have become the real victims of the state terrorism practiced by the U.S. Government in close alliance with the world's most reactionary forces. This same line of violence and adventurism is a growing threat to world peace, since the team now in power in the United States wishes to impose its hegemony on the world through the use of blackmail or threats against the socialist community and the entire revolutionary and progressive movement.

Hence, the struggle to preserve world peace is linked with opposition to the militant course of the U.S. administration's policy, which has as its aim the achievement of U.S. military superiority thus enabling the United States to take control of the world and impose a shameful system of domination.

The duty to oppose these plans and to grind these designs to dust rests, first and foremost, with the countries of the socialist community.

However, this is also a duty of the Third World countries, of all progressive and antiwar forces which are active in the most important capitalist countries. We are currently witnessing a real counterrevolutionary crusade mounted by U.S. imperialism against peoples that desire freedom and independence.

The shameful U.S. efforts to stifle the heroic Sandinist revolution are the best example of this crusade, [applause] as are the efforts to shatter at any cost the unbreakable will of the Salvadoran party and people, to sow confusion and (?defeatism) in Angola, to prevent Namibia from regaining independence, and to stem the growing tide of the liberation struggle of the peoples in southern Africa by propping up and actively supporting the shameful apartheid regime, which, in the face of the unavoidable crisis, launches attacks against the frontline states.

U.S. imperialism supports the counterrevolutionary gangs in Afghanistan and Cambodia and continues open support to Israeli expansionism, thus attempting to render it impossible to find a just solution for the legitimate cause of the Palestinian people. This same imperialism undertakes serious operations, devoid of all scruples, aimed at blocking the [word indistinct] nation's path to progress and independence, and, a few months ago, launched a brutal attack on Libya.

In sum, one can say that the past few years have eloquently shown that all the antipeople actions undertaken by the hired bandits active in the anticommunist cause the world over enjoy the openly declared support of the Reagan administration.

However, despite the powerful actions and means of imperialism, stemming this march toward freedom, independence, and final victory is only a matter of time. [sentence as heard] Nothing will frustrate the aspirations of the revolutionaries who struggle the world over for happiness and for the right to live in conditions of true justice and dignity.

In a situation of continuing social contradictions, in order to exist, the peoples of the Third World, who suffer hunger, unemployment, abject poverty and backwardness, can no longer tolerate the present system of international economic relations imposed on them by capitalism. Due to this system, a colossal burden rests on the shoulders of the developing countries in the form of unimaginable debts which, due to their size, have become impossible to repay. In the circumstances, it is necessary to take steps to eradicate these debts and establish a new international economic order, putting an end to arms race, reducing military expenditures, and using the resources thus obtained for economic and social goals, satisfying the needs of the entire human race, particularly those in the Third World.

Dear comrades, your congress provides an excellent opportunity to recall the close bonds of friendship that link our peoples and that originated during the years of the struggle for independence, when Carlos Rolof Mialowski, the Polish fighter and internationalist who led Cuban liberation units, operated on the battlefront. The exchange of youth brigades between Poland and Cuba is named for him. This operation is a clear expression of the socialist values which guide our peoples. We are deeply convinced that our lasting friendship, created in difficult and dangerous times, is presently being consolidated by creative and peaceful cooperation in the spirit of faithfulness to the principles of Marxism-Leninism and proletarian internationalism. This will continue to develop as an example of the new type of relations that exist between the two nations, Poland and Cuba, which are building their societies.

In conclusion, I would like to express our full faith in the people and Communists of Poland, who, under the leadership of their party and our dear friend, Comrade Jaruzelski, will continue to overcome all difficulties, and every day get nearer to the objective of a communist and socialist future, for which so much effort has been made and so much blood sacrificed by the most committed and faithful sons of the unsubjugated Polish nation.

Long live socialist People's Poland! [applause]

Long live Polish-Cuban friendship! Long live proletarian internationalism! We will win! [applause]

Jaruzelski Apologizes for Absences

LD011709 Warsaw Domestic Service in Polish 1531 GMT 1 Jul 86

[Speech by Wojciech Jaruzelski, first secretary of the PZPR Central Committee, at the opening of the afternoon session of the 10th PZPR Congress in Warsaw -- live]

[Text] Esteemed comrades: Above all I would like to apologize on behalf of some of the members of the Politburo and of the Secretariat who did not take part in today's earlier deliberations. Please forgive us. The Soviet delegation's visit to the factory named after General Karol Swierczewski lasted longer than expected because it was a good one, because it passed in such a fine atmosphere, with direct conversations conducted by Comrade Gorbachev with, above all, the workers at the lofty rally. We still had a meeting between the party leadership and the Soviet leadership.

As he was about to leave by air, Comrade Gorbachev again asked us to cordially thank all comrade delegates for the fine atmosphere, the good will extended to him, and those cherished statements which he acknowledged as being important and auguring well for our party, country and our community. For this, too, cordially... [loud applause interrupts]

As we were not present during the speeches made by the fraternal delegations of the Communist Parties of Vietnam, Cuba and Ethiopia I would like to (?cordially) thank the comrades heading the delegations for the sincere words addressed to our party and our nation, and in return I would like to convey to them our best wishes. Thank you. [applause]

Rakowski Addresses Congress

LD012020 Warsaw Domestic Service in Polish 1625 GMT 1 Jul 86

[Speech by Mieczyslaw Rakowski, deputy speaker of the Sejm and chairman of the Sejm Socioeconomic Commission, to the 10th PZPR Congress in Warsaw on 1 July -- live]

[Text] Esteemed comrde delegates: At the beginning of my speech allow me to share a remark on the Central Committee report delivered by Comrade Wojciech Jaruzelski. As a matter of fact, it was neither a report nor a classic speech; rather it was a dialogue with the party, with the whole of society about the necessity to embark on the second stage of implementing the main provisions of the socialist renewal program.

I am not a wild optimist, but I think that the thoughts and concrete proposals contained in the first secretary's speech incline one to roll up one's sleeves; to free oneself from scepticism, not criticism. Let us admit that the bug of scepticism is still around. The directions of action outlined in the report create a real chance to gain active support for our program not only from the main classes in the nation -- the workers and the peasants -- but also from the intelligentsia and particularly from the world of learning, culture, and art.

It is to these intellectuals, the people who create culture and art, who still stand back today, who are hesitant and not infrequently fail to believe us what I wish to appeal: We need you, your talents, your capacity to make general conclusions from social phenomena. We need you not for egoistic purposes, not so that we can say that they came to us at long last after all, but so that progressive, national, and socialist goals can be achieved.

Such goals, which require big changes in the psychology of the individual and of the nation, have been clearly and unequivocally outlined in the report delivered by Comrade Wojciech Jaruzelski. It will not be an easy matter to achieve them but they do create for the people from the world of learning, culture, and art a chance to live through a big intellectual adventure and, after all, this is what real artists hanker after. Those scientists and artists who have promised themselves to stand aside will not experience it. Therefore, I will repeat after Comrade Jaruzelski the words he uttered in the Oliwia Hall at a meeting with young people in 1983: Come with us, let us go together to a Poland that is just, orderly and modern in thinking and action.

Comrade delegates, the years that have passed since the Ninth Extraordinary Congress have been both difficult and fruitful. They have taught much to many of us. Even though overcoming even extraordinary impediments required a strong will and enormous energy, we have not been, nor are we now, worn-out wanderers. The party aktiv is not worn out; comrades from the party organizations and apparatus are not worn out. During the difficult months and years, being constantly ready to cooperate on a partner-like basis, the Central Committee, the Politburo, and the government did not lack the courage to take active decisions. We were not afraid to say no to the organizers of a sorry spectacle on the Rondo in the heart of Warsaw and to the rebellion in the Higher Officer's School of Fire Service. We were not afraid to denounce publicly those who broke off the August talks despite the fact that a considerable sector of public opinion remained under the influence of demagogues. We were not afraid to disclose before the entire community the course the Solidarity leaders' debates at Radom. We were not afraid to reach for the ultimate means, dramatic in their eloquence but necessary at a time when all other efforts failed to halt the adventurists who played with the fate of sovereign independent Poland. We were not afraid to start introducing economic reform in conditions of extreme economic weakness. We were not afraid to say a firm no to those who wished to sanction brawls and street disturbances in Poland. We were not afraid to initiate PRON with our allies at a time when deep layers of distrust, dislike, and even hostility to the party and peoples authority existed.

Esteemed comrades delegates, the years that have passed since the Ninth Congress have allowed us to see more clearly what has become outdated in social and economic structures, what must be replaced by new ideas and new practical solutions. However, we are still at the beginning of a new impetus for Poland despite the fact that we have begun the political and legal construction of socialist renewal. The conflict which we endured at the beginning of eighties swallowed up much of our energy, and brought -- because it had to bring -- victory to the prosocialist forces, but at the same time it caused the process of resolving problems in the modernization of socialism to be extended.

In the critical analysis of the road which we have traveled since 13 December 1981 it should be remembered that in the subsequent years much of our energy was directed at overcoming the results of the events of 1980-81.

Many difficult and complex problems still await solution; therefore if anyone should feel like succumbing to a comforting sense of triumph, it should be remembered that that triumph, final and valuable though it was, was won on the front of yesterday's battles, while the new fronts which will decide the country's future still require much decisive action. The fact that millions of nonparty citizens want to believe us, want to believe that the party will be able to guide the development of society in such a way that the crisis which gripped not only the economy will never be repeated, should be seen as an invaluable gain of the past few years, and especially of the campaign for the Sejm election and the precongress discussion. We have no right to betray that growing and strengthening faith.

Nowadays we often speak of challenges. Reflect for a moment, if you will, comrades, about one of the challenges that concerns us most closely. I mean the Soviet challenge, for that is what I call the direction chosen by the Soviet Communists at the 27th CPSU Congress. It is precisely the CPSU which so fascinates one today by the acuity of its vision of problems and situations, acuity which jolts consciences, quickens minds, and gives the courage and enthusiasm to take a firm grip on reality.

We may assume that imperialism will do its utmost to make it difficult for the Soviet Union to achieve the aims marked out. It is necessary to prevent imperialism doing this, not by means of war, but by creating a socialist formation and the conditions for the unfettered development of productive forces by intellect and speed of thought in the favorable solution of complex present-day problems.

Polish communists and millions of nonparty Poles with all their hearts wish the Soviet comrades success in the implementation of the course mapped out at the 27th CPSU Congress. However, good wishes are not enough. The deepest feeling of an ideology held in common is not enough. We must guide the country's socioeconomic development so that the results of our initiatives become a real, positive, partner-like contribution to the consolidation of socialism's spiritual and material values. Those initiatives must constantly be aimed at totally precluding factors which could give rise to a convulsive development of People's Poland, because for those convulsions an increasingly high price is paid each time, and not only by us, but by the whole socialist community and the whole world communist movement, as well as the CPSU, whose leader, Mikhail Gorbachev, yesterday in this hall uttered words which touched us deeply.

Comrade delegates, in Poland there continues to be a struggle as to who, in the next few years, will have a significant, visible influence over the minds of our countrymen: Will it be we, who conduct ourselves according to the Marxist-Leninist knowledge about the laws governing social development, or our opponents who, in what they write and say ever more obviously support the idea of Poland being the bulwark of Christianity, ever more visibly promulgate the concept of economic and social order -- which means nothing else but the desire to return to the system of capitalism. What are they counting on? They are counting on the fact that there will be a dimming of the memory of the hopeless situation of millions without work, without a place in factories, without land in the interwar period; counting on the impatience of the younger generation, on self-satisfaction in our ranks and, finally, on the support of the imperialist camp which, today as well as tomorrow, will strive to have Poland be the weakest link in the socialist community.

Underrating the foe would be an unforgivable political mistake, which is not the same foe as in 1980-81. Today's foe would no longer demonstrate so openly his enmity toward socialism. Today, he would not declare swaggeringly that, and I quote: The Army and the police are with us, and we will cope with security. Today he would not put forward a slogan about the struggle for power. He would aim at convincing society that he has a positive program. How can we counter those who do not give up efforts to turn back the course of history? First and foremost by having the courage to look reality in the face, and by the ability to draw conclusions from the changing internal and external conditions.

The results of the implementation to date of the economic reform do not accord with our expectations. The economy is not marching energetically along the road of intensification. The reasons for this situation are to be found, it would seem, in the incompleteness not so much of our solutions as of our actions. In the country which was poor and backward -- and Poland was such a country as little as 30 years ago -- there arose, quite clearly, a discrepancy between economic efficiency and the rationality of economic activities which preferred the qualifications and the productivity of those who were more highly qualified -- or even those who were shrewd -- and social justice which tells us to take care of those who are weaker and poorer. We tried to find solutions to this contradiction, not without mistakes and slipups, generally speaking in the spirit of social justice, and it is to this that we owe the great civilization advance of the nation. But we remain behind as far as efficiency and economic rationality are concerned. The times of backwardness and poverty have passed, but this contradiction remains in the social consciousness and makes itself felt in practice.

Today we must boldly and bravely, very boldly, accept this assumption: First and foremost, justice must be based on efficacy. The efficacy of work was raised to the highest level by Comrade Premier Zbigniew Messner in his speech yesterday.

So far, the state has primarily implemented the principles of justice through social decrees and economic decisions. It was a great achievement and this remains the case. However, justice guaranteed administratively, as it were, does not always provide an incentive for efficiency. We must be bolder in also introducing another kind of justice implemented by the economic mechanism and by economic factors. However, there are quite a number of factors which impede our taking a step in this direction since justice implemented by the economic mechanisms does not heed decrees, nor can it serve to coerce anything by applying various forms of pressure.

In this context I wish to draw attention to certain illnesses and weaknesses which unfortunately recur annually and which limit the dynamism of our socioeconomic system. I do not direct these remarks to anyone in particular, since I have in mind a social phenomena rooted, I think, in our consciousness.

First, vigorous action, not half measures, is needed to create conditions in the socialized sector of the economy -- and it is here that most Poles are employed -- which would make it possible to make maximum use of the individual's capacity for showing initiative. In the perception of society, the individual who shows great initiative and ambition quite frequently finds it hard to attain the goal he sets himself. Therefore, one must search for the reasons which underlie the current unsatisfactory situation. It seems that one such reason is the conviction -- one which has not yet been fully overcome -- that strong authorities are those which, as it is commonly put, control everything.

But having a hold on everything creates straitjackets woven of numerous decrees that limit the freedom of the producers. The human inclination to generalize negative phenomena, ones which are altogether difficult to avoid, especially during a period of such great historical change, is another reason. It so happens that in our eagerness to prevent such phenomena we decide to take steps which make one feel disinclined to take any risk at all, limiting the elbowroom of honest and dishonest people alike, of both slow and dynamic individuals.

Second, taking into account the fact that many substantial threats to the socialist system, characteristic of the first few years following the introduction of martial law, now belong to the past, we should more vigorously strengthen all forms of self-management -- that of workers, territorial, above all, and cooperative. There are many people today who fail to be convinced that what is really expected from them is that they share the responsibility, since, by using examples, they say that they do not have the final say.

Third, the social activeness of citizens makes it imperative that the citizen should discern cohesive thinking at every opportunity in the social and economic policies. Every day in the press you can read about numerous manifestations of the lack of cohesion.

Fourth, consistency in the functioning at all levels is a factor that stimulates the social activeness of citizens. It is not a quality we can be proud of. We love being active, we are consistent at the point of departure but by the halfway stage we already show disillusionment and, what is worse, we look around for a new action to embark on. It is difficult to calculate by what amount we thus reduce our national income as a result of these weaknesses. There is no doubt, however, that we sustain enormous material and moral losses.

Polish workers, technicians, and engineers want to work well. They also want to be able to draw proper salaries and to earn praise, which is a human frailty. But for this work to be fruitful, there must be production and social conditions to facilitate it. Arduous work to eliminate the weaknesses referred to above will make it easier to get those who really have no desire to work to face social opprobrium. Esteemed comrades, the internal policies were stimulated by the policy and struggle during the 5-year period that is nearing its end. This policy arose from the desire to defend socialism against its own weaknesses and deviations and against the threat posed by opponents who capitalized on and made use of them. This policy passed the test. Further successes in implementing the policy require a shift of stress. Above all, the question of modernization and giving dynamic content to socialism is the order of the day as is the matter of leading socialism out of the initial phase of development. This is the only way to guarantee that national support is obtained for the aims mapped out by our party. This is the only way to deprive our domestic and foreign opponents of influence over the young generation of Poles. Thank you for your attention. [applause]

Congress Press Conference

LD020311 Warsaw Domestic Service in Polish 1700 GMT 1 Jul 86

[Report on press conference at 10th PZPR Congress press center in Warsaw on 1 July, with Marian Wozniak, PZPR Central Committee Politburo member and Central Committee secretary, and Zbigniew Michalek, PZPR Central Committee secretary -- all except announcer's statements recorded]

[Text] At the congress press center the latest press conference was held today with representatives of the party leadership taking part.

The theme of today's press conference was the basic directions of the party's economic and agricultural policies. Marian Wozniak, member of the Central Committee Politburo and Central Committee secretary; Zbigniew Michalek, Central Committee ecretary; Stanislaw Gabrielski, Marek Holdakouwski, and Stefan Zawodzinski, heads of Central Committee departments; and Stanislaw Gebala, minister of labor, wages, and social affairs met with journalists.

The basic directions of the party's economic policy were presented by Marian Wozniak. He said, inter alia:

[Wozniak] Before the congress it was the general view that economic matters and, at the broadest, socioeconomic matters could and would occupy the foreground in congress discussions, and the resolution of those matters of economic acceleration was the element that would at that moment become a political factor. If we are to view this then as [word indistinct] (?between) economics and politics, I will restrict myself to economic matters.

We are indeed in a situation in which we wish, we have the political will, and we have potential organizational and material capabilities to effect real changes toward intensive management methods. This is not actually the first time this statement has been made. For the first time, however, we are in a situation in which we effectively have a restriction on the means of production and factors of production, which we shall not lift this time by any means other than intensive action.

The economic reform is partly a reform of economic and financial mechanisms and instruments. However, the other part of it is the reform of man, of the attitude, motivation, and behavior of people. This second element is the task for us.

It must be said that the attitude of people and thus, the work of the party in the factory, the works, and the institutions may be directed toward molding innovative attitudes to fight for something. Perhaps this is something traditional, but I think that in our system it still has a great deal of importance. However, that psychological barrier has not been surmounted although we have dozens of examples of enterprises functioning in a highly modern fashion.

The second matter is the organization barrier, the management barrier. Since we have had the capability for many years to function in the work place on an extensive basis, we have a low level structural efficiency and management efficiency. I think this is an important element for the congress.

When it comes to matters that are now coming into the foreground... here it is quite clear that I can only cite the Politburo report on food; Comrade Michalek will speak about housing, education, health, the environment, and fair shares, as Comrade Jaruzelski put it. We are not placing as much emphasis on inflation, but I would like to state clearly that when we speak of development processes and, further, when we say this is tantamount to equilibrium being restored as far as many elements are concerned -- well, it is here that the word inflation fits in, something that is the most vexatious thing for us on a day-to-day basis. We are placing a great deal of stress on matters of scientific-technical progress, although with the knowledge that not everything we do works out. I want to draw attention to two things: To the connection, the organizational connection, as it were, between the work of science, industry, and the economy -- that's the first thing. The second thing is the establishment of small enterprises of an innovative nature.

We are very advanced in this -- establishing small enterprises whose task it will be to implement a definite idea, a license.

To conclude, regardless of what is said at the congress, the political leadership is proceeding with determination, determination that is the product of circumstances and conditions. We simply must change the existing mode of operation of structures and of the economy in favor of intensive methods. This means overcoming very serious resistance not only from inanimate material but from people also.

[Unidentified reporter] Subsequently Zbigniew Michalek outlined the directions of the party's agrarian policy:

[Michalek] As opposed to Comrade Wozniak, my role at the congress is relatively comfortable. As far as the congress resolutions and proposals are concerned, we do not want to change our agrarian policy, which was set out at the Ninth Extraordinary Congress when its goals and criteria were set and when we said that its chief goal was to improve the food supplies to the population. During this process we would like to attain self-sufficiency and, at the same time, we would like to improve the living conditions in the countryside. During discussions we can check the extent to which we have managed to attain this goal.

The agrarian policy, which we have been implementing for a few years now, rests on such basic principles as the alliance between workers and peasants. Properly speaking this agrarian policy has always rested on this, but we have taken it out of the oblivion to which it had been consigned, dusted it off a bit, and added two very interesting truths and statements that I would like to cite now. The first one is that the worker and the peasant live by the work done by their two hands and that neither the worker nor the peasant exploit anyone. If this is true, it makes it possible to state that socialism can be built in our country given the agrarian structure we now have in our country.

You know, ladies and gentlemen, that 76 percent of our land is in individual farms and we are of the opinion that they have a role to play in making life better in Poland. Indeed, over the past few years we have been attaining quite decent results in agriculture; we have managed to increase output. We have managed to increase it to such an extent that we have managed to resolve quite a few issues tackled in the Ninth Congress resolutions, political issues, including the constitutional supplement concerning the permanent nature of individual farms.

We are trying to have an economic policy that, properly speaking, boils down to this: Production yields profit for those that are good. There can be no economic system in which profits are there for the taking by everyone and in which everyone praises us. We have decided to live in a kind of symbiosis and to be praised a lot by good farmers!

[Unidentified reporter] Subsequently, the guests replied to questions. Not many of them were asked because Marian Wozniak and Zbigniew Michalek's introductory remarks were very concrete and detailed. However, there were certain questions that were interesting.

[Bobinski] Editor Bobinski, from the FINANCIAL TIMES

[Bobinski] I would like to ask Mr Wozniak to apply what he said about accelerating the reform to the matter of prices. The assumption is that it would be desirable to achieve market equilibrium faster. Could you tell us how you imagine the growth of prices over the next few years.

[Wozniak] To view the matter of coming to grips with inflation merely within the framework of price movements is, as you yourself are well aware, too much of an oversimplification. If no other processes are set in motion, like increasing labor productivity and increased output, then we would be left only with prices going up and this situation would actually cause a regression, since higher and higher prices would simply cause the standard of living to drop.

As for our discussion regarding this matter, it basically boils down to this: Do we proceed by the method of gradually decreasing the scale of the annual price hikes or else, do we proceed by big leaps and attain equilibrium over, say, 2 to 3 years? Well this question ceases to be an economic question; it becomes a political question since a large annual scale of price increases perforce becomes a scale which, for a large proportion of the population amounts to a decline in the living standard over a given period of 12 months.

This is not an avoiding maneuver on my part; I think this matter will be resolved not with theoretical economic solutions, but by way of a consensus, to which can include the government and the trade unions, broadly speaking. I would like to say that in all probability we will discuss this issue, probably during the last day of the congress, during a discussion of the congress resolution, since this subject belongs among the most difficult. In all likelihood, the solution will boil down to this: That we shall make it incumbent upon the government to accelerate the reform, while taking into account -- and we do mention this frequently -- the conditions of life and protection of the weakest strata of the population.

[Bobinski] Another issue is the proposed director status bill. While we are on the subject of strengthening the reform, it seems the Planning Commission proposes a draft that will radically (?change) the situation of self-management vis a vis the director in the enterprise?

[Wozniak] A good self-management enterprise will, sooner or later, realize that it must have a good director if it is to yield big profits.

[Unidentified moderator] Thank you very much, Editor Leszek (Pawlowicz).

[Pawlowicz] I have a question for Mr. Michalek. I have in mind the Farmers' Foundation [Fundacja Rolnicza]. Months and years of arduous negotiations have passed on the participation of the socialized farms, duties, taxes, and so on and so forth. In the meantime, potential donors have become disillusioned and this sum has begun to decline. Do you think it is still possible to get this undertaking off the ground? What, in general, is your view on this?

[Michalek] To give a concrete answer, I state that it is possible, on the condition that the government and church commission jointly and truly define what constitutes a priority in agriculture and [word indistinct]. However, the matter of whether the state agricultural farms would also be taking the money has never even been considered. What has always been at stake here is aid for individual farmers.

[Unidentified reporter] Other questions revolved around the development of exports, the gradual organization of production of machines and equipment in enterprises, and the necessity of stopping production of certain goods and begining the production of other more up-to-date, goods. This was our account from the congress press center.

Majka Describes Team Debates

LD012154 Warsaw Domestic Service in Polish 1800 GMT 1 Jul 86

[Excerpts from news conference by 10th PZPR Congress press spokesman Jerzy Majka in the congress press center in Warsaw on 1 July -- recorded]

[Text] [Majka] More than 300 participants took the floor during the debates. More than 500 delegates who had expressed a wish to speak presented their statements or their precisely formulated motions to the secretariats of individual problem teams. Statements made within the teams are treated in the same way as those made in plenary discussions and are used, in the end, to work out congress resolutions and the way they should be implemented since some of them have a more implementory character. This way we create a situation in which, theoretically, every delegate to the congress can be not only a participant who listens to what others have to say but can also take an active part in the course of the debates. Second, in this way we create a situation in which the majority of delegates and invited guests have the opportunity to take advantage of such possibilities.

Characterizing today's discussion one must say that these discussions within problem teams were very discerning and critical; the participants did not take the opportunity to boast of what they have already done or what is good. This discussion was an attempt to discuss those matters that are difficult or that constitute weak points and to seek ways and means of finding solutions to them.

[Unidentified reporter] Thank you very much. Please, there are questions to be put to the congress press spokesman. Kay Withers from the BALTIMORE TIMES.

[Withers, speaking in English followed by Polish translation] Mr Majka, could I return to the queston of the third group -- ideology, propaganda, and the problem of national reconciliation. Could you tell us what exactly was said about the problem of national reconciliation.

[Majka] The assessments concerning national reconciliation were assessments showing the great progress that has been made in this area in recent years. On the other hand, what was discussed in relation to further actions? We spoke among other things about more dialogue -- also looking for dialogue with those who are not fully convinced, and those who have certain doubts -- being necessary in our press and information activities. In fact, the issue of national accord cannot be viewed as something that can or cannot be achieved at some stage. There is nothing fixed here. Five years ago, we attempted to find accord -- and did find accord with a significant part of society -- as to the way to bring the country out of that deep breakdown it found itself in and out of the split dividing society.

We have achieved significant results in this area, which is reflected by the difference between the social atmosphere in Poland a few years ago -- or even 2 years ago -- and today. But this is not sufficient; this is not the end of the problem. We now want to achieve accord on the direction in which the country is going to develop and what changes will take place in society during the coming 5-year period. We also want to achieve accord on the long-term prospects -- in a dozen or so years, at the beginning of the next century, and the next millenium.

[Text] Warsaw, June 2 -- Closed debates started at the 10th PUWP Congress following a short break. The lists of candidates for the party's central authorities and controlling bodies are being discussed. The returns commission will also be elected.

Gdansk Party Official Speaks

LD021621 Warsaw Domestic Service in Polish 1347 GMT 2 Jul 86

[Speech by Marian Truszkowski, first secretary of primary party organization at Gdansk "Lenin" shipyard, at 10th PZPR Congress in Warsaw on 2 July -- live]

[Excerpt] [Truszkowski] Comrades: For several years now the eyes of Poles have turned toward the Gdansk shipyard named after Lenin on many occasions -- more often than not with anxiety and fear. You see, the shipyard had become the stage for activities by forces hostile to our socialist state. With skill and using methods of political struggle, demagogy, and often psychological pressure, they exploited justified workers' aspirations precisely against the working class itself.

This was the case in August 1980 and December 1981. The party organization at the shipyard was also subjected to such attempts. Part of our comrades succumbed to these influences and this weakened the whole organization at the shipyard. This is why we concentrated all our party work on, for instance, giving shipyard workers our views on the activities of the leadership of the former Solidarity -- activities that had less and less in common with the cause of the workers and socialism. But we did not have enough strength, and it was not only up to us to defend and implement the resolutions of the Ninth Extraordinary PZPR Congress. This was a dramatic period.

If today I can state that it was overcome, then this can be attributed to party members and workers bound strongly to the party through the concepts of socialism and the shipyard. It was they, first and foremost, who actively supported the decision and resolution of the seventh plenum of the PZPR Central Committee. It was with determination and, on more than one occasion, with personal valor that we convinced the work force, which was airing every view under the sun, that we were right. We highly prized the numerous contacts that the representatives of the central party and state authorities had with the work force of the Gdansk shipyard. It is a pity that these have been stopped recently.

At the inspiration of the party a trade union, which now has about 6,200 members, has come into being at the shipyard. This is half of the shipyard's work force. The youth organization is active. The second term of office for the self-government organs, in which members of the party plan an active part, is already under way. As a result of the tremendous effort of the whole party organization the standard of political and economic knowledge in our work force (?is changing). Moods are settling down: from attitudes of lack of trust, the indifference, and now, more and more widespread sociopolitical and economic activity.

In order to gain a better assessment of the difference in the mood of the work force, it is enough to compare the atmosphere present at the 1983 meeting with representatives of the central authorities and the atmosphere of the welcome given to the first secetary of our party in January 1985 as well as the large and active participation of the shipyard workers in production deeds and political events. Proof of this was furnished by the fact that 7,000 of our workers took part in this year's May Day parade.

Comrades, socialism is a system in which the main cocreator of the national income -- the working class -- has a right to joint decisionmaking not only in regard to its distribution but also in regard to the organization of the whole nation's life. This right found concrete expression after the Ninth PZPR Congress.

ZSL Official Speaks

LD022136 Warsaw Domestic Service in Polish 1740 GMT 2 Jul 86

[Speech by Barbara Wojciechowska, deputy chairman of of Krosno Provinced ZSL Committee, at 10th PZPR Congress in Warsaw on 2 July -- live]

[Excerpts] After the August strikes of the 1980's, I was appointed a member of the party Central Control Commission. In this capacity I was a guest at the Ninth Congress. The party youth, earnestly searching in the atmosphere of renewal and destruction, did not want to believe that apart from the party and its error, the opposition also existed -- the subversive opposition -- and that leading the country required caution, strength, and time. This is a normal biological reaction in any rebellion -- the October 1956 events took place along the same lines, except then, the party was less numerous and some still remember that it still had a party aktiv that was toughened by the war. I remember, nevertheless, that even then the structures were breaking down and a number of comrades who gave themselves to the cause were eliminated, in particular, workers activists. This rebounded in later years as the party had lost the true foundation of the workers activists in its executive apparatus, in spite of its verbal assurances about the role of the working class and so on. Is it therefore a good or a bad thing that at today's congress I am a candidate to the Central Committee membership for the second time? Is it good or bad that the very same party organization that eliminated me from the party activity before the Ninth Congress has now given me all the votes, recommending me earlier on for the post of rector of the higher education establishment that I manage?

I became the rector at the recommendation of the party during the period of martial law -- the fourth successive rector since the August strikes. In the meantime, there were two other one-day-wonder rectors who were accepted and refused, from left and right. Following the introduction of the law on higher education establishments I had to give in to the so-called democratic elections, in spite of the fact that with the organized opposition we knew that I was to lose. We thought, and I stress this here today, that to show one's views as the duty of a party activist. Working all our lives in one institution -- and many of us do not move up to work in the party apparatus and spend their whole working life with the people they start it with -- we have the duty to the academic milieu, work place -- wherever one works. I wish to stress this too: The role of the party member does not just mean success; it also means failure.

It was the naivete of the Gierek era to imagine that one could think about a life full of success as if in an American technicolor film. There is no such life, there won't be. Even though I believe there will be more successes.

All this does not have the aim of telling the comrades here about my life story -- I would not have dared. But I want to stress, and I think I am right -- and I am speaking at my third congress -- and in this hall here I see the faces and hear the voices of the people who are now dead -- I think that here the party went back to its deepest reserves, because it is not just me who is making a comback. popiela is also coming back and a number of other comrades who tested themselves in their party activity. I think this is some kind of a new phenomenon. I do not know if it is a positive one, but nevertheless, it is new and worth emphasizing. I would also like to point out the delegates from the Ninth Congress. As a guest to that congress I could see how these young comrades were maturing in the political struggle. They did not know what kind of congress they were coming to and what congress they were leaving; many of them did very well.

At the voivodship party conference I quoted a sentence which, perhaps, I can repeat today: Many of the comrades here [words indistinct]. This comrade said to me: Madam, I became a party secretary where 50 percent of the people are natives and 50 percent are from behind the Bug [ex-Polish territories now in USSR]. I am not a farmer because I have just started studying agriculture. What would you say, madam, after this Ninth Congress; what would you say to these people? I then said to him: You know, comrade, I would say: Perhaps things will be a little bit more just a bit more patriotic. I do not know if I was right. I did not have a clue about what was going to happen. This comrade became a true activist.

In this room here there are many delegates from the Ninth Congress who did very well; in such difficult times on can only be tested at work. It was as if we were on a plate, we were in constant political battle; there were no promotions when they are still afraid of us [words indistinct] still avoiding us. I had my speech all written down but I have made a mess of it. [laughter, applause]

When we were in the elections, former party members and party papers attacked us by asking what we said in the past. I want to say in this connection something that may be relevant to the intelligentsia milieu. A bad phenomenon exists. When one looks at the departmental councils -- and these are perhaps better than others, since we are stuck firmly in real life -- we deal with sick people and this keeps us close to reality. Looking at other universities and so on, about 20 percent of the people, or thereabouts, have children in permanent political emigration -- no political, money-earning emigration, [indistinct words]. Most of them work very well. I said this in the elections and I would like to repeat this again today since one has to deal with these intelligentsia milieu, as with any people in general, with sensitivity. If someone is alone in his old age and his own children are abroad, then this is simply a disaster, even if they earn foreign currency there. But there were cases, in Gdansk in particular, where some of the people who had their children abroad sent other people's children into the street fighting. This must not be done. Because one must stay [words indistinct]. That is why I think that, of course, people are still in pain and this has to be understood, but we must make sure that we are reliable. This, I think, is most important. We must all be credible, as party members, as Catholics -- and there are many Catholics who have been Catholics for 40 years and are now being pushed out by others who are now joining this religion [applause].

We must simply be honest. I would like to say this in conclusion: People are expecting an awful lot from this congress. Perhaps I would even put it slightly paradoxically; nonparty people expect perhaps more than party members. People believe that efficiency will improve, that discipline will improve. Discipline does not mean being touch with people, but some normal kind of work must exist. [applause]

I was asked about conversations with the opposition and I am right in the middle of a transition since half of these opposition leaders worked with me. In those conversations there was a lot of posturing; people can sense falsehood. That is why I think -- and this is how I understand the speech of Comrade General Jaruzelski, sorry if I get it wrong -- that we must stop talking to the opposition. We have already talked with them so much that they know our views. Let us simply get down to work. It is embarassing to say to a young man: Sir, you said this and that then. This is simply the physiology of his age; he said one thing earlier and another later, but the point is what he does.

Generally in life it is quite often of little importance what one says; what one does is important. That is why I think that -- and this is how I feel this congress, where everyone spoke of their own small matters -- this is very important. We have elected comrades to deal with grand politics; let us deal with our own matters. [applause]

One more thing -- I am terribly irritated by our television. What irratates me is this constant talk about whether the authorities are liked or disliked. After all, at home nobody asks a child whether he likes his parents. The authorities must be effective and must have respect; as far as liking is concerned, this applies to a completely different field of activity. [laughter and prolonged applause]

Elections Conducted

LD022251 Warsaw PAP in English 2141 GMT 2 Jul 86

[Text] Warsaw, July 2: Today, on the fourth day of the 10th PUWP Congress, now under way here, the plenary discussion was resumed at 9:00. At noon, during a closed-door debate the congress started to discuss candidatures for the PUWP central authorities. Speaking on behalf of the electoral commission, its chairman, Marian Wozniak, put forward proposals concerning the issue.

In tune with the principles -- passed by the congress -- defined in the regulations of the election of delegates, authorities and inspection bodies in the PUWP, the list of candidates for the PUWP Central Committee included 263 people, the list to the central audit and review commission -- 150 people. All the proposals of candidatures were put forward by voivodship delegations which had examined them comprehensively and taken into consideration all the criteria a candidate to the PUWP central authorities should fulfill. Candidates enjoy great political, public and professional prestige and have confidence of basic party cells they are members of. They agreed to have their names included in the lists of candidates.

During the open voting the congress passed the presented lists of candidates for the PUWP central authorities. The delegates also elected a 95-strong returns commission and appointed Tadeusz Czechowicz its chairman.

Thirty six delegates took the floor during the plenary discussion which lasted till 20:00 today. Speaking on behalf of the congress presidium, Ryszard Lubieniecki, a machine adjuster and first secretary of the PUWP department organization at the Feliks Dzierzynski Truck Plant in Starachowice (Kielce Voivodship), who chaired the final part of the plenary discussion today, put forward a motion to close the plenary discussions. The congress agreed to the motion. All in all eight-three delegates took the floor during the plenary meetings and one hunred and nine gave their speeches to the protocol.

The final part of the debates was held behind closed door and had to do with the election of the PUWP central authorities. The results of the elections will be known tomorrow.

Press Briefed on Foreign Policy

LD022305 Warsaw Domestic Service in Polish 1700 GMT 2 Jul 86

[Report by correspondent Jerzy Malczynski and Marek Kassa on news conference given by Marian Orzechowski, candidate member of the PZPR Central Committee Politburo and minister of foreign affairs, in the 10th PZPR Congress press center in Warsaw on 2 July; with Ernest Kucza, head of the PZPR Central Committee Foreign Affairs Department, and Tadeusz Olechowski, deputy minister of foreign affairs; conducted by unidentified moderator]

[Text] Today's conference at the 10th PZPR Congress press center was devoted to Poland's foreign policy and those parts of the discussion at the congress that touched on it. Marian Orzechowski, candidate member of the Politburo and minister of foreign affairs, met foreign and Polish journalists. He said, in part:

[Begin recording] [Orzechowski] Matters relating to peace, security, and disarmament, especially in Europe, form the pivot of our interests. The implementation of our internal development plans and the strengthening of our position on the international arena depend decisively on our role and place in the community of socialist states. We are open to the world, not just Europe. We unfailingly support the peoples of Africa, Asia, Latin America in their just aspirations aimed at emancipation and at strengthening their political and economic independence. We have strengthened relations with many of these countries and we shall continue to strengthen them. We remember, and we have repeated this on many occasions, that these countries did not join the U.S. policy of sanctions when we were going through our most difficult period; they adopted a sympathetic and friendly stance toward us, gave us political support, and intensified economic cooperation with Poland. Such things have always been highly valued, are highly valued, and will continue to be highly valued. Traditionally, we also highly value the activities of the Nonaligned Movement and its role in international politics in the struggle for peace and just economic relations.

The development of international economic cooperation was one of the directions that has been discussed a great deal at the congress. The present world is living under the pressure of the negative effects of many economic problems. One can solve many of them only on a multilateral basis. What I mean are such things as unbalanced development of the economies of individual states and regions, imbalances in world trade, increases in indebtedness, and threats to the national environment. We stress that these are the joint problems of more than one continent, of more than one system, and of more than one bloc of states. These are problems on a global scale that apply to us all as inhabitants of this planet.

We can state with satisfaction that more and more governments and more and more political forces in the West are departing from a policy that is mutually harmful and profoundly unrealistic. We realize that the normalization of relations in our country and the growing understanding in the West of the sense of everything that has happened in Poland are the reason behind this. Thus, we are ready to normalize and improve relations with all Western countries. The basis for this -- and we shall continue to repeat this -- must be an acceptance of the social, political, and territorial realities that exist in Poland, respect for the sovereignty and equality of states and the universally accepted principles of international law.

The normalization of relations between Poland and Western countries is not just a matter of bilateral relations, it has a broad European dimension; this particularly concerns our relations with the FRG.

[Moderator] Thank you very much. We have questions next: Kevin Ruane of the BBC.

[Ruane speaking in English followed by Polish translation] In his speech to the congress on Sunday [29 June], General Jaruzelski spoke of the need to call a conference of representatives of communist and workers' parties to outline their struggle for peace. Has there been any response to this proposal? [end recording]

This question was answered by Ernest Kucza, head of the PZPR Central Committee Foreign Affairs Department.

[Begin recording] [Kulcza] We are treating the statement contained in the Central Committee's report as an idea that our party is presenting. We have had initial reactions from those delegates from fraternal parties present at our 10th Congress saying that this is an interesting proposal. We hope that within the framework of a continuing process the specifics of this idea will crystallize.

[Moderator] Thank you very much. Now the editor, [name indistinct], of ANSA.

[ANSA editor in French with superimposed Polish translation] Could you give us some specific details concerning the likely planned visit to Italy by Comrade Wojciech Jaruzelski, chairman of the Polish Council of State and first secretary of the PZPR Central Committee? [end recording]

Tadeusz Olechowski, deputy foreign affairs minister, replied.

[Begin recording] [Olechowski] There is no doubt that the present state of our relations with Italy should be described as good and constructive, and I would like to reply to the question in the following way. Of course our relations have matured to such a stage that they should be raised to a new level, and of course I am not going to conceal the fact that both countries take a positive view of this idea of a top-level visit.

[Moderator] Thank you very much. Editor Sucha, from Polish Television News.

[Sucha] Minister, what further role do you foresee for Poland, especially in East-West relations, in light of the course of the 10th PZPR Congress deliberations so far.

[Orzechowski] First of all it is a feeling of the weight our country carries in European relations. We are situated in the middle of Europe. In size, power, and importance we are the second state of the Warsaw Pact. We have regained our rightful place in the socialist community. We are consolidating it and developing it. The second factor is our energetic activity arising from this awareness.

My travels in Europe, as well as throughout the world, have shown me one thing that not all of us can appreciate within the country: Basically, Europe and the wider world need Poland's energy. This is a very substantial incentive to us. We shall continue to put forth such initiatives.

Finally, the third element defining Poland's role depends on the open nature of its foreign policy. I have spoken of this in the Sejm, and after all, this is not my view alone: Poland wants to be a friend to all peoples and all states that treat her in the same manner.

[Moderator] Thank you very much. Editor Bernard Margueritte of LE FIGARO:

[Margueritte speaking in Polish] You said, minister, that Polish foreign policy should be guided from the viewpoint of the interests of the Polish economy. But you also placed a great deal of emphasis on ideological assumptions in Polish foreign policy. Is there not a certain contradiction here? What is the main sphere of Polish foreign policy? Is it pragmatism or ideology?

[Orzechowski] Polish foreign policy has always been guided, is guided, and will continue to be guided by certain principles that you would call ideology or the outright imposition of the ideological view upon foreign policy, but that are to us merely a manifestation of the integrity of that same policy, ensuing first of all from Poland's permanent interests, from the fact that Poland lies here and not on the moon or in any other part of the globe, and from the fact that it has certain allies and neighbors, and that it has had the experience it has had. These are the permanent principles -- you call them ideological principles -- that determine the entire direction of our foreign policy.

At the same time, it is a practical policy, a pragmatic one in the sense that it does not indulge in wishful thinking, that we are not guided by emotion or sentiment but by the real interests of the people and the state both now and in the future. We believe, and we can give proof that the basis of our foreign policy is the alliance with the USSR. This has nothing to do with the fact that we wish to obtain credit from Western countries on a normal and equal basis and that we wish to cooperate economically with the FRG, France, and Italy. In cooperating with these countries, we are not, after all, giving up our principles, and we do not demand this from any of our partners. We want to remain what we are, but at the same time, we want to trade on terms that are favorable to us all; business is business. I believe that the conviction that good business can be done with Poland is already making is way in many countries of Western Europe. [end recording]

JARUZELSKI REELECTED PARTY FIRST SECRETARY

LD031041 Warsaw Domestic Service in Polish 0951 GMT 3 Jul 86

[From the 10th PZPR Congress session in Warsaw's Palace of Culture and Science -- live]

[Text] [session chairman Barcikowski] I ask Comrade Jozef Cyzrek to take the floor, to tell us the results of the election of the first secretary of the Central Committee.

[Czyrek] I wish to inform the comrade delegates that the Central Committee, at its first session, has elected Comrade Wojciech Jaruzelski [applause] to the post of first secretary of the Central Committee, in accordance with your recommendation, with one abstention and hence unamimously. [applause]

WOZNIAK COMPARES ATTITUDES OF 9TH, 10TH CONGRESSES

LD292052 Budapest Television Service in Hungarian 1700 GMT 29 Jun 86

[Interview with Marian Wozniak, PZPR Central Committee secretary, by unidentified reporter in Warsaw; date not given; Wozniak in Polish with superimposed Hungarian translation -- recorded]

[Excerpts] [Reporter] In Warsaw, we asked one of the Central Committee secretaries to tell us how the present Congress differs from preceding ones.

[Wozniak] Well, the difference is fundamental; it is fundamental in the party and in the country. The congress that is about to be held is a regular one; it accords with the rules of organization. As I said, the difference is in the party itself. It is a question of a different party. As we often say, it is the same party but is by no means the same as it was. Five years ago the party was in enormous danger and today it is aware of these threats more than ever. The past 5 years have hardened the party. The PZPR today functions in a fundamentally different way. It is a well-known fact that a large number of people left the party and those who stayed in it had to shoulder every burden of the acute, almost merciless, political struggle. This was the case especially in 1980 and 1981, and later. That is why I think that today the party is much more resistant to the opposition. At the same time -- and I would draw your attention to this -- the techniques and methods of the party's activity have changed significantly. Second, with regard to the methods of working -- to use a journalistic phrase -- I would say that we work in full view, very openly in every party organization.

As to what most of the debates were about, well, this was the schedule of the introduction of reform. Reform carries with it a picture of a better life. This is very important, because one must pay attention to the following: The economic mechanism is only one side of the reform, the other is the ensemble of people's attitudes, intentions, and views. Today we are of the view that 40-45 percent of the enterprises work well within the reform. The other 50 percent of them, on the other hand, do not do so yet. They are the ones who apply for relief and concessions. I would say that a kind of rivalry is beginning. The good enterprises say: Put a stop to concessions more quickly, because the bad have not merited them. All this has to be judged politically.

For this reason, the rate at which the reform is enforced has become a political matter. The rhythm of changes causes phenomena such as the acceleration of enterprise bankruptcy. There might come about such acute interventions as a reduction in employment, a necessity to change jobs or qualifications, and a rapid increase in work productivity. Of course, this cannot be attained from one year to the next. A new enterprise leading staff must be trained for this. In addition, this process must be extended over several years and all this goes with inflation and price rises, which are much debated in Poland. In simplified terms, I would say that we strive to balance the economy. We could create a market balance with a single 25 percent price increase, by raising the price of every article. This, however, would be an explosive that would blow up the economy and society. In other words, we have to stretch this 25 percent over a number of years. Thus, this year there will be an 8 to 9 percent price increase, so society can gradually get used to it.

[Reporter] The private farmers who cultivate three-quarters of the arable land can now plan with certainty. It will soon be possible to end meat rationing as well. But how will it go on?

The average 4 to 5 hectare small farms do not mean a secure future. In Poland, supply is a political issue because one of the causes of the strikes 6 years ago was the raising of food prices. It continues to be an important question: What is the state of social agreement and of opposition in Poland today?

[Wozniak] This is a very interesting question. I think we would have to say that Poland is a normally functioning country. But together with this, as a characteristic of present times, the concept of opposition is present in social awareness. In the seventies we fought shy of recognizing even the existence of any kind of opposition. So, this is a completely new thing. What the West calls Polish opposition means groups that strive to overthrow socialism. On the other hand, we may speak about the concept even of socialist opposition. For example, our state functions on the basis of cooperation between the PZPR and the two allied parties, that is the ZSL and the SD. These two confederates of ours agree with the basic principles, but they see a whole series of issues differently. At the same time, with the consistent realization of democratization, we brought into being a critical mechanism of the party, and not such a bad one either. This makes it possible for the party to function in society differently from before. I may say that it is also an achievement of recent years that at the membership meetings criticism has become natural. What is important here is not who criticizes, but whether there is a constructive proposal behind the criticism. Criticism without proposals gives no results. Precisely for this reason I would like to draw your attention to what we call the policy of agreement and struggle. We struggle against the opponents of socialism, but we seek agreement with every Pole who wants to build Poland within the framework of socialism.

MAJKA BRIEFS PRESS ON CONGRESS PROCEEDINGS

LD302218 Warsaw Domestic Service in Polish 2006 GMT 30 Jun 86

[Press conference with Jerzy Majka, 10th PZPR Congress spokesman, at the contress press center on 30 June; reporters introduced by unidentified moderator -- recorded]

[Text] [Moderator] Editor Sylwestern (Szawas) from NOWE DROGI.

[Szawas] What do you do, Comrade Majka, as the 10th Congress press spokesman, see as new in Mikhail Gorbachev's Warsaw speech in relation to the previous speeches by the Soviet party leader?

[Majka] I think that in no previous public statements has there been such an extensive analysis as in this speech of the issues resulting from relations between our parties, that is, in interparty and interstate cooperation, (?and) the relations between Poland and the Soviet Union as nations and countries. This spee;ch constituted an expression of an attitude toward these matters. I highly value the words in this speech that contained expressions of support and approval, and the friendly party evaluation with regard to our analyses and the direction of development that we have worked out. The statement that the speech constitutes a profound Marxist-Leninist analysis of the Polish reality is a very (?correct) statement.

[Moderator] Thank you. Editor Lozinski from TRYBUNA LUDU.

[Lozinski] In his speech Comrade Gorbachev confirmed all the disarmament proposals that have been presented by the general secretary since 15 January. Is the fact that such a confirmation was uttered in Warsaw of any possible influence on the course of some of the negotiations and on the course of the future U.S.-Soviet dialogue on arms limitation?

[Majka] I think the course of the future dialogue is influenced most of all by the determination of the Soviet Union, and Mikhail Gorbachev personally, to tackle disarmament issues and to extracate the world from this dangerous course. I think it is symbolical that the will to act in that direction was expressed in Warsaw, in our country, which was affected so badly by the war. The fact that this has been said once again is also of equal importance. What will be decisive to the future international dialogue, is, I would say again, this determination.

[Moderator] Editor Stanislaw Lopuszanski, please.

[Lopuszanski] I would like to refer to the assessment of the discussion at the congress. You see, I am under the impression that the discussion is revolving more around local and regional problems. It is as if less is being said about national and state topics. Does the comrade share my assessment?

[Majka] I would not agree with such an assessment, although it might be apt for certain speeches. Let us start like this: The speech by Minister Siwicki related, of course, to Polish national matters. The speech by Zdzislaw Kaczmarek, scientific secretary of the Polish Academy of Sciences, did the same, as did the speech by Professor Rychlewski. (?If) one takes into account individual speeches one might prove that the majority of speeches want, nevertheless, to formulate here certain assessments or certain postulates relating to matters which are far broader than their own milieu. People are managing this, however, and I would say, to a varying degree of art in speech making. I think that workers are making a high number of speeches. In this connection [word indistinct] generalizations do not sound like a speech by a professional politician.

[Moderator] [Word indistinct] (?Williams) from the BALTIMORE SUN.

[(?Williams) in English followed by Polish translation] Mr Majka, is there any provision for discussion of the various speeches among the delegates. As far as I could see today it was just speech after speech, often not related. Is there going to be discussions after the speakers as there was in 1981?

[Majka] It would be difficult to agree that in 1981 there was time for discussion after the end of the speeches. It seems to me that this discussion was held at various levels of the Ninth Congress in the same way as is happening at this congress.

The speech by Alfred Miodowicz, in which he formulated the attitude of trade unions to the draft economic plan, was a polemical attitude to some sectors of the plan, including an attempt for proportional distribution of resources and forces in the plan, while trade unions would prepare concentration on some issues. So, it is not free of discussion. Looking carefully at shorthand notes on individual speeches, one can find many parts of speeches that are an attempt to look more carefully at the issues, or perhaps see them in a different way than the report.

REPORT HIGHLIGHTS CONSISTENCY, DETERMINATION

LD011410 Warsaw PAP in English 1100 GMT 1 Jul 86

[Text] Warsaw, July 1: The Government report delivered at the congress by the premier June 30 did not contain spectacular promises or announcements of spectacular moves. It confirmed once again the consistent efforts to continue and more effectively execute the principle of efficiency and rationality of economic actions.

What draws attention is the clear statement that this uneasy road will undoubtedly witness contradictions and conflicts. It is obvious that forcing rational attitudes in enterprises and in the economy at large cannot proceed without pain, hence we must arrive at an effective economy through tough financial principles and economic constraint.

Special stress is to be laid on countering the causes of inflation and on recoving economic equilibrium. There is no such thing as miraculous solutions in the economy. There is why the premier spoke about well-known ways of achieving these goals. These ways are, by the way, constantly being discussed in Poland. There simply are no others. What is sought is putting the brakes to the rise in production costs, limiting non-profitable economic acitivity, bringing down subsidies and more broad use of equilibrium prices.

The diagnosis is, therefore, clear. success depends, above all, on consistency and determination in the implementation of the programme of mending the economy.

CZYREK VIEWS DISCUSSIONS OF DRAFT PROGRAM

AU301218 Warsaw TRYBUNA LUDU in Polish 26 Jun 86 p 3

[Interview with Jozef Czyrek, PZPR Politburo member, Central Committee secretary, and chairman of the PZPR Program Commission, by Piotr Rzadca: "Our Vision of the Future"]

[Excerpts] [Rzadca] The draft party program has greatly stimulated people's interest in the vision of our country's development. What about the discussion of this program?

[Czyrek] The most valuable features of this discussion were its genuine and committed nature. People aired their views out of inner compulsion and out of profound conviction that they can influence Poland's development. There was nothing formal about this discussion. Another striking feature was the fact that people were less interested in harking back to the past. Most of them looked forward to the future -- how to program the future and how to achieve the appointed tasks.

[Rzadca] The discussion revealed the people's basic agreement with party policy and the lines of the country's development. However, there were differences in views on some issues....

[Czyrek] I would regard these differences as a kind of impatience and as a wish to accelerate the process of implementing the solutions suggested by the party program and its ideological principles. The discussion made it clear that these soltuions are accepted by everyone and that differences occurred in evaluating the ripeness of the social conditions for various solutions and in appraising the speed of implementing our aims. For example, the subject most discussed by the people was social justice.

The discussion of this subject referred to the constitutional conditions of our country and to the results of socialist transformations. The mainstream of this discussion was characterized by the primary demand that the principle of wages according to quantity and quality of work must be fully observed in practice. At times it was also characterized by a rather primitively conceived notion of equality: "All of us have the same stomachs." It goes without saying that we must create objective premises to ensure that equality and social justice become a general practice. At the same time, we must explain to each other what these two notions mean at the present stage of our development and what economic restrictions are imposed on them, including our potential to meet the people's material needs, the structure of property, the differences in the working and living conditions in towns and rural areas, and so on. However, the impatience I have mentioned has its good points because it forces all of us to boost our efforts to ensure that the principles of social justice are observed everywhere.

The main point is to create wage systems that ensure that wages are paid only for the actual work done by individual workers and workers teams. We must eliminate the typical exploitation of honest and effective workers by those who shirk work and are work parasites. Another point is to ensure that incomes in the private sector are consistent with actual work, and that speculation, corruption, and tax swindles are eliminated. We also want to ensure that people enjoy equal opportunities and feel themselves socially secure.

[Rzadca] Some people charged the party with opportunism on the question of the speed of socialist transformations....

[Czyrek] It is not worth abusing terms such as dogmatic and doctrinarian because, for one thing, it is at times easy to obliterate the difference between ideological fitness and doctrinarianism. On the other hand, it is possible to accuse the carriers of some views that they are unable to understand the conditions in which we operate, that they practice typical voluntarism, and that they disregard the potential and awareness of the people and the standards of our economy. There are also those who continue to persist in believing that accelerating socialist transformation by command measures and practicing "historical leaps" are the best methods, although practice has often refuted such methods of creating social change.

Our party is not opportunist, but it must reckon with socioeconomic reality. At the same time, our party regards it as its duty to carry out quickly the analyses of the coming problems created by the progress of civilization, science, and technology, to introduce new management methods, and so on.

[Rzadca] Some people had doubts about the stages of our development and about the present meaning of the dictatorship of the proletariat....

[Czyrek] The modified draft program is more specific as to the stage of the socialist transformations achieved by us. The statement that we have reached the stage between capitalism and socialism was not enough, because this could be interpreted as our having done little in the past 40 years, which is not true. We also had to be more specific about the nature of our state, which, without giving up its class functions, fulfills its all-national functions. The party line is aimed at the development of socialist democracy and not at its retrenchment. The state must take care of the interests of all working people.

[Rzadca] Everyone is for the continuation of the Ninth Congress line. What is the meaning of this line 5 years after it was proclaimed?

[Czyrek] The postulate that the Ninth Congress line be continued is justified because the slogan of socialist renewal has passed its severe social test with flying colors. At the same time, the precongress discussion has confirmed that we have not been able to accomplish all of our plans and that it is necessary to again include them in our programmatic tasks. However, this kind of continuation will not be easy. For example, at the Ninth Congress we announced that we would expand socialist democracy with the help of the legal and political measures we introduced at that time. However, the question is whether the people's councils and workers self-government bodies really do utilize all their powers. We carried out a reform of the election law, but we still have not said all we have to say on this subject. In a word, we need further progress.

We must also intensify those positive changes within the party that were initiated by the ninth Congress in order to ensure that the party is the main driving force of social progress in our country. At the same time, we want to ensure that the process of substituting new and better solutions for obsolete solutions is a continuous process. This is how I view the continuation of the party line after 5 years of practical knowledge.

10TH CONGRESS FOCUSES ON 'HOME MATTERS'

[By Zbigniew Boniecki: "Key Phase in Tidying Up Home" -- PAP headline]

[Text] Warsaw, July 2 -- The course of the 10th PUWP Congress leaves no doubt as to the fact that in home matters this supreme party forum is laying down a determined programme for another phase of tidying up their own home -- the home which they shielded against conflagration and for which they now intend to secure a groundwork of continuity and development.

That is why both in the basic report and in the discussion a firm course of business-like criticism and tough statements emerged which inspires well-grounded optimism. As Mieczyslaw F. Rakowski observed while addressing the congress, the key speech by Wojciech Jaruzelski "In fact was not a report but a talk with the party, as well as with entire society, on the need to proceed to the second phase of materializing the main assumptions of the programme on socialist renewal."

This was corroborated by statements made by other delegates as well. First secretary of the Voivodship PUWP Committee in Katowice Bogumil Ferensztajn voiced full (?support for) the opinion expressed in the PUWP CC report to the effect that political renewal must be followed by technological and organizational renewal throughout the country word indistinct] economy.

Said First Secretary of the PUWP Voivodship Committee in Poznan Edward Lukasik: "Experience gathered in the region of greater Poland (western Poland) shows that it is the most difficult to keep a course in the fight against old (habits): against conservatism, return to the old rut, dogmatism, and other phenomena for which we had to pay a formidable price. Worthy of respect are the critical words uttered by Wojciech Jaruzelski with reference to the time-consuming style of action which involve participation in conferences, meetings, and gala assemblies. Inhabitants of the city of Poznan say that conferences and red tape are unlikely to yield anything material.

The discussion reciprocates and expands the tone of the reports also in such fundamental issues as materialization of the econcmic reform, new requirements addressed to managerial staffs, the need to consistently introduce motivation for work, alongside such an unpopular reminder as the one saying that economic pressure does in no way conflict with the principles of socialism. "On the contrary: it is a fundamental condition for effectiveness of socialism as an economic system," Premier Messner declared.

Aleksander Ferenc, a foreman in the transport equipment plant "WSK" in Przeworsk, south-eastern Poland, emphasized the widespread expectation of a full implementation of the reform in economy and management. Proposals to employ economic pressure, mentioned in the congress documents, are fairly widely accepted, he stated. Wages-related problems are hoped to be regulated at last.

Chairman of the Polish Agreement of Trade Unions (OPZZ) Alfred Miodowicz used strong words as he said that his organization had been working two years already and could take a fresh look at the work of the central administration. "It represents the cause [words indistinct] unnecessary friction and misunderstanding. Mediocrity, because mediocre people feel best in the thicket of regulations, mess, and slapdash. A mass of administration workers have forgotten the lesson of the past period. Their arrogance is rapidly reviving. We encounter this every day and receive many such signals from our unions, from the working people. The ministers come and go but the 'middle' remains surviving many bends and feeling fine," Miodowicz said.

A locksmith from the cellulose-paper mill in Wloclawek, Bogumil Moraczewski closed his speech with the words: "We are a nation rich in raw materials, we have a developed industrial potential, educated people, and talented professionals. Finally, we have tested friends among the socialist camp states. Correctly led and wisely governed, we can become the country for which our fathers struggled and dreamed of," the locksmith said.

WALESA TRIP PREVENTED BY FURTHER INTERROGATIONS

AU011645 Paris AFP in English 1641 GMT 1 Jul 86

[Excerpt] Warsaw, July 1 (AFP) -- In Gdansk, former Solidarity trade union leader Lech Walesa refused to answer police questions during a two-and-one-half hour interrogation in connection with the May 31 arrest of Zbigniew Bujak, leader of the underground branch of Solidarity, TKK.

Mr. Welesa will face another interrogation Thursday which prevents him from going to Italy, where he was invited on an official visit that would have been his first trip out of the country since martial law was imposed in December 1981.

LCY DEFENSE COMMISSION HEARS POPIT ADDRESS

LD251316 Belgrade TANJUG in English 1041 GMT 25 Jun 86

[Text] Belgrade, June 25 (TANJUG) -- Preparations for defence continued in Yugoslavia and combat readiness has been heightened over the past four years despite the unfavourable social and economic circumstances, said League of Communist of Yugoslavia (LCY) Central Committee member France Popit at the 13th LCY Congress today. In his introductory statement at the session of the Congress Commission for National Defence and Social Self-Protection, Popit noted the achieved level of moral-political unity, capacitation, modernization and overall development of the Yugoslav People's Army and territorial defence, which are complementary parts of the country's integrated Armed Forces with several million members in all parts of Yugoslavia.

Popit stated that many substantial questions relating to the organization and functioning of the system of national defence and social self-protection, have been worked out. They include the strategy of armed struggle and a study of the level achieved in carrying out Yugoslavia's concept of defence. Work on a document of a conceptual-doctrinary nature entitled "The Strategy of National Defence and Social Self-Protection" is in its final stage, he added.

The security of Socialist Yugoslavia is the common interest of the country's working people and citizens, its nations and nationalities, which arises from the awareness of their interlinked fate and the implementation of the self-management social relations embodied in the Constitution, Popit stressed.

He warned, however, of the series of problems and contradictions in the development of Yugoslavia and in international relations which affect the country's defence and self-protection capability.

Popit noted that the economic crisis in Yugoslavia is becoming more acute, that there are shortcomings in the functioning of the political system, manifestations of disunity and federalization in the LCY, blocks in the implementation of self-management production relations, and particularly, increasingly aggressive manifestations of nationalism. He said ideo-political action was one of the LCY's priority tasks in curbing all forms of economic crime and eradicating the conditions which make it possible.

Popit also spoke of the deterioration of the military-political situation in the world and the increasingly frequent use of armed force in new forms, including so-called state terrorism. He drew attention to the use of so-called "star wars" and the strategy of low-intensity and special warfare in attempts to achieve the main objectives of the policy of hegemony and domination in international relations.

Since the interests of major powers and blocs intersect in the territory occupied by Yugoslavia, the focus of confrontation in Europe is being transferred to its south-eastern part and the Mediterranean region. In the long term, Yugoslavia will have to reckon with territorial claims on the part of some neighbouring countries. In modernizing its Armed Forces, Yugoslavia will therefore be governed by the need not to lag behind the armed forces of its neighbours, Popit said.

The implementation of the economic stabilization program, development of socialist self-management, strengthening of the brotherhood and unity of the country's nations and nationalities, efficacious functioning of the political system and the consolidation of the international position and reputation of nonaligned Yugoslavia will contribute to the strengthening of the country's defence and self protection capability, concluded Popit.

COMMISSION ON POLITICAL SYSTEM DEVELOPMENT MEETS

LD272252 Belgrade TANJUG Domestic Service in Serbo-Croatian 0921 GMT 27 Jun 86

[Excerpts] Belgrade, 27 Jun (TANJUG) -- Existential problems have a great effect on the ideological awareness of the young generation, Goran Milinovic noted, speaking first in today's debate at the session of the Commission for the Development of the Political System. Thus, in his view, a solution to the problem of unemployment should be the top priority. This problem, however, cannot be resolved through talk and conclusions, but with the right development policy. The LC, too, has an important role here, because it is necessary to oppose the various negative tendencies in society and to put a halt through resolute action to anti-self-management behavior, which, Milinovic noted, is increasing.

It is indeed politically shortsighted to believe the theories of individuals who believe we do not need an army and that its role can be taken over by something else, stressed Milan Daljevic. Not only our experience but that of other countries shows the existence of a strong and modern army is an essential precondition for the preservation of peace on our own borders and for effective defense. The Yugoslav People's Army also has the constitutionally established responsibility of protecting our social system from all forms of external and internal threats. Our Army also gives a great schooling in defense, the cradle of brotherhood and unity. In addition, Daljevic said, the Army builds and constructs the country. In the inter-congress period, in the Army 100,000 soldiers have been trained for various occupations, the Army has constructed some 2,300 roads and 15 bridges. It has also been involved in fire-fighting and eliminating the consequences of earthquakes.

Speaking about the all-around degree of integration of the Yugoslav People's Army in the political system, Daljevic stressed that in the course of the last elections to the various institutions of the delegate system, more than 8,000 members of the Yugoslav People's Army were elected. However, he added, claims the Army is becoming a force above the system are unfounded. It does not have the role of an arbiter in social disputes and in affairs within the competence of others. The theory that Army members should be "kept in the barracks," which has been increasingly heard of late, opposes our desire to develop self-management as a complete social relationship.

Daljevic stressed our Army is a Yugoslav Army, not only in its name and origin, but also in the structure of its officer and regular components, the meaning and aims of its existence, the content of its daily work and the ideo-political orientation of its members.

Our Army has always been, is and will remain the Yugoslav People's Army, Milan Daljevic said categorically. Such an army is not to the liking of some who, therefore, do not refrain from open attacks on the Army and its members.

Recently individuals have demanded units of the Yugoslav People's Army be formed on a national basis, for military service to be carried out in one's own republic or province, even in the civilian services. It does not take much political wisdom to realize how this questions the entire concept of the development of the Yugoslav People's Army, seeking the formation of some kind of republican and provincial armies instead. Since the Army and the defense of Yugoslavia must be unified, this certainly cannot and will not be permitted, Daljevic stressed.

Mihailo Saranovic proposed that an appropriate place should be given in the congress documents to the information system, because it is only marginally mentioned in the draft documents: "But imparting of information has never been nor can ever be, anywhere, on the margin of social events." He assesses that our information media are certainly among the most free and most democratic in the world, and also said that there are some newspapers that write in a manner that does not accord with the general social efforts and trends, and which therefore serve as a "good source of information" to those abroad who maliciously write in a sensationalist fashion about Yugoslavia.

Saranovic stressed a number of newspapers in the world, primarily in the West, abuse and distort certain statements by our leaders or measures taken by the leadership. He mentioned that one agency said only yesterday that clearly critical allusions to Comrade Tito had allegedly been heard from the congress podium, even though this congress is a symbol of the continuity of Tito's cause. The interpretation put on measures taken by the Presidency of the SFRY and the Presidium of the LCY to settle the state of affairs in Kosovo is one of the latest examples of such distortion, with some newspapers "interpreting" these as, allegedly, the virtual abolition of Kosovo's autonomy, placing Kosovo under the guardianship of the central authorities and putting Serbia in control of internal affairs, culture and the judiciary in Kosovo, while the recent actions of Serbians and Montenegrins were described as being inspired by Belgrade -- that is, Serbia -- to alter the status of the province and reduce its autonomy.

Commenting critically on this, Saranovic said it should be clear to the authors of these articles, and to all others, that what are involved are measures adopted in March of this year. This means they are not connected with the actions of Serbians and Montenegrins, and are directed toward respecting the law and Constitution, infringement of which citizens from Kosovo often warned about. These measures aim to secure for all in that province, like elsewhere in Yugoslavia, a peaceful and creative life, in full equality.

In conclusion, Saranovic said most world newspapers write honestly and objectively about Yugoslavia, and therefore these malicious representations of events in our country appear even more conspicuous.

Speaking about the activity of subjective forces, Vasko Kostojcinoski stressed the vanguard was also in the grip of bureaucratization, a very serious matter the League of Communists must deal with as soon as possible. Unless it resolves that problem, the LCY cannot be a successful protagonist of actions.

Touching on our difficulties, Marko Belinic said that this is no longer a crisis, but paralysis, and added vigorous action is required to resolve the problems. Assessing that answers to many significant questions are expected from this congress, too, he expressed criticism of its work method.

The method of work in which the delegates are divided into commissions is not a good one, because it would be much more useful for them to be all together to come into contact and enter into dialogue. It is no problem that the congress would in such a case last 5 to 8 days, because as a result the right orientation would probably emerge, the orientation allowing progress to be made.

Vladimir Babovic spoke in a critical vein about the disunity in the leadership, which is continuing even after the all-party debate on the conclusions of the 13th session of the LCY Central Committee. It is most difficult for the grassroots membership when members of the LCY Central Committee, the same day or the day after expressing unanimous approval on certain standpoints or conclusions, make totally contradictory statements, or behave in practice contrary to the established orientations.

Still fresh in our memories is the picture of Tito going around workers and chatting to them, Stevo Zivkovic said. Tito knew well how important it is to be with and keep in constant touch with workers. Today we seem to have forgotten that. It is high time for the party to turn again to the class, for Communists to don work overalls and be active among and with workers. This, as Zivkovic said, "is the proper work on developing the political system."

Enver Cemalovic listed among the most important tasks of the League of Communists the struggle against bureaucracy and statism, advocating that the amount of administration and management should be reduced. We must, he went on, overcome more rapidly the instances of corruption manifested in employment, for young people are rightly talking about the purchase of jobs, of bribery and favoring the children of people in high office. Cemalovic also advocated abolishing all benefits for officials and ending entertainment at the expense of worker income.

Miladin Mitrovic warned we take too little account of who is educating our young people and what the young are offered in terms of so-called cultural content. Everything has been commercialized, and sex and violence predominate in culture, he underlined.

Ali Krasnici spoke about the position of the Romanies in Kosovo. They have indeed attained equality in principle, Krasnici underlined, but they still have difficulty in getting jobs and housing. Few of them are in the League of Communists, and in workers councils and delegate assemblies, Krasnici added, and proposed the Romanies should be acknowledged as having the status of a nationality [Narodnost].

Tito said long ago that we do not want what belongs to others, but we shall not give up what is ours. We should adhere to this now, when dark forces want to separate Kosovo from Yugoslavia, Ksenija Vuckovic said. She expressed concern about the state of affairs in that province, but also dissatisfaction at the lack of concord in the top ranks of society. Enough of words like "must" and "should," because they do not make anything obligatory for anyone. Instead of that, we seek decisive steps. We demand that those who have erred and mercilessly squandered resources should admit their mistakes, withdraw and leave their posts to honest and capable people. Those who have landed the country into debt should be called to account even in the banks, known to be Yugoslavia's adversaries. The worst thing is that such people are still in the League of Communists and sit at meetings with us, Ksenija Vuckovic said.

Dragoljub Ackovic cited the statistic that just over 2,200 Romanies are LCY, while according to census figures about 200,000 Romanies are in the country, and according to some estimates even as many as around 800,000. So 1 in 10 Yugoslavs and one in a hundred Romanies are members of the LCY -- Ackovic considers that education is nevertheless the most difficult problem: a third of Romanies are illiterate, and two-thirds are kept by the state. He also pointed out the differences in the way Romanies are treated in the constitutions of the republics and provinces, which should be standardized, both normatively and in fact.

Svetlana Ilic took the floor at the congress only, as she said herself, to "comment that it looks as though the Chernobyl catastrophe has taught us nothing." Ana Klenovsek, in an equally brief exposition, pointed to the accumulated problems in construction and house-building, in contrast to these industries, which make use of domestically-produced materials and know-how, being a motive force for breathing life into production and for more rapid employment.

Taip Taipi, Antun Loncar and Zivota Stossic took part in the afternoon debate.

The commission continues its work this evening with a review of and adoption of the reports which they will submit to the congress plenum.

At this evening's last session of the Commission of the 13th LCY Congress for the Development of the Political System of Socialist Self-Management, the report on the commission's work was adopted. Four hundred and fifty-six delegates opted for work in the commission, 76 delegates took part in the debate, while 30 offered a written exposition. The delegates also submitted 10 amendments to the draft congress documents.

SPEAKERS ADDRESS IDEOPOLITICAL COMMISSION

LD261442 Belgrade TANJUG Domestic Service in Serbo-Croatian 0907 GMT 26 Jun 86

["13th LCY Congress -- Commission for the Ideopolitical Activity of the LCY and the Statute" -- TANJUG headline]

[Excerpts] Belgrade, 26 Jun (TANJUG) -- Standardized membership fees are not the condition for the ideological unity of the LC. Unity depends primarily on the organization and efficiency of work, stressed Anica Kuhar. Self-financing is one of the foundations on which the work of the LC is based because its independence depends on it. The LCY membership on several occasions asked for membership dues to be reduced, for the resources to be used more rationally and for the [administrative] apparatus to be reduced as well. The number of employees in the party apparatus between the two congresses was increased by 774 people, with considerable differences between the individual republics and provinces. The size of the membership fee is not a technical but a moral question, stressed Anica Kuhar, because the greatest opposition to the demands to bring down membership dues comes precisely from the environments which are characterized by inefficiency and by the easy-going way in the implementation of the agreed policy.

The socialist self-managing Yugoslavia can survive only as an equal community of our nations and nationalities and their republics and provinces. Disintegration tendencies are profoundly at odds with and alien to workers' interests, stressed Sinan Hasani.

Assorted nationalists and other enemies wish to distill the struggle for national equality into their sinister plans; they also want to pose as protectors of "the nation" and of the working class itself. These attempts were felt up and down the country but, as a stark illustration they broke out through the counterrevolutionary events in Kosovo in 1981. If class dimensions of our society had been taken into account more fully, the enemy would not have achieved what he did.

Having advocated the idea that the class approach should be emphasized more in the struggle of the LC and of other socialist forces against Albanian nationalism and irredentism, Hasani stressed that the working people in Kosovo, and especially the Albanians, must be told that it was a nationalistic monster and the sinister toil of the overthrown class and the so-called Enver's Marxism-Leninism which were operating against them. The objective of these efforts was to wreck socialist Yugoslavia into which the Albanians of this country, together with other nations and nationalities, have built themselves.

Against the true will and sentiments of the Serbian and Montenegrin peoples, Hasani went on to say, Serbian nationalists both inside and outside Kosovo, imbued with an ideology which is alien to the worker's class and possessing an over-emphatic nostalgia toward Kosovo, with a mixture of the Kosovo myth and by tying Kosovo exclusively to the Serbian and Montenegrins, are trying to cast doubts about all the Albanians, suggesting that they allegedly are not an adequately trustworthy element for Yugoslavia. For the Albanian, Serbian, and Montenegrin working people, their life together, won during the national liberation struggle and built during socialist development, is a class historic necessity, just as much as Yugoslavia is a class historic necessity for all its working people, nations, and nationalities, said Hasani in conclusion.

Having identified nationalism as the mainstay of class enemies, Ante Kokeza stressed that in fact the most dangerous nationalism was the nationalism against which no one was fighting. Opportunist calculations are increasingly present: Why should we be the first to oppose nationalistic manifestations, or: Don't lash out at nationalism, at least not during my term of office. At the time of escalation of all kinds of terrorism in the world theses are emerging about the JNA being redundant. Such people are proffering capitulationist banners. Unfortunately, said Kokeza, it is mainly the Army structures which are opposing this. Is silence by others a sign of approval or flirting, he wondered.

There is nothing unusual in the fact that a part of the clergy is developing nationalism, but it is dangerous that nationalism has infiltrated the leaderships of the LC, said Slavko Borojevic, mentioning the examples of Croatia in 1971 and Kosovo in 1981. He wondered to what extent this is a danger to Yugoslavism today, when every nation has its own rights, from education to its own assembly. Ethnically pure states are not the solution to the national question in this country, Borojevic warned, adding that we should not close our eyes to the increasing emigration of peoples to "their states."

Ante Franjic drew attention to the new forms of opportunism which have shaken the LC. These are sectarianism and factionalism, and statist-bureaucratic opportunism which creates an atmosphere of vying for all forms of power, said Franjic. This is the kind of opportunism which avoids new initiatives, hushes up the real state of affairs, from Kosovo to Split, covers up investments, shirks responsibility, leads to moral compromises and forces workers to become passive observers. If we do not put a stop to this, the LCY will continue to lose its reputation, will be in danger of becoming isolated and will begin to function as just one of the forces in society, said Ante Franjic.

The commission continues its work at 1600 hours (1400 GMT) this afternoon.

The working class can never produce as much as can be ruined by certain management structures. This is confirmed by the many monuments to human stupidity which we have today -- Obrovac, Feni, Madijapan and others, said Prvoslav Stankovic. Speaking about responsibility, Stankovic noted that it has been discredited to such an extent that it has become a mere phrase, from which we ourselves wish to escape.

In the view of Stojan Arsenic, federalism has become the principle for the organization and conduct of the LCY. Many swear allegiance to Marx, Tito, Kardelj, but do whatever suits them, supposedly because of the specific features of their own environment. The institution of agreement-reaching and decision making has been turned into a platform, and agreements are now reached more easily with states on another continent than within the country, said Arsenic.

It is said that about 50,000 members of the LC have answered criminal charges, but no ideopolitical measures have been taken against them. It is also said that the richest stratum of society is to be found amongst the members of the LC, but again nothing is done about it, said Veljko Dimic. On this account he submitted to the congress an amendment seeking specific action in basic organizations and leaderships of the LC to assess these cases and strike from the membership of the LC those who do not belong there.

Stressing that since the counterrevolution in Kosovo a lot had been done on supporting the activity of irredentists Kurtesi said [as received: first reference to Ilijaz Kurtesi] that all problems have not been overcome, including the most difficult moral and political problem of Kosovo, Serbia and Yugoslavia -- emigration. The situation in Kosovo must be a continual concern of the LC and all organized forces. A united assessment of the situation and the support of all the leaderships of both Serbia and Yugoslavia are needed for success, said Ilijaz Kurtesi.

Speaking about unity in party ranks Petar Mandic noticed that the ideology of the LCY federalization could also be monitored through party documents. In Comrade Tito's time, he said, there was a formulation in the statute whereby the LC's of the republics and provinces independently analyzed their stands and conclusions. This is not controversial, Mandic said. After Tito it was added that they could also analyze their policies. And Tito used to say that there cannot be eight policies. This is why Mandic advocated that a formulation about "policies" be taken out of the draft amendments and addenda to the statute, and instead there should be only one policy.

Our interparty problem is in the members and not in communists, said Kresimir Srsen, talking about the unity in the LC.

Delegates Debate

LD280550 Belgrade TANJUG Domestic Service in Serbo-Croatian 0940 GMT 27 Jun 86

[Excerpts] Belgrade 27 Jun (TANJUG) -- The LCY cannot be divided into national leagues of communists. This stand of Comrade Tito was the main springboard in the discussion of Momcilo Dugalic, first speaker in this morning's discussion in the Commission for the Ideological Activity of the LCY and the Statute.

According to Dugalic, the all-party debate on draft conclusions of the 13th LCY Central Committee reflected dissatisfaction at the lack of unity in the LCY. Bureaucratic LC leaderships and the authorities have been accused of this. However, some republican and provincial officials described these efforts as unitarist. At the same time they insisted on the consolidation of sovereignty of the republican and provincial LC organizations. Condemning such efforts, Dugalic proposed more emphasis in the Statute on equality instead of independence, because if we are equal, this will provide plenty of room for independence.

Retorting to yesterday's report by Petar Mandic that the independence of republican and provincial organizations boiled down to producing stands and conclusions, and not to establishing policy, Nijaz Durakovic said one should be careful with demands for strengthening unity, as this could mean the restoration of the classical concept of the party.

Asking to speak again, Petar Mandic recalled that in 1972 Comrade Tito stood against producing eight policies, as this leads to lack of unity in the LCY.

Hamdija Pozderac joined in the debate at this stage, recalling that in 1972 Tito stood against policies in republics and provinces within the context of deviating phenomena -- mass movements, affairs about road-building, liberalism, nationalism.

Speaking about the process of the decentralization of organs and the federation as a whole Pozderac said that it should be carried out in line with transferring of power to associated workers. Instead, we ended up with polycentric statism. Every time we come to grips with it we must bear in mind that this should be to the advantage of the working class.

Cviko Krunic agreed, saying those who are involved in political and expert work cause confusion. We do not need general superstructure and ideological nuances at this congress, said Krunic, stressing causes behind workers' leaving party ranks have not been sufficiently clarified. We have been hearing for years about a so-called concern about the position of the working class. To many, this has given a pretext for developing various presuppositions, but an explanation is missing for why 60,000 workers left the LC between the two congresses.

Boris Majer pointed out that a lot was being said about a crisis in society and considerably less on a crisis in the LC, which does exist indeed. It is not the question of the crisis of the program, but of the crisis in its uniform implementation. As one of the causes of paralysis in the activity of the LC, Majer gives the existence of the relics of state socialism.

Anka Modric spoke in favor of greater involvement of the communist-workers' aktivs and the realization of their role as established by the Statute. Many of the municipal conferences have not even set up such aktivs, and those that do exist do not function the best they can.

We have never come to any of the post-war congresses with so much harsh truth about ourselves and our own organization, said Djuro Bilbija, noting all these truths also contain apologetic praise of everything which matters to the political bureaucracy.

Similarly, it has become normal that no one was responsible, or is responsible, for the country's indebtedness, the crisis, bureaucratic-etatist counter-revolution, or a long-lasting stagnation of self-management. It is dangerous to think that in our situation, it is sufficient just to "tune the strings" without changing either the instruments, musicians, or conductors, Bilbija underlined.

If we continue to be a state party to such an extent, he warned, it will not be long before we will understand that we have been agreeing with anarchist pre-suppositions according to which every party is also a state on a small scale because of its very aspiration to organize itself as a state instead of a working class.

As an example of a lack of readiness of the party leadership to be the true political center of the revolution, Bilbija gave the fact that nothing was done yet to implement the conclusions of the 16th LCY Central Committee session. These conclusions, he recalled, bound all the central and provincial committees to hold separate sessions by the end of 1985 on etatism "on their territories," and the LCY Central Committee Presidium at the level of the federation. Though no one has done this, with the exception of Bosnia-Hercegovina to a certain degree, the LCY Central Committee called no one to "account." The congress documents also do not contain a single word of self-criticism.

For this reason he proposed present members of the leadership should be relieved of their duties only after the congress had carried out a critical assessment of what more could have been and must be achieved in the inter-congress periods. We must also examine the failures which were due to lack of readiness on the part of the LCY Central Committee to act as a political center of the revolution and due to its Presidium's insufficient ability and readiness to stand up to the responsibilities imposed by the situation in society and a need for such a role of the Central Committee, concluded Bilbija.

Milan Fabjancic spoke about debts and their repayment. He thinks that inflation destroys not only LC class potential, but also its moral potential. Some one has to pay the difference between the nominal and real value of credits, and as a rule it is the worker. Fabjancic also spoke out against social property flowing out into private property.

Niksa Sentic, speaking about ideological work with young people, said the more we work with youth and the better we do so, the less scope we leave for the activity of enemies of our society.

Izet Mehinagic spoke out in sharp opposition to some proposals by the youth congress. He expressed disagreement with criticism of 25 May celebrations and with proposals put forward by a number of delegates at the youth congress in connection with that. He considers this to be an open attack on Youth Day, describing it as anti-socialist and anti-selfmanagement.

Zorin Kalinic shared his opinion. He believes the Socialist Youth Federation congresses demonstrated how disunited we are, and that they dealt with marginal issues. He then spoke very critically about the proposal for a civilian performance of military service, the proposal for abolition of the death sentence, and of Article 133 of the Criminal Law. Although they would like to portray themselves as being modern and left-wing, these opinions are in fact right-wing and are the consequence of too little work with young people.

Rajko Cecanovic called for more consistent implementation of the law, with the view that some state organs fail to work as they should.

He cited Kosovo and the incessant attacks by irredentists upon the constitutional order as evidence of this. Settling accounts with Albanian nationalism is, in his opinion, a historic test, and he called for accounts to be settled with protagonists of all forms of nationalism.

Sretko Vulic demanded party ranks be consistently purged of all those who do not fit into the LC because of their improper conduct. He is of the opinion that the LC is in a state of moral crisis and that communists are responsible for the errors committed in the past, for LC members are in all the most responsible positions. Attempts at differentiation from the bottom to the top have already been made. In his view, we ought for once to start at the top in checking who deserves to stay in the LC.

Bogdan Crnobrnja advocated consistent openness of work, answering for one's actions and stricter accountability. He also pleaded for a greater role for the Socialist Alliance, as the broad front of organized socialist forces of society, and for greater participation of rural-dwellers and believers.

Three hundred and forty two delegates and guests took part in the work of the commission for Ideo-Political, Organizational, Actional and Cadre Capability and Activity of the LCY and for Statutory Questions. After the debate, in which 88 delegates asked to take the floor and 19 submitted written expositions, the report on the commission's work was adopted and will tomorrow be submitted to the congress. As Jakov Lazaroski reported, 32 amendments to the resolution and 96 to the proposed amendments and addenda to the LCY statute were put forward in the debate at this commission.

'NUMBER' OF AMENDMENTS ADOPTED TO LCY STATUTE

LD281735 Belgrade TANJUG Domestic Service in Serbo-Croatian 1003 GMT 28 Jun 86

[Text] Belgrade, 28 Jun (TANJUG) -- The highest gathering of Yugoslav Communists has adopted a number of amendments to the statute of the League of Communists of Yugoslavia while retaining, at the request of the members, the assessments concerning the historic role of Josip Broz Tito in the building of the party.

For more than 4 decades under Tito's leadership -- from 1937-80 -- the party grew into a strong, leading, revolutionary ideopolitical vanguard of the working class, nations and nationalities of Yugoslavia, points out the statute.

With Tito at its head, the party responsibly fulfilled its historic duty, organized and led the revolutionary masses of people into the decisive battle against the fascist occupiers and carried out the revolution, opening up new areas of freedom, self-management, and nonalignment. Tito has left an indelible imprint on the shaping of the general principles on which the program and statute of the LCY are based.

Although the statute does not contain any substantive changes compared to the previous text, there is a considerable number of novelties which contribute to strengthening the unity of the LCY, democratic centralism, responsibility of the republican and provincial League of Communists for the implementation of party policy, democratic relations with the League of Communists, better organization of communists in the economy and broader role of the members in shaping and implementing the policy of the LCY.

The statute defines the LCY as a united revolutionary organization, with the League of Communists of the republics and provinces as its equal and autonomous parts. It specifies that their autonomy consists of a "position of equality and equal right and responsibility to participate actively and creatively in building up and carrying out the united LCY policy." One condition for this is the democratization of relations within the League of Communists, including differences in view during debates and decision-making.

A vital novelty is that all organs of the League of Communists are bound to organize public debates in basic party organizations prior to deciding on major social questions.

After 17 years, a provision stating that members of the Central Committee and other organs of the LCY are elected by secret ballot at the LCY congress from among the "candidates elected at the LC congresses in the republics, LC conferences in the provinces and at the conference of the LCY organization within the Yugoslav People's Army" has been reintroduced into the statute of the LCY.

The changed method of election determines a different role of the Central Committee of the LCY, which will now be assessing the work of the republican Central Committees of the LC in the republics and the provincial committees of the LC in the province. In cases of possible deviation from the program or the policy of the LCY, the LCY Central Committee will directly take measures to establish responsibility. If a particular situation is not settled even after the warning, the LCY Central Committee may request the "convening of a special congress of the LC of a republic, special conference of the LC of a province, and special conference of the LCY Organization in the Yugoslav People's Army. If the problems which have arisen are not settled even then, the Central Committee shall convene a special congress of the LCY."

Article 83 of the LCY statute states that in a work organization that has a number of basic organizations of associated labor and a number of basic organizations of the League of Communists, a conference of the LC is to be formed in order to unite and direct the LC's activities in reviewing, resolving and executing tasks of joint interest, for the purpose of which the basic organizations have been associated into a work organization. The conference lays down the standpoints obligatory for all members and basic organizations of the LC. The possibility is envisaged of forming an action conference of the LC, as a permanent form of linkage and activity of members and basic organizations of the LC, in composite organizations of associated labor.

INTERNATIONAL COOPERATION COMMISSION SESSION

LD271536 Belgrade TANJUG Domestic Service in Serbo-Croatian 1016 GMT 27 Jun 86

[Excerpts] Belgrade, 27 Jun (TANJUG) -- The first speaker at today's session of the Commission for International Cooperation was Milos Minic. He noted that the continuity of Tito's policy has not been encroached upon in the past 6 years. This, he stressed, is clearly shown by the reports on the activities since the last congress, the draft documents submitted to this congress, as well as by the debate at the commission for the International Cooperation of the LCY and foreign policy of Yugoslavia. The continuity of cooperation and of the LCY's relations with communist and workers parties in the world is also maintained on the same basis. Milos Minic expressed his conviction that this course will be continued.

Speaking about the orientation of our foreign policy in the direction of detente, Minic expressed doubt that a relaxation in relations between the two superpowers would lead the world automatically to an all-embracing detente and he went on to list fresh examples such as the U.S. Congress' vote for the funding of Nicaraguan counterrevolutionaries, the recent U.S. attack on Libya and, in greater detail, many explosive issues and crises, from Namibia to the Palestinian problem, Afghanistan and, in particular, dramatic economic difficulties and pressures to which the developing countries are exposed.

Minic devoted most of his statement to this latter point. He agreed with the view that cooperation with the developing countries is a question of the existence of Yugoslavia on which the independence and nonalignment of our country depend. Minic expressed the view that this fact was not understood in our country in its widest context. He described the quest for real and uniform answers to the crisis of detente and international economic relations as the overriding task of the forthcoming nonaligned summit in Harare. He stressed that strong pressures should be exerted on the superpowers in the economic sphere and on the developed countries, in order to get negotiations going. He laid emphasis on the problem of debts for which an international solution should be sought and which has now been, as he said, raised at the UN at the highest political level. By listing concrete data, Minic described the dramatic position of developing countries, the natural resources of which are pumped out by the developed countries. He went on to add that Yugoslavia is also among those countries and is exposed to pressures.

At the end of his speech, Minic advocated that debates at the next LCY congress should be held in plenary sessions because commissions discuss issues which are inseparably linked. [sentence as received] He expressed hope that this congress will pass real decisions and that after that responsibility for the implementation of the set tasks and goals would be taken by all the communists, the Central Committees, the Federal Executive Council, and federal bodies and organs. Minic is convinced that realization of the set goals and tasks would help Yugoslavia to extricate itself more swiftly from the crisis and take the path leading to prosperity.

Ante Drndic dealt with the position and role of our emigrants and workers abroad. Stating that our workers have billions of dollars in Yugoslav banks, he advocated that the question of these people and of such large capital be given greater attention by congress material.

Gligor Todorovski spoke about relations in the Balkans in light of the Macedonian national question and he stressed that there is no other people in Europe so divided and so disputed by neighbors as the Macedonian people. This is not a question at all of a "greater Macedonia" but a question of the desire to ensure the Macedonian minority the rights which the minorities of other Yugoslav people enjoy in some neighboring countries, Todorovski explained.

Yugoslavia, with its achievements and difficulties, has both the right and the opportunity to be proud of its achievements in the sphere of human rights and freedoms -- Budimir Loncar believes. In his speech he dealt with the correlation between the freedom of the individual and the freedom, independence, and equality of people.

Jozef Molnar dealt with some attitudes contained in an interview given by Bosko Krunic which was the subject of critical comments by Angela Kuhar, delegate from Slovenia, yesterday.

Petar Dodik devoted most of his speech to the position of our national minorities in neighboring countries. He spoke in favor of developing the entire cooperation with those countries because, as he said, the position of the minority is always more favorable if relations between the two countries concerned are better and the border between them more open. However, he stressed, in the future too we shall not stand idly by if the position or the rights of our minorities are negated or made difficult. We shall always react to these phenomena severely and critically.

Dodik also sounded a warning about the revival of theories about ethnically pure environments in Europe and even in our neighborhood.

Resolving the economic difficulties of our country and its speedier development is closely linked also with the commitment of resources of our citizens who are now returning home from working abroad, Dusan Strbac stressed. He said that between 1974 and 1984, 465,000 people returned home and 272,000 left for abroad. We do not make enough use of our workers' readiness to invest their resources in employment and artisan craft industry because of dogmatic resistance to the investment of private capital.

The last speaker in the debate at the Commission for International Cooperation of the LCY and Foreign Policy of Yugoslavia was Vladimir Prvulovic. He reminded those present of the forthcoming CSCE conference which will begin in Vienna on 4 November. He described the struggle against marginality of the CSCE, to which the superpowers and blocs resort, as the basic direction of commitment by Yugoslavia and the group of nonaligned and neutral countries of Europe. The intention of those powers is to again retain for themselves the right to make decisions on international issues. There is no other, better, or more democratic mechanism for Europe today than the CSCE process, he stressed.

At the end of its session the commission adopted the draft report on its work. The report will be submitted to the plenary session of the 13th LCY Congress tomorrow.

Resolution on Global Relations

LD281754 Belgrade TANJUG Domestic Service in Serbo-Croatian 1051 GMT 28 Jun 86

["13th LCY Congress Documents: Resolution on the Tasks of the LCY in the Struggle for Peace, Equitable International Cooperation and Socialism in the World" -- TANJUG headline]

[Text] Belgrade, 28 Jun (TANJUG) -- "It is the view of the LC that only a determined struggle for equitable relations among countries and peoples, for independence in selecting the paths of internal development and against any interference can secure general conditions needed for faster social progress and for expanding the scope for the further development of socialism. The LCY will continue to take a most active part in the struggle." This is stated in the congress resolution, adopted today, which contains the LCY's views on global international relations and processes in the world and which also outlines the strategy of Yugoslav Communists' activity in the international arena.

The document "The Tasks of the LCY In the Struggle for Peace, Equitable International Cooperation and Socialism in the World" states that "socialism, as a world process and as the social practice of millions of people, is having a strong effect on social and international trends, ever promoting various roads and contents of revolutionary social transformations." The document, however, warns that the development of socialism is taking place in complex international and internal conditions which give rise to many new challenges.

The LCY Congress maintains that the world scene continues to be characterized by dangerous confrontations, competition between the great powers and blocs over military superiority and spheres of influence, by an arms race which is threatening a nuclear catastrophe, by an increase in the number of war and crisis troublespots and by a deep and dramatic crisis in international economic relations.

The LCY Congress placed emphasis on the struggle for peace, and disarmament, for the construction of a new, more just international system, the struggle against imperialism, colonialism, neocolonialism, hegemony and all other forms of subjugation as an imperative need and vital interest of all people.

"This struggle for a new and more just world of peace and global progress -- the resolution states -- is being joined by increasingly expanding and various social forces of social and national emancipation, by increasingly organized peace, ecology and other progressive movements worldwide."

The resolution devoted considerable attention to the Nonaligned Movement. It is judged that "the Nonaligned Movement has developed into a great political and moral force of the present-day world," that the policy of nonalignment "has become the most important factor in the struggle for democratization in international political relations and for the development of a new international economic order and has also made a significant contribution to the progressive development in the world."

This document, too, reiterates that "Yugoslavia will continue to oppose attempts at ideological, political and other divisions within the movements and will make its full contribution to the efforts to consolidate the movement's action unity and solidarity on the basis of the movement's original principles and to realise common goals."

In this context the 13th LCY Congress stressed that "the goals and principles of the policy of nonalignment will continue decisively to lay down the overall international activity of the LCY and the SFRY."

The congress expressed confidence that the eighth nonaligned conference in Harare will be "an exceptionally important international event." "Yugoslavia" -- says the resolution -- "will work to bring about its full success, for the opening of new prospects in the pursuit of a resolute action to resolve the key political, economic and other problems of the present-day world which will contribute to the struggle for peace and international security, defense of freedom and consolidation of the independence of the peoples and to the struggle against racism and colonialism, to remove focal points of crisis, to overcome the crisis in the international economic relations and to create a new international economic system."

The resolution goes on to point out many harmful consequences of the arms race, the possibility that it may lead to a general catastrophe and also the fact that peace and stability in the world are more and more often threatened by local wars and other armed conflicts, as well as by military interventions and various other aspects of interference in the internal affairs of independent countries. Proceeding from the assessment that no one in the world today can feel secure, the LCY Congress reiterated and reconfirmed the well known stands of the LCY and of the SFRY concerning the need for the United States and the USSR to make a decisive contribution to the opening of the process of disarmament, that is to say that the disarmament problems should be resolved primarily within the framework of the UN and CSCE systmes, in regional organizations and other international forums open to the public and with the contribution of all countries and peoples.

A special chapter in the International Resolution of the 13th LCY Congress is devoted to the deep-seated crisis in international economic relations, which has hit most of the developing countries and the working class and the working strata of many countries. "The increasingly difficult economic position in an overwhelming majority of the developing countries has become a political problem of the greatest international significance," says the document. "The LCY believes that the only way out of the present international economic crisis is a radical change and a new international economic system."

In the assessment of Yugoslav Communists the debts of the developing countries represent a form of national wealth of the developing countries flowing out of them and illustrate that they are kept in a position of dependence. The LCY therefore believes that talks have to be held by the countries weighed down by the debts and by the developed creditor countries about improving the conditions for the repayment of debts and about the position of the developing countries in international financial relations, and monetary relations in general. To resolve the problem of borrowing, appropriate action by Group-77 and by the Nonaligned Movement and the closest possible cooperation among all the developing countries is required.

The LCY Congress has also denounced the policy of force and intervention, quoting the example of armed attacks by Israel and the United States on the sovereign and nonaligned countries of Tunisia and Libya respectively, "which cannot be justified by any motives or excuses."

The resolution confirms the well-known Yugoslav stands on the Middle East and once again endorses the PLO as the sole legitimate representative of the people of Palestine.

The LCY Congress has in particular appealed to Iran and Iraq to cease hostilities.

The resolution reaffirms the well-known Yugoslav stand in connection with the situation in the south of Africa, advocacy of extensive international action against the racist regime in Pretoria, as well as the assessment about focal points of crisis in South-East and South-West Asia (the presence of foreign troops in Kampuchea and Afghanistan) and in Central America (military intervention in Grenada, the situation in the Nicaragua area).

The meeting of Yugoslav Communists has confirmed the condemnation of all aspects of terrorism and the conviction that terrorist acts cannot be used to solve any social and political problem. The LCY resists, says the document, the attempts, under the pretext of suppressing terrorism, to bring pressure to bear on individual countries and to resort to threats and use of force, and also to proclaim the legitimate struggle for national liberation to be an act of terrorism.

The resolution also reaffirms Yugoslavia's stands on security and cooperation in Europe and on the situation and relations in the great Mediterranean area.

In paying special attention to the SFRY's relations with its neighboring countries, the LCY Congress pleaded for all-round cooperation as the best way to strengthen reciprocal trust and to overcome outstanding and unresolved problems with individual neighboring countries. In addition, it was noted that Yugoslavia consistently pursues a policy of all-round good-neighborly cooperation and open borders.

"Observing the principles of equality and togetherness, the SFRY expects similar behavior from neighboring countries as well, which is a condition for stable and meaningful good-neighborly relations. At the same time, the SFRY will resist, as it has done until now, any attempt and form of interference in its internal life, and will guard and defend its independence, territorial integrity and sovereignty with every means."

This part of the resolution also expresses the stance of the LCY that the status of the segments of the peoples of the SFRY who as national minorities live in neighboring countries should be established in keeping with the UN Charter, the Declaration on Human Rights and the Final Act of the Conference on European Security and Cooperation and other international agreements and documents.

The LCY is working particularly hard to have the Balkans transformed into a zone of peace, stability and all-round cooperation, and without atomic and chemical weapons. With this objective in view, Yugoslavia will continue to take appropriate specific initiatives and actions, stresses the resolution.

The section devoted to human rights expresses the LCY's endeavors concerning full implementation of human rights and freedoms in all countries and the recognition that all human rights should be accorded equal importance. At the same time, the resolution goes on to say, the LCY points out with concern that in human rights as a means of interfering in the internal affairs of others and of foisting alien social systems and ideologies is increasingly present. This places a burden on international relations and complicates the struggle for comprehensive implementation of human rights.

The concluding sections of the resolution speak of the principles governing LCY cooperation and relations with Communist workers, socialist, social-democratic and other progressive and democratic parties and movement in the world. This cooperation will continue to develop parallel with consistent observance of the principles of independence, autonomy, equality, non-interference, responsibility to ones own working class and people, and reciprocal respect for an differences.

CONGRESS DECLARATION OF SOLIDARITY WITH SOUTH AFRICA

LD281645 Belgrade TANJUG Domestic Service in Serbo-Croatian 1228 GMT 28 Jun 86

[Text] Belgrade, 28 jun (TANJUG) -- Proceeding from the original principles of nonaligned policy, the 13th LCY Congress expresses full solidarity and gives unreserved support to the struggle of the people of southern Africa for the abolition of the regime of apartheid; for the elimination of the last stronghold of the colonialist policy; freedom and equality; the realization of the right to self-determination; and the all-round emancipation and the social progress of southern African countries.

The main barrier to the realization of these legitimate aspirations of the peoples and countries of southern Africa is the minority regime in Pretoria, which persists in the policy of apartheid, the illegal occupation of Namibia, open aggression against independent neighboring countries; which defies the entire peace-loving progressive mankind and which represents a great danger to peace in Africa and the whole world.

The preservation of the apartheid regime, all forms of racial discrimination and various forms of national subjugation would not be possible without the direct political, economic and other support and aid from a number of influential Western countries and transnational companies. The racist regime and all those who back it are consciously going against the historically inevitable currents of liberation and emancipation, resorting to brutal repression against the majority of the southern African population, who are without rights.

The world has just recently marked, with due respect, the 10th anniversary of the uprising by the black majority in Soweto, has come out in resolute opposition to the new wave of terror against the majority population, and has with new force expressed solidarity with its struggle. In the decade which has elapsed Soweto has become a symbol of the organized struggle of peoples against the tryannical policy of the racists and colonialists.

All freedom-loving forces of the international community desire and seek more rapid liquidation of apartheid through isolation of the racist regime, including the applicaion of all-embracing economic sanctions against South Africa, as envisaged in the UN documents, and through the rendering of all-round political and material support to the liberation forces of southern Africa and to the struggle of the majority population for basic human rights.

The lengthy struggle of the people of Namibia for freedom under the leadership of THe south-west African People's Organization [SWAPO] -- their sole authentic representative -- makes it incumbent upon the international community to undertake urgent and pressing measures to bring about the independence of Namibia, in accordance with the UN plan on the basis of Resolution 435.

Expressing its unreserved solidarity with the struggle of the Namibian people, the LCY reiterates on this occasion its readiness to continue and intensify the moral, political, material and any other support to the SWAPO liberation movement.

Angered by South Africa's continued aggression in the People's Republic of Angola and the crude interference in its internal affairs on the part of colonialist, racist and imperialist circles which give backing to the counterrevolutionary forces, the congress delegates call upon the international community urgently to undertake all necessary measures to make it possible for the people in the People's Republic of Angola to live in peace and to develop in accordance with their own freely chosen path of social development.

The 13th LCY Congress has most severly condemned all acts of aggression by South Africa against Zimbabwe, Zambia, Botswana, Lesotho and other countries in this region. The participants of the congress express their full solidarity with these countries, and render full and unreserved support to their efforts to consolidate the gains of the anticolonial and liberation struggle by means of their own efforts and mutual cooperation, and also to realize unhindered and independent development in full freedom and independence, the statement on southern Africa states.

'COMPREHENSIVE SELF-CRITICISM' OF LCY CONGRESS

LD281455 Belgrade TANJUG in English 1402 GMT 28 Jun 86

["Shift From Self-Criticism to Action;" by Slobodan Vukmirovic -- TANJUG headline]

[Text] Belgrade, June 28 (TANJUG) -- The 13th Congress of the league of Communists of Yugoslavia (LCY) will most likely go down in the history of the international workers' movement as a forum of the sharpest and most comprehensive ever self-criticism of a communist party for errors and shortfalls in the country's development.

Virtually nothing escaped a critical appraisal, starting with the random development "boom" in the seventies, based on reckless spending of foreign credits, as a result of which the country today bears a heavy burden of serving a foreign debt of nearly 20 billion dollars.

The party leaderships of the six Yugoslav republics and two provinces came under especially severe criticism for disrupting the country's unity and failing to implement even the decisions and laws they, themselves, had explicitly upheld.

In the Yugoslav multi-national community, the centripetal tendencies imposed by the local leaderships favoured the growth of negative nationalism, whose most irrational expression was a semi-legal separatist movement of members of the Albanian nationality in the Province of Kosovo in the spring of 1981.

The 13th LCY Congress assessed that Yugoslav society had been affected by a dangerous and pervading lack of responsibility in economic terms. Yugoslav Federal Premier Branko Mikulic, elected six weeks ago, said at the congress that for a long time the country had non-productive branches of the economy and workers in many enterprises.

Mikulic termed such behavior a cause of the current inflation rate of 80 percent, the highest in Europe, and said it was threatening eventually to bring the country to the brink of "a three and four-digit inflation rate." In diagnosing the ailments of society, Yugoslav Communists were very clear and unanimous.

In deciding the necessary therapy, they were again clear and made it known that the LCY would not depart from the concept and vision of self-managment socialism charted during the lifetime of Josip Broz Tito. On the contrary, as congress delegates underscored, the very departures from Tito's concepts are among the chief causes of the current crisis. The congress categorically called on the LCY membership of around two million to do its utmost in the future for the unity of the party and the country, a unity based on democratic and self-management foundations.

At this point, the resolution refers to an earlier and rather overlooked guideline in the LCY programme. The guideline seeks that the leading communists in republics and provinces should concentrate on the suppressing of separatism, while those in the federation should tackle the dangers of centralism and unitarianism. The trends of separatism, centralism and unitarianism -- the congrss maintains -- are detrimental to the country's unity and to the genuine equality of its nations and its many nationalities.

Congress conclusions are expected to result in fairly prompt turnabouts in the overall economic activity, even to the point of closing down quite a few unsuccessful enterprises. Remuneration systems are to provide maximum incentives for good performance, while economic policy measures will encourage successful enterprises to develop themselves and expand as fast as they can.

A true small "war" has been announced against the vehicles of dogmatic views on private initiative in the "small-scale economy." Such views have so far impeded both the investing of one billion dollars (held on individuals' savings accounts) in production and the return of temporarily employed workers abroad who would be eager to use their foreign-exchange savings to start up a "business of their own" at home.

On the basis of the measures being prepared by the government, and expecting changed conduct in society after the congress, Premier Mikulic nonetheless had optimistic forecasts for the year-end: A vigorious growth in industrial production, a surplus in the country's balance of payments, and an about 20-point lower inflation rate.

As the premier's prevailingly dramatic speech was applauded, the Yugoslav Communists can be expected to do their utmost for the objectives to be achieved and so signal the beginning of the country's drawing itself out of its serious economic crisis.

FURTHER MEETINGS WITH FOREIGN DELEGATES

26 June Report

LD262239 Belgrade TANJUG in English 1923 GMT 26 Jun 86

[Text] Belgrade, 28 June (TANJUG) -- Milanko Renovica, president of the Presidium of the LCY Central Committee, received several foreign delegations which attended the summit meeting of Yugoslav Communists.

Milanko Renovica received the delegation of the Communist Party of Cuba, led by Juan Almeida Bosque, a member of the Central Committee Politburo. The president of the LCY Central Committee Presidium also received the delegation of the Spanish Communist Party led by Simon Sanchez Montero, a member of the Executive Committee and of the Central Committee Secretariat; a delegation of the SED, led by Guenter Schabowski, a member of the Politburo and Central Committee secretary; and a delegation of the CPCZ, led by Miloslav Hruskovic, a candidate member of the CPCZ Presidium.

Renovica Receives GDR Delegate

LD282201 East Berlin ADN International Service in German 1639 GMT 28 Jun 86

[Text] Belgrade, 28 Jun (ADN) -- Relations between the LCY and the SED, and between Yugoslavia and the GDR, are developing excellently. This was noted by Milanko Renovica, the newly elected president of the Presidium of the LCY Central Committee, and Quenter Schabowski, member of the Politburo and secretary of the SED Central Committee, first secretary of the Berlin Bezirk Executive, at a friendly meeting in Belgrade on Saturday. This applies especially to the expansion of economic and scientific-technological cooperation.

Renovica and Schabowski noted agreement on the fundamental international issue of our time. It is important not to ease up in the struggle for the preservation of peace and the liberation of mankind from the threatening danger of a nuclear catastrophe. Decisive importance is attached here to a comprehensive nuclear test stop and adherence to the SALT II treaty for the initiation of further disarmament steps.

Schabowski, who headed the SED delegation to the 13th LCY Congress, emphasized in this connection that the appeal of the Warsaw Pact states on the reduction of armed forces and conventional armaments in Europe opened up new paths in this process.

Schabowski also met with Sinan Hasani, president of the Presidency of Yugoslavia, for a cordial talk on Saturday.

Mikulic Receives Wozniak

LD282145 Warsaw PAP in English 1750 GMT 28 Jun 86

[Text] Belgrade, June 28: The PUWP delegation to the Congress of the League of Communists of Yugoslavia (LCY) led by Political Bureau member and CC Secretary Marian Wozniak was received here Friday by President of the Federal Executive Council Branko Mikulic.

During the meeting the two sides highly assessed the state of cooperation between Poland and Yugoslavia in all fields. They stressed the significance of visits by Wojciech Jaruzelski to Yugoslavia and Vodoje Zarkovic to Poland for the development of bilateral relations.

They stated that this provides a good basis for the implementation of cooperation programmes in the near future and for exceeding targets envisaged by these programmes. The two pointed to the need and possibilities to develop higher forms of economic cooperation and to undertake joint ventures in the development of science and technology, co-production and production specialization.

The two sides stressed the necessity to strive for establishing new economic order in the world and to solve difficult problems in international economic relations and financial cooperation. They also discussed both countries' experiences in the functioning of the socialist self-management and emphasized the significance of studying these experiences.

At the end of the friendly talk marked by mutual understanding, the two stressed the importance of cooperation of both socialist countries and its significance for social and economic development and for peace in Europe and in the world.

A group of Yugoslav economic, political and cultural activists was decorated with the Cross of Merit of the Polish People's Republic in recognition of their contribution to the development of bilateral relations between Poland and Yugoslavia, at a ceremony at the Polish Embassy here on Friday. Former co-chairman of the Polish-Yugoslav Commissioon for Economic, Scientific and Technological Cooperation Spasoje Mebenica received the commander's Cross and Star of the Order of Merit of the Polish People's Republic. The medals were handed by Marian Wozniak.

MIKULIC VISITS ALGIERS, MEETS WITH OFFICIALS

Talks With Brahimi

LD291936 Belgrade TANJUG Domestic Service in Serbo-Croatian 2339 GMT 28 Jun 86

[Text] Algiers, 28 Jun (TANJUG) -- The roots of Yugoslav-Algerian friendship and cooperation go back to the time of the Algerian struggle for independence and it is of strategic interest to both countries to further develop, promote, and enrich these relations. This was stressed during the talks this afternoon between Branko Mikulic, president of the FEC; and Abdelhamid Brahimi, alternate member of the FLN Politburo and prime minister of Algeria. The Yugoslav-Algerian exchange of views, which began this morning with a tete-a-tete meeting of the two premiers, included bilateral relations and some issues concerning the topical international situation and it took place in an exceptionally cordial and warm atmosphere.

Similarity in the liberation struggles of the peoples of Yugoslavia and Algeria, similar orientations as regards internal development (both countries are developing socialism) and belonging to the Nonaligned Movement and active participation in it are assessed to represent the main links tying the two friendly countries and contributing to their comprehensive relations and cooperation. The two premiers drew attention to the present complex and difficult situation in the world which brings Yugoslavia and Algeria even closer to one another, in order that they could be more successful in their joint efforts to oppose the negative consequences of the world economic crisis, whose most serious victims are developing countries.

In this connection Mikulic and Brahimi noted that present Yugoslavia-Algerian economic cooperation has been successfully developing in many spheres. However, they believe that the time has come to develop economic relations between the two countries much more extensively than so far, on a long-term basis and by means of applying new, more developed forms, such as the development of technology and a real transfer of knowledge, joint investments, the establishment of mixed enterprises, and joint performance on third markets.

Yugoslavia and Algeria are equally aware of the danger of technological colonialism which is threatening developing countries, if they remain to play the role of the object of technological development. Consequently, stress in today's talks was laid on the need for Yugoslav-Algerian cooperation in technology and joint scientific research as an important factor in future comprehensive economic relations. The two premiers also paid attention to the countries' cooperation in water resources exploitation and housing -- two spheres that engage a considerable number of Yugoslav enterprises and several thousand workers.

They also noted that there are conditions for new projects in these spheres but this would be discussed on a more concrete basis at the session of the mixed Yugoslav-Algerian Committee for Economic, Scientific-Technical and Cultural Cooperation to open in 7 to 8 days' time in Belgrade.

Branko Mikulic and Abdelhamid Brahimi also exchanged views on some topical international issues, especially the latest developments in the Middle East and the Mediterranean, stressing their mutual interest as two coastal countries, turning these regions into the zone of peace and cooperation.

Energy, Cooperation Discussed

[Text] Algiers, 30 Jun (TANJUG) -- Andrej Ocvirk, member of the Federal Executive Committee and president of the Federal Committee for Energy and Industry, who is accompanying FEC President Branko Mikulic on his visit to Algeria, had seperate talks here with five ministers in the Algerian Government -- those for planning and urban planning, public works, commerce, light industries and regional development, urbanism and construction. They discussed concrete questions of Yugoslav-Algerian cooperation, but in the framework of preparations for the forthcoming session of the mixed international committee for economic cooperation which is meeting in Belgrade in a week's time.

Andrej Ocvirk is co-chairman of the Yugoslav section of the mixed committee and prior to his visit to Algeria, he also had talks with Belkacem Nabi, Algerian minister of energy, chemical and petrochemical industries, in Brioni.

A member of the Yugoslav delegation visiting Algeria, Deputy Federal Secretary for Foreign Affairs Budimir Loncar, exchanged views with Mohamed Aberkane, deputy minister to the minister of foreign affairs in charge of cooperation, on current international questions and on preparations for the eighth summit of the nonaligned countries in Harare. Major General Jovan Matovic had talks with his hosts on the cooperation of the two countries in the military-economic field.

Mikulic Ends Visit

LD302244 Belgrade TANJUG in English 2010 GMT 30 Jun 86

[Text] Algiers, June 30 (TANJUG) -- Yugoslav Premier Branko Mikulic today assessed that his just ended visit to Algeria and the talks held there would further stimulate the all-round promotion of cooperation between the two countries, their joint activities in the Movement of Non-Alignment as well as strengthening the two countries' traditional friendship. The Yugoslav premier, who ended a three-day official and friendly visit to Algeria today, stated the above in a telegram to Algerian Prime Minister Abdelhamid Brahimi on leaving Algerian territory.

As learned, in their talks today, Mikulic and Brahimi highly assessed the results of the Yugoslav premier's visit and the Yugoslav-Algerian relations in their entirety.

The Yugoslav premier's visit, as set out, has enabled thorough consideration of bilatral relations and cooperation between the two countries, determining new possibilities for economic cooperation and discussions on certain topical questions relative to the implementation of Yugoslav-Algerian economic cooperation.

Mikulic, who returned to Belgrade tonight, discussed with Algerian President Chadli Bendjedid and Prime Minister Brahimi topical international questions, especially the preparations for the coming non-aligned summit in Zimbabwe. A high degree of congruency and closesness of the Yugoslav and Algerian stands was noted in the talks.

FEC PRESIDENT MIKULIC RECEIVES GDR'S SOELLE

LD021815 Belgrade TANJUG Domestic Service in Serbo-Croatian 1410 GMT 2 Jul 86

[Text] Belgrade, 2 Jul (TANJUG) -- In Belgrade today Branko Mikulic, president of the Federal Executive Council, received Horst Soelle, the GDR Deputy chairman of the Council of Ministers and co-chairman of the Mixed Committee for Economic, Scientific, and Technical Cooperation between the SFRY and the GDR, who is paying a brief working visit to Yugoslavia. The observation was made that relations between the two countries are developing well and that objective opportunities exist for these relations to be expanded further, especially in the area of long-term industrial cooperation and scientific and technical collaboration. It was noted that efforts should be made to maintain a balanced level of foreign trade commodity exchange, and that this trade should be expanded even more. Radovan Makic, a member of the Federal Executive Council, was present at the meeting.

Economic Cooperation Discussed

LD030323 Belgrade TANJUG in English 1900 GMT 2 Jul 86

[Excerpt] Belgrade, July 2 (TANJUG) -- The German Democratic Republic is Yugoslavia's eighth biggest foreign trading partner. The value of trade between the two countries stood at 800 million dollars last year, and is expected to reach 900 million this year. As Yugoslav government member Radovan Mikic and GDR Council of Ministers Deputy Chairman Horst Soelle set out a session of the Mixed Committee for Economic and Scientific-Technical Cooperation in Belgrade today. The two sides expressed the readiness to further economic relations, especially through higher forms of cooperation, economic cooperation between Yugoslavia and the German Democratic Republic was assessed as comprehensive. In addition to trade, it covers also industrial, financial-banking, and scientific-technical cooperation, and joint appearances on third markets. It was noted.

Under a long-term agreement between the two countries on trade in goods and services, the value of trade is to reach 4.5 billion dollars in 1990. Yugoslavia imports machinery, equipment, complete plants, chemical raw materials, synthetic rubber and consumer goods from the German Democratic Republic, and exports Aluminum, Zinc, copper, cellulose, textiles, footwear and wine.

KREKIC HOLDS TRADE TALKS WITH FRENCH COUNTERPART

LD011414 Belgrade TANJUG in English 1110 GMT 1 Jul 86

[Text] Paris, July 1 (TANJUG) -- Yugoslav Secretary for Foreign Trade Nenad Krekic and his French counterpart Michel Noir noted during their talks here today that Yugoslav-French trade has slightly risen after a considerable decline over the past few years. Yugoslav exports to France have recorded a rise and contributed to a reduction of the Yugoslav deficit in trade with France.

At the talks, the Yugoslav side raised a number of questions, including efforts to step up the realization of contracts already signed between partners in the two countries. It was stressed that a contract between the French Renault Firm and IMV of Novo Mesto holds a special place in bilateral economic cooperation.

Yugoslavia expressed interest in exporting ships to France, and also in joint French-Yugoslav ventures in third countries, especially in the field of civil construction. The French side expressed interest in participating in Yugoslavia's diesel locomotives production programme and other projects.

SUNDIC ON MOVES TOWARD REAGAN-GORBACHEV SUMMIT

LD022127 Zagreb Domestic Service in Serbo-Croatian 1700 GMT 2 Jul 86

[Milika Sundic commentary: "New Possibilities for the Reagan-Gorbachev Meeting"

[Text] Here is our foreign-political commentary on the theme: New Possobilities for the Reagan-Gorbachev Meeting. Moscow has proposed that preparatory negotiations be held for a meeting between the two superpowers' foreign ministers, Shevardnadze and Shultz. Here is Milika Sundic:

The Soviet proposal to the United States to start preparations for a meeting between the two countries' foreign ministers is the first indication on Moscow's part that certain changes for the better in Soviet-U.S. relations, which make the Reagan-Gorbachev meeting look certain, are about to happen. True, the way Moscow has chosen is considerably more complex than the United States perhaps expected, but even such as it is, it offers a chance to overcome misunderstandings which arose after the first meeting between the two leaders in Geneva at the end of last year. Let us recall, the Soviet Government [words indistinct] and as it can be seen they needed considerable time [words indistinct] with a condition that it should be discussed in advance, with the aim of examining at the ministerial level the purpose of a meeting.

Perhaps it would suit the United States better if the route to the Reagan-Gorbvachev meeting were shortened; nevertheless, the United States will not mind such an approach if it is really interested in opening a dialogue with the USSR on a series of problems which divide them. After all, the Moscow message to Washington is more than clear. Vladimir Petrovskiy, Soviet depty foreign minister, said the preparations for the Shevardnadze-Shultz meeting are of the greatest importance if there is a desire for it to yield tangible results. In other words, there will be no meeting unless the U.S. side shows good will and understanding toward the numerous Soviet initiatives, particularly those in the area of disarmament. There will be even less chance of talking about immediate prospects for a Reagan-Gorbachev meeting if the preparations for the ministerial meeting are not successful. In this way Moscow wants to protect itself from all eventualities, since it has reached the conclusion, rightly or wrongly, that after the Reagan-Gorbachev meeting in Geneva the United States did not honor the agreemente that the two countries should work to overcome the differences which divide them. Moreover, according to Moscow's assessment, many U.S. moves on the international stage which followed the Geneva meeting were contrary to the Geneva spirit. However, in the world the prevailing conviction is -- and this was confirmed by President Reagan in a statement a few days ago -- that the two superpowers are aware of the possible consequences if the Soviet-U.S. summit fails, whether it does not take place at all or it is held but yields no results.

The consequences of such a development of events would be unforeseeable, since the question arises not only of relations between the two superpowers but also of world peace as a whole. The conditions for the Reagan-Gorbachev meeting are perhaps not the most favorable at the moment, but if a more favourable opportunity is to be awaited, it might easily not occur for some time.

'PROPAGNADA WAR OF NERVES' OVER U.S. - USSR SUMMIT

LD020510 Belgrade TANJUG in English 0420 GMT 2 Jul 86

['Confusion' Over Shultz-Shevardnadze Meeting -- TANJUG headline]

[Text] Washington, July 2 (TANJUG) -- In reply to a statement from Moscow that the Soviet Union has proposed the launching of a "preparatory mechanism" for a summit, the Department of State said yesterday that the American side has received no official suggestions either from the Soviet capital or from the Soviet Embassy in the United States.

A State Department spokesman said at a news conference yesterday that the United States is ready for and interested in a preparatory meeting between Shultz and Shevardnadze. He added that there has not yet been a proposal for such a meeting and that it is up to the Soviets to put forward a date for the meeting. On the other hand, the Soviet representative told a press conference in Moscow that such a proposal has already been sent to the Americans and that preparations should begin.

The "confusion" over the Shultz-Shevardnadze meeting will certainly be quickly removed, but it indicates that the propaganda war of nerves over the summit of the two superpowers leaders continues, with both sides attempting to score a point or two. However, it is obvious that both Washington and Moscow want the summit. Preparations for the summit, which was agreed upon in Geneva last November, should have been set in motion in May this year, at a time when Shevardnadze's visit to Washington had already been fixed. But the meeting did not take place because the Soviets cancelled it after the American military action against Liba.

NONALIGNED BUREAU CONDEMNS U.S. NICARAGUA POLICY

LD021533 Belgrade TANJUG in English 0453 GMT 1 Jul 86

["Pool" item]

[Text] United Nations, July 2 (TANJUG) -- The nonaligned countries Coordination Bureau has condemned the policy of the United States towards Nicaragua as "violation of the sovereignty and political independence of that country", as well as of the "principles and aims of the Nonaligned Movement and the United Nations Charter".

At an extraordinary meeting, held prior to a session of the Security Council, the Coordination Bureau also expressed firm solidarity with Nicaragua and appealed to all members of the Nonaligned Movement and the International Community to extend assistance and support to Nicaragua in preserving its sovereignty and territorial integrity.

The nonaligned countries Coordination Bureau expressed major concern over the deterioration of the situation in Central America and new threats against Nicaragua, and especially over the U.S. Congress' decision to grant financial aid to mercenary forces. Such a decision, the Bureau's announcement says, increases the danger of direct intervention and military action against Nicaragua and brings into danger regional and international peace and security.

The Coordination Bureau called on all countries to double their efforts in order to realize the peaceful proposals of the Contadora Group. It also voiced concern over the fact that the United States was placing obstacles to peaceful initiatives and preventing the reaching of a political settlement through negotiations.

PRESIDENCY DISCUSSES DEFENSE, NONALIGNED SUMMIT

AU022028 Belgrade Domestic Service in Serbo-Croation 1700 GMT 2 Jul 86

[Text] The SFRY Presidency has discussed and adopted a report on the state of defense preparations in the republics and provinces. It noted the further progress has been made in socializing the all-people's defense and social self-protection affairs and in ensuring the functioning of the sociopolitical and socioeconomic system under war conditions, but that certain shortcomings exist that must be eliminated more quickly.

The need was pointed out for further building the defense plans and for even better cooperation between those involved in all-people's defense and in social self-protection in coordinating their plans, especially in the field of defense preparations in the economy and the social activities.

The SFRY Presidium has been informed of the consultations with nonaligned countries so far and other activities as part of the preparations for the eight summit meeting in Harare.

RENOVICA CHAIRS LCY PRESIDIUM SESSION 1 JUL

LD011924 Belgrade TANJUG Domestic Service in Serbo-Croatian 1356 GMT 1 Jul 86

[Text] Belgrade, 1 Jul (TANJUG) -- The second session of the LCY Central Committee Presidium, with Milanko Renovica presiding today, discussed some priority issues concerning the composition of the work program for the Presidium and the Central Committee in the coming period. It was agreed that the LCY Central Committee and its Presidium should focus their activity on specifying and implementing the key stance and tasks set by the 13th LCY Congress. The LCY Central Committee Presidium decided that at its next session the Central Committee should consider some topical issues concerning the implementation of this year's economic policy.

At today's session reference was also made to a number of issues relating to the organization, manner and method of the work of the Presidium and the Central Committee. It was agreed that work should begin shortly on changing and amending the internal rules of the organization and also the manner of the Presidium's work, as well as those of the Central Committee, on the basis of the changes and amendments to the LCY Statute and the 4-year practice of the LCY Central Committee Presidium and the LCY Central Committee. These issues will be discussed at a future session of the Central Committee.

CHAMBER BACKS RECOMMENDATION TO CURB CONSUMPTION

LD261634 Belgrade TANJUG Domestic Service in Serbo-Croatian 1700 GMT 24 Jun 86

[Text] Belgrade, 24 Jun (TANJUG) -- This afternoon the Chamber of Republics and Provinces of the SFRY Assembly approved the recommendation on cutting back general and joint consumption to within the limits envisaged in the resolution on socioeconomic development for this year. The recommendation is part of the so-called June package of measures which the Federal Executive Council has submitted to the assembly in order to halt the unfavorable economic trends and to realize the aims established in the resolution.

The assemblies of the republics and provinces should, according to the recommendation, adopt regulations on diverting to a special account of the Social Accountancy Service the surplus income of sociopolitical communities and self-managing communities of interest realized on 30 June of this year and channel these funds into the promotion of export-oriented areas of the economy.

The republics and provinces should apply a temporary ban on their regulations on the disposal of surpluses realized in the second half of the year and oblige the sociopolitical communities and self-managing communities of interest to halt the payment of taxes and contributions from income and personal income proportionally to the surpluses.

The regulations of the republics and provinces should guarantee that the budgets of all sociopolitical communities remain at the level of the beginning of the year and that any subsequent increase be met only from citizens' property and income taxes.

The republics and provinces should oblige the assemblies of pertinent sociopolitical communities and the self-managing communities not to introduce new rights to benefits from general and joint consumption and to limit these rights to the levels of this year's resolution.

The chamber also recommended that measures be taken to reduce allowances, commissions, premiums, membership fees and other similar earnings.

As evidence of the need to limit the growth of general and joint consumption, the representatives of the Federal Executive Council cited its increase above the levels established in the resolution; that is, the level of income. According to the resolution for this year, the increase in general and joint consumption should be 5 percent below the increase in income in the social economy. The Federal Executive Council estimates that the surpluses of the sociopolitical communities and the self-managing communities of interest for the first 4 months of this year amount to 68 billion dinars, but the exact figure will be known on 30 June.

Speaking about last year's futile attempts to curb growth in general and joint consumption, Egon Padovan, member of the Federal Executive Council, recalled that last year an intervention law was also passed but that out of surpluses exceeding 80 billion dinars only a total of 30 billion was allocated to separate accounts.

Confirming the need for consistent implementation of the policy on general and joint consumption as laid down in the resolution, the Chamber of Republics and Provinces particularly supported the method chosen; that is, the measures of the republics and provinces that will be coordinated to facilitate the uniform application of the recommendation approved today.

TEXT OF SAWPY DOCUMENT ON POLITICAL SYSTEM

AU011131 Belgrade BORBA in Serbo-Croatian 16 Jun 86 p 5

["Program of Activities for the More Efficient Functioning, Buildup, and Further Development of the Political System of Socialist Self-Management" adopted by the SAWPY Federal Conference at its session on 23 May]

[Text] Program of Activities for the More Efficient Functioning, Buildup, and Further Development of the Political System of Socialist Self-Management.

1. The results of public discussion on the Critical Analysis of the Functioning of the Political System make it incumbent upon the SAWP, all organized social forces, and all factors of the political system, from the basic organizations of associated labor and the local community to the federation, to continue organized, coordinated, and resolute work in building up, developing and, especially, practically advancing all functions and institutions of the political system in accordance with the lasting orientations of the Antifascist Council of National Liberation of Yugoslavia, and with the LCY Program and the constitutional foundations.

In this respect Tito's work, Edvard Kardelj's study "Directions of Development of the Political System of Socialist Self-Management," and our entire theoretical thinking and practical achievements represent the basis and permanent inspiration for the further socialist self-managing development of society on the way toward a real community of free producers.

2. The unanimous demand made in public discussion on the Critical Analysis is that overall activities in further developing and changing the political system must ensure a consistent implementation of the dominant position of the workers class in society; the brotherhood and unity and equality of peoples and nationalities; the federal system; the all-people's defense and social self-protection; and the nonaligned policy and independent position of our country in the world. For this purpose the behavior of all social subjective factors and all normative and other solutions that have failed to prove themselves in practice must be changed without delay in all communities; shortcomings must be eliminated more quickly and the entire political system must be adapted more consistently to demands of the development of self-managing associated labor.

The difficulties, hesitations, and resistance encountered in the implementation of the long-term economic stabilization program require the more efficient functioning of the entire political system, quicker solutions for currently important problems, the strengthening of responsibility, and the more resolute overcoming of the statist-administrative relations that represent the basic reason behind alienation of workers from the results of their work and behind the weakening of the material basis of self-management.

Agreement for Changes

3. The ideological-political unity of the working people and their readiness to become resolutely engaged -- in accordance with the basic provisions of the Constitution and the results of socialist self-managing development -- in changing the situation and relations in the society have been strengthened in the course of public discussion.

Broad social agreement has been reached on the main directions of and most important proposals for changes in the political system -- the changes indicated by the Critical Analysis and the results of public discussion.

For this reason it is now necessary, along with changes in the conduct of all self-managing and other social subjective factors, to carry out immediately the activities aimed at changing the pertinent provisions of the SFRY Constitution, of the republican and provincial constitutions, of the Law on Associated Labor, and other system-related laws and self-managing norms. Delegate assemblies and their organs, the SFRY Presidency, the presidencies of the socialist republics and socialist autonomous provinces, and others who propose the initiation of the procedure for constitutional and other normative changes, as well as all self-managing organs in associated labor and in local and self-managing interest communities, all organized socialist forces, and especially trade union and SAWP organizations have a special responsibility in this connection.

4. In order to achieve unified political orientations on the individual questions and proposals raised in public discussion about which different views and ideas have been expressed, it is necessary immediately to continue with soundly argued discussions and the coordination of views in appropriate organizations and organs on the basis of democratic dialogue and respect for the basic starting points of our constitutional system.

As regards a certain number of questions raised by the Critical Analysis and public discussion, questions of essential importance for the further buildup and effective functioning of the political system, it is necessary to organize scientific studies, determine the responsible factors for these studies, and carry out broad social consultations in social councils, SAWP organizations, and delegate assemblies.

5. Some individual ideas were also expressed in public discussion which are not in accord with socialist self-managing orientations and which essentially represent resistance to changes in the political system on the basis of the Constitution by offering statist-technocratic, liberalist, and other alternatives which our society rejected long ago. It is therefore the duty of the organized subjective forces united within the SAWP as a front and, first and foremost, of the LCY to call attention with their ideological-political actions to the antiself-managing meaning and goals of these ideas and, by creating the unity of all working people and citizens in their engaged participation in the work concerning changes in the political system, to contribute most concretely to thwarting all statist-bureaucratic, technocratic, nationalist, liberalist, and other antisocialist and antiself-managing tendencies and attitudes.

Strengthening Responsibility

6. A resolute turn in the conduct and activity of all social subjective factors and especially in the conduct and activity of the organized socialist forces united in the SAWP as a front is indispensable for the purpose of strengthening effectiveness, responsibility, and consistency in the implementation of constitutional, legal, and all other social orientations.

The SAWPY. as the political basis and component part of the sociopolitical system, will resolutely strive to ensure that all self-managing and delegate bodies will become engaged without delay in developing more effective democratic methods and forms of work aimed at strengthening responsibility, resolutely stamping out all adminstrative-bureaucratic and other harmful conduct, and creating the necessary cadre, material, and organizational conditions for a consistent implementation of adopted social orientations.

The Socialist Alliance, too, must assume direct responsibility in the conduct of all factors of the system which represents an essential factor of advancing the functions, efficiency, and development of the potitical system, and it must assume this reponsibiltiy especially as regards making the working people, delegations, and delegates capable of fulfilling their role in the delegate and the entire political system and as regards the strengthening of social control and more efficient functioning of the delegate system.

7. It is necessary for the responsible organs of the federation and of the republics and provinces to determine concrete programs and dynamic time schedules for their activities concerning constitutional changes and to assume the reponsibility for ensuring that all other legal and normative changes in the associated labor and in the sociopolitical and self-managing organizaions and communities, which depend on constitutional changes, will be carried out, at the latest, by the end of the current term of office of delegate assemblies.

The SFRY Assembly Constitutional Questions Commission and the corresponding assembly commissions of the republics and autonomous provinces must speed up their work in preparing proposals for amendments and supplements to the individual provisions of the SFRY Constitution and the republican and provincial constitutions on the basis of the proposals made in the Critical Analysis and in public discussion.

The assembly commissions for monitoring the implementation of the Law on Associated Labor must expand the preparations for amendments and supplements to the Law on Associated Labor which are now in progress with new proposals made in public discussion. They must also speed their work regarding amendments and supplements to the self-managing general and other acts in the associated labor.

In the work connected with the drafting of the SFRY Assembly's resolution on the implementation and further buildup of the SFRY legal system as well as with the preparation of other laws and social orientations, it is necessary, first and foremost, to ensure the fulfillment of demands emanating from the Critical Analysis and public discussion concerning the strengthening of constitutionality and legality, consistency in the practical implementation of constitutional principles and of the entire legal system, strengthening the efficiency and responsibility of all social and self-managing subjective forces of organized socialist awareness, knowledge, and creativity in building and implementing the legal system. For this reason the resolution on the legal system should be adopted as soon as possible and, at the latest, by the end of 1986.

Democratic Basis of Action

It is important that the entire activity connected with the constitutional and other normative changes continues to be conducted on the broadest democratic basis, involving the appropriate delegate discussions on the prepared proposals and the active participation of the working people and citizens, their delegations and self-managing organs, delegate bodies and assemblies, social councils, scientific and expert professional institutions and associations, trade unions, the SAWPY, and all other subjective forces of our society.

8. The prospects for our society's self-managing development must continue to be strengthened and the obstacles to the association of labor and pooling of resources must continue to be eliminated by building up and ensuring more efficient functioning of the political and economic systems and using current economic policy measures. Also, a constant strengthening of the managing position of the self-managing associated labor in society must be ensured by broadening the material basis of self-management. Consistency in the struggle to broaden the material basis of the socialist self-managing production relationship is an indispensable condition for a more complete manifestation of self-managing, democratic, and workers class values in the entire political system.

9. It is necessary to continue to implement, creatively build up, and advance the concept of the local community by strengthening the material basis of self-management of the working people and citizens in the local community, by linking the local community with the associated labor, and by ensuring its broader manifestation through the delegate system. The SAWP organizations and delegate assemblies have the greatest responsibility for and paramount role in accomplishing these tasks.

10. In further work concerning the study and elaboration of the constitutional concept of the commune it is necessary to devote special attention to developing the commune as a self-managing community in which the organizations of associated labor, local communities, self-managing interest communities, and all other forms of social organization of the working people and citizens must assert themselves to a greater extent as the subjective factors of decision making, accords, and agreements, and of solving all social problems.

It is only on this basis that it is possible to develop the commune as an important subjective factor of society's self-managing integration and to overcome the existing trends of autarkic development of the commune, of its encapsulation within its own boundaries, and of strengthening bureaucratic-technocratic alliances and administrative obstacles to the self-managing association of labor and pooling of resources.

11. Proceeding from the unanimous demands for changes in the electoral system, the SAWPY insists that all the necessary amendments and supplements to the electoral and other regulations be adopted in good time and at least 1 year before the next delegate elections.

The changes in the electoral system must ensure, first and foremost, democratization of the cadre policy and electoral process, strengthening of the responsibility of delegates and delegations, assertion of the institution of replaceable [izmenljiv] delegates, effective implementation of the delegate relationship, and simplification of the procedure of election and recall of delegations, delegates, and all other responsible factors entrusted with public and other social functions and authorities.

SAWP's Constitutional Role

12. The SAWPY Federal Conference emphasizes that even the best normative solutions and changes in the political system cannot automatically ensure an effective realization of social orientations and goals unless a radical turn is made in the activities of subjective socialist forces within the system and especially in the activities of the Socialist Alliance as its political basis and internal creative force.

Proceeding from this requirement, it is the duty of SAWP organizations in the federation, republics, provinces, and communes to more thoroughly work out and realize their functions and the methods and forms of their activity in order to more effective fulfill their role in the political system, especially from the viewpoint of everyday links with the processes of delegate decision making in the assemblies of sociopolitical and self-managing interest communities, and their role in implementing all social decisions, strengthening responsibility in the entire system, and developing the democratic forms of the public nature of work and of more effective social control. It is therefore most essential to ensure that different self-managing interests are expressed and coordinated and vital social problems of the working people are solved precisely in the SAWP, which represents a front, and that the forum-type encapsulation and work, declarative attitudes toward social problems, and constant repetitions of various conclusions, programs, and phrases, which are often used as substitutes for practical and effective actions, are also overcome in the SAWP.

A decisive step in breaking with all negative phenomena can only be made by further strengthening the SAWP's constitutional role and especially the LCY's leading role in all actions of the SAWP as a front. The enormous creative forces organized in numerous social organizations and associations that still do not have that place in society that belongs to them under the democratic nature of self-managing relations must also be more widely activated in the entire political system.

13. It is the unanimous demand emanating from public discussion that science, as an important part of subjective forces, must become engaged even more broadly in the further work connected with building up the political system, studying and working out important issues, and preparing self-managing and delegate decisions.

14. One of the primary tasks of the SAWP and of trade unions is to further develop and socialize the system of delegate, public, and social information dissemination as an important prerequisite for the functioning of the political system of socialist self-management.

Information dissemination on wider social problems and on interests and needs of other communities represents a condition for creative engagement and for coordination of different interests and their synthesized unification within the common and general social interests and policies. It is on the basis of these fundamental requirements that it is necessary to raise the quality of public media, solve more quickly their material and cadre problems, carry out the ideological-political and work differentiation, and strengthen the responsibility for objective and timely information.

Resolutely Againt Dogmatism and Liberalism

15. In building up and developing the political system of socialist self-managing democracy, based on the pluralism of self-managing interests of the working people and their communities, the Socialist Alliance must wage a resolute struggle against all pressures from the positions of dogmatism, statist one-party monopoly, and liberalist ideology advocating the multiparty system. The most effective way to eliminate these phenomena and problems is to struggle for the development of socialist self-management and for the strengthening and consistent realization of the constitutional rights, obligations, and responsibilities of the working people and critizens, to fully assert the delegate principle of decisionmaking, to suppress the supremacy of the executive and administrative organs over delegate assemblies, and to prevent other forms of nonself-managing conduct.

16. The immediate task of the SAWPY Federal Conference is, within the framework of activities concerning the amendments and supplements to the SAWPY's Program Goals and Statute, to more concretely work out the forms and methods of fulfillment of the social role of the SAWP as the basic and internal creative force of the political system and to ensure the SAWP's more direct link with the processes of delegate decisionmaking and a more effective social control.

17. The public discussion has made it incumbent upon all factors of our socialist self-managing system, from the basic organization of associated labor and local community to the federation, to always have a critical attitude toward their own practice and, on this basis, to be constantly active in developing, building up, and perfecting the political system.

The orientations and attitudes emanating from the Critical Analysis and public discussion are of a long-term nature and are significant to the activity of the Socialist Alliance and all subjective forces of society, and contain a number of concrete tasks that must be accomplished without delay. It is therefore necessary for all SAWP organizations, all subjective factors of the front, all delegate assemblies, and all self-managing organizations and communities to critically review their past activities in implementing and building up the political system and to determine their tasks and concrete work programs with definite time schedules.

It is also an obligation pertaining to all subjective factors of the front and all forms of activity in the SAWPY Federal Conference to determine on the basis of this program their tasks and the concrete schedules for their fulfillment within the activities aimed at advancing the functioning of, building up, and development of the political system in general and in the federation in particular.

It is made incumbent upon the SAWPY Federal Conference Presidium to coordinate, promote, monitor, and be directly engaged in the fulfillment of the tasks determined by this program, to analyze the progress of overall activities, and to report on them to the SAWPY Federal Conference at least once a year in order to ensure the broadest social control over the fulfillment of the tasks set for the further development of the political system of socialist self-management.

LCY'S BILIC ON FEC MEASURES, KOSOVO SITUATION

["Excerpts" from speech of Jure Bilic at the Kragujevac "Zastava" Car Factory -- date not given]

[Text] The state presidency has also in the past proffered support to the appropriate organs for initiatives and measures to halt negative economic trends, but it simply did not work. At the recent session of the LCY Central Committee Presidium we also supported the present measures prepared by the Federal Executive Council which, by the way, are in line with conclusions of the 16th and 17th sessions of the LCY Central Committee and the long-term Economic Stabilization Program. Although these proposals have not yet been publicized, one can hear in the corridors that there is disagreement with then and different proposals. It is true that we are a complex country and that measures cannot be equally good for everyone, so that can be a certain tolerance in some details and time differences, but there can be no compromise with the measures that should make a step toward the way out of the country's present difficulties.

If there is no agreement on those measures, temporary measures will then be imposed, which is also envisaged by the Constitution. It is another problem that it has not been used so far, but postponement can no longer be tolerated. And if there is no agreement of all factors even after a certain time, the Federal Executive Council will submit its resignation, and there will be premature elections. All those constitutional instruments should be used only to be able as quickly as possible to start on the way out of the huge difficulties.

... Now when most concrete measures for halting the emigration of Serbians and Montenegrins from Kosovo -- measures ordered by the SFRY Presidency -- are undertaken, there is no reason for any kind of demonstrations. Even if we supported this kind of struggle at one time -- although there were some people who though differently -- we are not going to support it now. You here in Kragujevac, at the "front line," so to speak, must also be careful, because, if the situation in Kosovo is not normalized, it can easily have an impact here as well. It can especially have an impact among the population that has come here recently or about 30 years ago; therefore, one should work politically with them, the same as with the others, after all.

KOSOVO ASSEMBLY PROGRAM URGES EMIGRES TO RETURN

LD010839 Belgrade TANJUG Domestic Service in Serbo-Croatian 1456 GMT 30 Jun 86

[Text] Pristina, 30 Jun (TANJUG) -- Besides the existing measures and actions for halting the emigration of Serbians and Montenegrins from Kosovo, which it adopted 4 years ago, the Assembly of the Socialist Autonomous Province of Kosovo at its session held today also adopted a special program of measures and actions for the return of the members of these nations who had emigrated and who wish to return to their homeland.

The program stresses that self-managing organs in basic organizations of associated labor and communities should assess the possibility of return and employment for the members of the Serbian and Montenegrin nationalities who wish to return to Kosovo, to register them and "assess their expert and moral and political qualities for participation in appropriate jobs." Besides providing jobs, it is necessary to ensure that the accommodation question and the possibility of employment for family members who are employed are solved.

It is pointed out that in all organs, organizations and communities, opportunities should be created for the return of the persons of Serbian and Montenegrin nationalities who, as the program specifically states, emigrated since May 1981, and that should return to the same or appropriate jobs in collectives which they left. With the aim of halting the emigration of families, the possibility will be created for members of families which emigrated to find employment as soon as possible under the same conditions. Further, it is envisaged that Serbs and Montenegrins who return to Kosovo should be ensured priority in obtaining business premises, work permits and credits for carrying out private business activities. Under the same conditions compulsory enrollment in secondary and high schools will be ensured. In the interest of implementing this measure it will be ensured that the number of places in Serbo-Croat at faculties should be increased in relation to the number of students completing secondardy education.

The program proposes that in order to carry out a successful return, an urbanist plan should be drawn up for certain areas in the social sector, thereby making it possible to allocate plots for housing construction by the persons of the Serbian and Montenegrin nationalities invillages and places in Kosovo, both for those who have never owned real estate and those who have done so, but who have handed it over to the social sector. In urban centers under the same conditions priority will be given to persons of Serbian and Montenegrin nationalities when allocating plots for housing construction.

The program says 3 months after its adoption a list will be made of the persons of the Serbian and Montenegrin nationalities who gave up property under duress. Appropriate organs will undertake measures to have their property returned or to pay them the same amounts which are given or the same real estate in that environment. Illegal cases of buying and selling whose handling on the spot would aggravate intranational relations, will be solved by creating possibilities for the persons of the Serbian and Montenegrin nationalitieis to own property in other environments in Kosovo, says the program which asks municipalities to adopt their programs of measures and actions for the return of Serbs and Montenegrins, with concrete tasks for the organizations of associated labor, local communities and other self-managing organizations and communities.

KOSOVO'S VLASI ADDRESSES BELGRADE CITY LC

AU250201 Pristina RILINDJA in Albanian 21 Jun 86 p 4

[Dede Mirdita, Fahri Musliu article: "Main Points of the Speeches of Azem Vlasi and Dragisa Pavlovic Made at the Meeting of the Belgrade City LC Committee -- Destructive Forces Attempting To Misuse the Situation in Kosovo"]

[Excerpts] Belgrade, 20 June -- At yesterday's meeting of the Belgrade City LC Committee, devoted to general cooperation between Belgrade and the Socialist Autonomous Province of Kosovo, Azem Vlasi, president of the Kosovo LC Provincial Committee Presidency, took part and spoke. In his speech he made particular observations on the present sociopolitical situation in Kosovo.

The front of our ideological struggle, Vlasi said, was for a time hampered by opportunism, which has still not entirely been eliminated. Meanwhile, we have been burdened with economic, social and other problems, which have objectively hampered political life and political action in Kosovo. Similarly, the struggle to stabilize the situation is being carried out under conditions of increased and exacerbated economic and other problems, and at a time when the climate of nationalism has deepened throughout the country, and this too is not without negative influence upon our struggle. Some tendencies, theories, and phenomena with anti-Albanian and anti-Kosovar coloring have begun to be expressed.

Regarding the problem of emigration, Azem Vlasi stressed among other things the need for support and concrete assistance to create a climate of trust in the struggle of progressive forces in Kosovo, including an open insistence that people should stay and live together and solve their problems together, and a generous refusal to accept outstanding cadres who are necessary to the province, when they seek shelter in Belgrade and other areas of the republic.

Finally, Azem Vlasi said that a number of National War of Liberation participants from Kosovo, who live in Belgrade, and other people interested in the fate of our society, have the desire and need to express their opinion on the situation in Kosovo. He said: It is our policy to invite our veteran comrades to Kosovo more often, to the communes and other districts, so that they can see the situation for themselves, give their opinion, and make suggestions and exert their influence on equal footing with their fellow veterans who live in Kosovo.

SERBIAN COUNCIL COUNTERS RUMORS ON WASTE SITES

LD030331 Belgrade Domestic Service in Serbo-Croatian 1630 GMT 2 Jul 86

[Excerpts] Belgrade 2 Jul (TANJUG) -- The May analysis of economic developments in Serbia proper, examined today by the Serbian Executive Council, does not give a favorable picture of the realization of the republic's social plan at the beginning of the planning period. Parallel to positive tendencies in industrial production and exports and as regards the standard of living was a considerable fall in the industrial production -- 6 percent -- in addition to growing losses and numerous instances of irrational management. All this, according to the council, leads to a conclusion that the realization of the established economic policy will be an even more difficult task than last year.

In the first quarter the economy had over 73.5 billion-dinar worth of losses and unsettled mutual debts were three times higher than in the same period last year. The average increase in retail prices amounted to about 80 percent. In view of the fact that the planned tasks have obviously been called in question, the Executive Council will take measures, in addition to the measures taken by the federation, in the republics with the aim of increasing production, exports, and foreign exchange inflow, as well as the economic-financial consolidation of the economy and banks, and also reduce consumption and inflation.

The council also examined and adopted a report in connection with an article carried by the public information media on negotiations concerning the disposal of nuclear waste in Serbia proper. A cause for this report was a book "The Balkan Atomic Falcon" which mentions Sokolske Planine [Falcon Mountains in western Serbia] as the place for radioactive waste. The book has caused considerable concern among the public, according to the council.

In this connection the council concluded that the official republican organs or any organizations and institutions authorized by them neither had contact nor held negotiations regarding the disposal of nuclear waste from nuclear power plants or any other nuclear plants belonging to any foreign country on the territory of Serbia proper. On this account the council will turn to the FEC with a proposal to instruct authorized organs to prepare as complete as possible a report and inform the public on this problem.

In the explanation of the conclusions of the republican governments it is stressed that negative press on this problem could be connected with a relatively old offer on the disposal of radioactive waste on the Yugoslav territory which had been made by the FRG to our federal organs 6 years ago. A meeting between German bankers and the director of the Ljubljana bank from Frankfurt yielded not any results. On that occasion there had been no mention of any specific region in our country, and in particular not Sokolske Planine.

According to the offered arrangement radioactive waste would have been trucked to Yugoslav once a week throughout the year. As a compensation our country would have received DM150,000 per truck. If all had gone well the Germans would have been prepared to use three trucks per week for the duration of the 3-year agreement. When the Ljubljana bank was chosen as a mediator the Germans had had in mind the launching of the Krsko nuclear plant and also good relations with our country.

The Republican Executive Council also does not believe that a study by Jugel on the disposal of radioactive waste, which sees 13 locations, excluding Soklske Planine as a possibility, gave cause to such writing in the press. Two possible locations in Serbia proper area, according to this study, the Cacak-Kraljevo basin and the territory southeast of Prokuplje. The council pointed out that such a temporary waste disposal site is being carried out by the Boris Kidric Institute in Vinca, and it would be used for nuclear waste produced by a peaceful application of nuclear energy.

SERBIAN SAWP REPUBLICAN CONFERENCE MEETS

LD022001 Belgrade TANJUG Domestic Service in Serbo-Croatian 0935 GMT 2 Jul 86

[Excerpts] Belgrade, 2 Jul (TANJUG) -- We can only win the big battle to extricate ourselves from the economic crisis and other present difficulties if all workers and people's masses take part, but they must be brought together and creatively involved in the Socialist Alliance. This is why we must reach a clear understanding as to what must be done so that the Socialist Alliance, which is the biggest organization of all social forces in favor of socialism and self-management, can successfully fulfill that role in our political system which stems from the need for the democratic self-management development of our society.

This message in the report by Dr Bogdan Trifunovic submitted at the first electoral session of the new Serbian SAWP Republican Conference vigorously stressed the tasks of the Serbian Socialist Alliance during the coming period.

Trifunovic referred especially to the debate on nuclear power plants which, he said, "has given rise to great interest among the public, especially young people, not only because of the dangers which have emerged, but primarily because the question of the existence and quality of the life of the citizens today and tomorrow has been posed in a new way."

Hence the need for the SAWP to provide the social framework in which public and competent discussions can be held on the economic, social, and ecological issues of the use of all forms of energy, especially nuclear energy, and on the natural human need to protect health and the environment and to enjoy a better and healthier life. These discussions in the SAWP, during which answers can be also sought for energy and ecology problems, could well serve as a basis for democratic decisions by the appropriate bodies.

Trifunovic described the work to eliminate the causes and overcome the consequences of the counterrevolutionary events in Kosov, especially the causes for the emigration of the Serbs and Montenegrins, and to halt this emigration and foil lawlessness and violence and all types of conduct which place citizens in an unequal position, as a most urgent task of all social, political, and state organs of the Socialist Autonomous Province of Kosovo, of the SR of Serbia, and of the Federation. "In this respect a higher degree of involvement by the SAWP and its organs and forms of activity is required, ranging from local to provincial and republicn conferences, in unmasking counterrevolutionary and nationalistic conduct, in providing a public assessment of the attained results, and in suggesting and launching the measures to improve the situation in Kosovo; in raising personal responsibility measures for anyone who displays an irresponsible attitude toward the agreed tasks in this area, especially as far as it concerns the implementation of the law and the latest measures by the SFRY Presidency and the LCY Central Committee presidium."

Branislav Ikonic spoke about the forthcoming tasks for the Serbian Assembly. Among other things, he announced that by the end of the year the Assembly will discuss the implementation of the medium-term plan for this republic's development in this year and the need to change and adopt it to the current tasks and material realities.

All regular activities this year carry special weight since according to Ikonic, we must become more energetically involved in overcoming unfavorable tendencies in the current economic trends which have taken on such a character that they could push us into an even deeper economic crisis if we do not tackle them efficiently and more speedily.

Archpriest Mihajlo Smiljanic in a "popular" way commented upon the implementation of the stabilization program which some time ago was unanimously adopted. He said, "At the end it turned out as in the saying: They studied and studied from Wednesday to Friday, but they have made no progress."

Smiljanic also commented on the "Martinovic case" and asked why Branko Mamula, federal secretary for national defense, had not called the commander of the Gnjilane Garrison to account for making irresponsible statements? As the Socialist Alliance, Smiljanic stressed: We must resolutely struggle against all negative phenomena. The higher and individual's position, the more he should be called to account for his mistakes.

Through the active participation of the Kosovo SAW significant results have been achieved in the province, but, according to Ismail Mikulovic, the task has not near completion. This is particularly because the hostile activity of Albanian irredentists and nationalists is still present and recently that of Serbian nationalists, too. We have devoted great attention to halting the emigration of Serbs of Montenegrins from Kosovo, but we still cannot be satisfied, according to Mikulovci. Solving this problem, to a great measure depends on the work of state, administrative, and judicial organs who monitor bureaucratic behavior, irresponsibility, and opportunism.

Mikulovic stressed that in the province an increasingly favorable climate is being created for the return of citizens who have emigrated. Particularly excelling in this task are Trepca and the Kosovo Elektroprivreda, but other work organizations are also active. Dr Bogdan Trifunovic, hitherto president, was reelected president of the Serbian SAWP Republican Conference, while Vasilije Vasiljevic was reelected secretary of the Presidium. Marica Stamenkovic, hitherto member of the Serbian LC Central Committee Presidium, was elected president of the conference for the social position and activity of women. Zivan Vasiljevic and Milojko Drulovic were elected members of the SAWPY Federal Conference Presidium from this republic. (The president of the SAWP republican conference is an ex-officio member of this presidium).

SLOVENE PRESIDENCY ELECTION RESULTS ANNOUNCED.

LD021535 Belgrade TANJUG Domestic Service in Serbo-Croatian 1250 GMT 2 Jul 86

[Text] Ljubljana, 2 Jul (TANJUG) -- At the joint session of all three chambers, Miran Potrc, president of the Assembly of the Socialist Republic of Slovenia, today announced the results of the election for the president and members of the Presidency of the Socialist Republic of Slovenia which took place during the previous session. France Popit was elected president of the Presidency of the Socialist Republic of Slovenia, while Alojz Briski, Ivo Fabinc, Majda Gaspari, Boris Majer, Andrej Marinc and Janez Stanovnik were elected Presidency members. Milan Kucan, president of the LC of Slovenia Central Committee and Joze Smole, president of the Slovene SAWP Republican Conference, are ex-officio members of the Presidency. During the discussion of the latest Federal Executive Council members, Dusan Sinijog, president of the Slovene Executive Council, said that Slovenia "in principle supports" federal government measures. He added that the Slovene Executive Council will also be taking measures, both those that will add to the federal measures and make them more specific, and those for which the republic is responsible.

SLOVENE INTERIOR SECRETARY REPORTS ON STRIKES

AU021033 Belgrade BORBA in Serbo-Croatian 19 Jun 86 p 4

[J. Pjevic report]

[Excerpts] Ljubljana, 18 Jun -- During the debate on the security situation in the republic, delegates of all three chambers of the Assembly of Slovenia agreed with the assertion made by Tomaz Ertl, republican secretary for internal affairs, that the activity of numerous organizational forms of social self-protection within civil and people's protection has been efficient, but that the protection of social property, security in traffic, protection at work, and fire protection are nevertheless unsatisfactory and that great social damage and many victims result from failure to obey laws and regulations.

Ertl pointed out a "new" and worrying phenomenon -- the increased number of work stoppages and forced meetings not only in the area of economy but also in social services, which shows that a number of workers more and more frequently solve their problems outside of the self-managing methods. This is because those methods are inefficient even when workers' demands are justified, that is, in the majority of cases. Since this creates the impression that work stoppages and threats with protest meetings, marching in the streets, and other similar pressures are efficient methods for solving problems, it should be expected that apart from justified cases, we shall more and more frequently be confronted with less justified and even completely unjustified demands that will be imposed in the name of social demagoguery and political manipulaions of the difficulties and contradictions existing in our society.

The number of cases of criminal acts and offenses with political characteristics which have been dealt with has continued to decrease during this past year. However, an increase in the number of both, in particular in the form of writing slogans, has been recorded this year. Most of those criminal acts are insults to the SFRY and provocations of national and religious intolerance.

Last year for the first time, Ertl warned, we in Slovenia were confronted with numerous violations of public order with nationalistic, and above all chauvinistic characteristics. What is new is that those events have been recorded in quite a few parts of the republic. Some events in Ljubljana, Idrija, and Bovec have been treated in a sensationalist way by the domestic and foreign press, and have been given dimensions and importance they never deserved.

Chauvinism, Ertl thinks, is only one of the phenomena we see as a consequence of the unobjective, one-sided, and nihilistic interpretation of our past and present. That obviously cannot lead to greater freedom of man and to the humanization and democratization of relations in our society.

Personal insults, invented accusations, publicizing lies, and ridiculing the people we entrusted with responsible offices as a means of besmirching the social system and devaluing not only the past and the present but also every effort to overcome the current situation, and the attempt to present all this as "revolutionary courage and social engagement," are all methods of irresponsible political scheming which are also increasingly present on our social scene. Through this one provokes distrust in everyone and everything, ignores everything positive and insists upon the existing social contradictions, not in order to point to the way to solve them, but in order to deepen them, thereby creating room for one's own activity. Such activity of individuals and more or less connected groups provokes distrust even in positive attempts such as peace and ecological movements and some others.

Another assertion by Ertl also attracted the delegates' attention and approval. He said that agreeing to some individuals' demands that they be given more freedom to the detriment of others and more democracy as an unlimited right to be undisturbed in insulting, disdaining and disqualifying others, would mean agreeing to less and less freedom and more and more conflicting situations, and that could present a serious obstacle to the further development of democratic relations and -- specifically in the SR of Slovenia -- a basis for putting forth demands for making order, for a firm hand, and for more repression, which contains only another form of an otherwise equal danger to the situation in our society in the future.

'ENEMY ACTIONS' IN SPLIT COMMUNITY REDUCED

LD021144 Belgrade TANJUG Domestic Service in Serbo-Croatian 1615 GMT 1 Jul 86

[Excerpts] Split, 1 Jul (TANJUG) -- Actions against nationalistic, clerico-nationalistic, and clerico-fascist manifestations in the Split Community of Municipalities area have produced visible results. The number of enemy actions has been reduced, and when they do occur they are reacted to in an appropriate manner. This was stressed at the session of the presidium of the conference of the Croatian LC of the Split Community of Municipalities.

It was pointed out that the sensitivity of our working people and citizens has been stepped up when the revolution's achievements are under attack, and this especially applies to attacks against brotherhood and unity. The Federation of War Veterans joined in the LC action in Dalmatia, but proper activity on the part of the trade unions and of the youth organizations somehow failed to materialize.

It was noted that the struggle against nationalistic and other negative manifestations primarily called for political and educational action, and only then for judicial punishment. For this reason and within the framework of the struggle against the protagonists of negative and enemy manifestations, the basic task is to curb their underlying reasons, and this means that more work must be done to develop the economy and make it possible to work in partnership, to employ young people, to build houses; in a word, to assert the principles of self-management socialism. It was noted during the session that the weight of enemy activity is now concentrated on work stoppages in associated labor, and such activity is being encountered in school and student residence halls.

REPORT ON ISLAMIC COMMUNITY IN MACEDONIA

LD012230 Belgrade TANJUG Domestic Service in Serbo-Croatian 1121 GMT 1 Jul 86

[Text] Skoplje, 1 Jul (TANJUG) -- The republican commission for relations with the religious communities of Macedonia, in considering the report on the work of the elders of the Islamic community in this respect, assessed that its activity is basically developing within the law and the Constitution. The report says, however, that an expansion in the activities of this religious community in all forms has been noticed and strict adherence to the regulations is sought.

It is assessed, says the commission's statement, that the Islamic community in Macedonia has not fully adhered to the stance of analyzing realistically the needs of believers and that the number of religious buildings is excessive. The same applies to the schooling of pupils and students in the country and abroad. Within this framework, consideration was also given to the phenomena that a significant number of pupils and students are completing their schooling abroad. Proceeding from the fact that ideological indoctrination should not be permitted through these forms of schooling, the Islamic community in Macedonia was therefore advised to direct pupils and students to the appropriate institutions in the country.

Religious instruction, it was assessed, has not always been carried out in accordance with the law. Classes have lasted longer than they should, certain pressures have been exerted on children, and instruction has been carried out by persons who are not officially part of the Islamic community. On the other hand, it was assessed, the stances of some municipal commissions that religious instruction should be banned when the ensured conditions for this are envisaged by law, are untenable.

Information was also considered on the mass departure of women to the mosques in Kumanovo, Skopje, and some other places. Within this framework, religious instruction has been organized outside the legal stipulations and the lecturers are underage girls who have no right to do this. The commission does not accept the explanation that the departure of women to the mosque for religious instructions is the result of their emancipation, because this is in contrast to the social position of women and their real emancipation.

The commission assessed that such forms of activity are unacceptable and are not in the spirit of building constructive relations between the social community and the Islamic community, among other things because they are used as a method of applying pressure to achieve the specific demands of the Islamic community. The building of correct relations with the religious communities can only be based on strict adherence to legal stipulations, the communique concludes.

NATIONAL COUNCIL DISCUSSES GOVERNMENT STATEMENT

Proceedings Reported

LD031026 Prague Domestic Service in Czech and Slovak 0800 GMT 3 Jul 86

[Text] Deputies of the Czech National Council are discussing the program statement of the Czech SR Government at their meeting today. Here is a report on the proceedings from reporter Lubos Lidicky at the Palace of Culture in Prague:

A presentation of the Czech Government's program statement is now being given by its Prime Minister Josef Korcak. He stated that the government's approach in working out in detail the conclusions of the 17th CPCZ Congress is one of critical exactingness. Despite the undoubted success achieved by a number of sectors directly managed by the government, there are weak areas in the work of all sectors, Comrade Korcak stated. In this light, there are fundamental tasks facing each minister, each economic production unit and enterprise, which they must begin to tackle immediately. Therefore, the government program does not overlook any sphere of the life of society which is a determining factor in our further successful development. This involves an improvement in the planned management of the economy, consistent application of sound economic principles in investment construction, modernization of different sectors of industry, new approaches in agricultural production, and a more critical view of the forestry and water management sector.

The Czech Government also sets itself the task of dealing with the problem of the use of secondary production materials, the problem of environmental formation and protection, and with important sectoral issues such as trade, science, education, and culture, as well as issues of enhancing socialist democracy. The Government of the Czech SR and the Czech National Council are faced with very demanding tasks whose fulfillment will call for great effort, responsibility and patient work. We will have to improve management work, including that of the government itself, Comrade Korcak insisted, in addition to influencing the thinking of all the working people, stimulating their activity, and making more effective use of this activity to speed up the country's economic and social development.

Joint reporter Marie Jarosova also will speak later at today's meeting of the Czech National Council which is being conducted by its chairman, Josef Kempny. Eight deputies, who are chairmen of the individual committees, have already applied to speak in the debate.

[Report on the "program statement of the Government of the Slovak SR" delivered by Slovak Premier Peter Colotka at the second meeting of the Slovak National Council in Bratislava on 4 July presented by "parliamentary correspondent" Ladislav Mikus -- passages in quotation marks recorded].

[Text] The new Government of the Slovak SR today in Bratislava presented its program statement to the deputies at the second meeting of the Slovak National Council.

Viliam Salgovic, member of the Presidium of the CPSL Central Committee and chairman of the Slovak National Council, welcomed at the meeting Jozef Lenart, member of the Presidium of the CPCZ Central Committee and first secretary of the CPSL Central Committee, and the Government of the Slovak SR headed by its Premier Peter Colotka, member of the Presidium of the CPCZ Central Committee, and members of the Presidium and the Secretariat of the CPSL Central Committee. He especially welcomed representatives of the consular corps in Bratislava. Our parliamentary correspondent, Ladislav Mikus, reports on the course of the session of today's second meeting of the Slovak National Council:

Viliam Salgovic, the chairman of the Slovak National Council, at the beginning of the meeting introduced all the members of the government that were appointed on 18 June of this year to the deputies. Then the program statement of the Government of the Slovak SR was delivered by Premier Peter Colotka.

In it the government expresses, he said, its will and determination to consistently secure the line of all-round development the way it was set out by the 17th CPCZ Congress and the Congress of the CPSL and was adopted as its own by the National Front. He went on to say:

[Colotka] "The Government of the Slovak SR and its organs are above all aiming their attention at increasing the output and efficiency of the economy in Slovakia. In harmony with current economic conditions, we expect Slovakia in the Eighty 5-Year Plan to have more dynamic economic development when, with the statewide increase in the national income of 18-19 percent, the creation of the national income in the Slovak SR should rise by 23-25 percent. The planned growth of the national income is an exceptionally demanding task because we must achieve it through progressive structural changes with a much more effective use of all production factors and a higher use of fuels, energy, and raw material resources and technically progressive and high-quality products. This is why the considerable rise in the quality of products represents, as was pointed out by Comrade Jozef Lenart in the report to the CPSL Congress, a role of foremost political and economic importance. We must, in the government, at ministries, and in the economic and enterprise sphere, manage, plan, organize and stimulate production in such a way as to achieve in Slovakia in this 5-year plan at least a 20 percent share of products of high technical economic level, and thus honorably fulfill this congress task.

"The demanding nature of the tasks requires that we overcome old thinking at all levels of management as well as approaches connected with extensive development. The time demands a more conceptual, imaginative, and fully responsible approach to solving and securing tasks, particularly in those areas that are decisive in the intensification and growth of efficiency. We will be concerned with considerably speeding up scientific and technical development; with more economically using investment means; with deepening international cooperation; with perfecting planned management; and, not least, with developing and more completely using the creative abilities and initiative of the workers."

Then Comrade Peter Colotka spoke in detail about individual sectors managed by the Government of the Slovak SR, about concentrating on the research and agricultural implementation of the results of the chemical industry and wood processing, the protection of the environment and the perfecting of health care. He pointed out the reserves in investment building and in the deepening of international economic, scientific and technical cooperation. Then he concerned himself with the tasks of construction, transport and agriculture and questions of the growth of the standard of living, services, housing, education, health services, social care and culture and the perfecting of the work of the national committees. In this connection he said:

[Colotka] "In the forefront of the lasting attention of the government and the relevant ministries will be the increase in the political and expert qualities of state management carried out by the national committees, increasing administrative demand and rationalization of labor and its apparatus. Deputies, elected organs, and officials must demand full responsibility for the quality of state management from the apparatus and a sensitive approach to the citizens, and they must be more decisive in dealing with existing manifestations of bureacracy, indifference, and individual law violations. At the same time national committees must take care to ensure that, in connection with their rights, citizens fulfill duties set by law, because only in this indivisible unity is it possible to strengthen the life certainties of society and its individual citizens.

We have reserves for further improving the efficiency of management in improving the work methods and effectiveness of individual ministries and other central organs of state management as well as in deepening their mutual action, particularly in [word indistinct] and sector ministeries. We will more effectively struggle against parochial sector interests, we will demand that management workers implement the interests of society and in this direction strengthen the coordinating function of objective organs, the deputy premier of the government and the government itself. The Government of the Slovak SR approachs the tasks that were set out by the 17th CPCZ Congress and the CPSL Congress with the resolution to make a maximum contribution to speeding up social economic development; to increasing the economic and defense potential of our society; to strengthening the fraternal coexistance of the Czechs, Slovaks and other nationalities; and to further strengthening the unity of the Republic. Together with the highest representative organ of the Republic, the Slovak National Council -- which by its activity has consistently developed the revolutionary traditions of the Slovak SR from the period of the Slovak national uprising and the epoch of the building of socialism -- and the organs and organizations of the National Front, under the leadership of the CPCZ, we will unify the efforts of our workers, agriculture workers, members of the intelligentsia and of all the working people to effectively contribute to the flourishing of our Slovakia and all of our Czechoslovak homeland to strengthen the cause of socialism and to preserve lasting peace for the present and future generations of our beautiful homeland, which is dear to us all."

After Peter Colotka's speech, 16 deputies spoke in the discussion. They all expressed support for the program statement of the government because it concentrates all its efforts toward speeding up the social economic development of our society. The discussion was, however, in a critical spirit. It positively evaluated the results achieved up to now, but it made a number of proposals on improving further work. The deputies asked that greater emphasis be placed on the modernization of the production technology base for the reduction of material and energy demand, on questions of planning and management so that greater effectiveness is achieved, and on the importance not only of education but also on upbringing regarding ones attitude toward work and society.

In the adopted resolution, the Slovak National Council approved the program statement of the Government of the Slovak SR and expressed confidence in the government. At the close the deputies approved the report on the activity of the Presidium of the Slovak National Council in the last period.

After the second meeting, the Slovak National Council Presidium declared the spring session closed.

Deputies Express 'Agreement'

LD032109 Prague Domestic Service in Czech 1430 GMT 3 Jul 86

[Text] Deputies of the Czech National Council at their meeting in Prague today expressed agreement with the Czech Government program statement and expressed confidence in the government in a unanimously adopted resolution.

In the closing speech, Josef Korcak, member of the Presidium of the CPCZ Central Committee, premier of the Czech Government, thanked the deputies for their active approach to the session on the program statement and assured them that the conclusions and points brought up during the dicussion will be used by the government in its future activity.

Josef Kempny, member of the Presidium of the CPCZ Central Committee, chairman of the Czech National Council, emphasized that the Czech National Council will support the government and help as much as possible within its constitutional means in the effort to fulfill the government program in the next 5 years in the interest of the successful development of the Czech and Czechoslovak SR. He expressed the conviction that by joint effort in the legislative, regulative, and initiating activity, all tasks will be fulfilled and both organs will thus contribute to the realization of the conclusions of the 17th CPCZ Congress.

GOVERNMENT 'EVALUATES' DRAFT 5-YEAR PLAN

LD031750 Prague Domestic Service in Czech 1630 GMT 3 Jul 86

[Text] The Presidium of the CPCZ Central Committee and the federal government evaluated the proposed draft Eighth 5-Year Plan for the development of the national economy and the plan for scientific and technical development for 1986-1990, and draft state operational plans for the next year.

They stated that the draft plans secure the conclusions of the 17th CPCZ Congress and the tasks contained in the Main Guidelines of Economic and Social Development of the Republic. In particular, they secure the basic strategic task, the speeding up of social economic development by way of intensification; the implementation of science and technology; and the development of economic and scientific and technical cooperation with CEMA countries, in particular with the Soviet Union by way of improving the quality of production and making better use of all resources in the interests of further growth of the standard of living of the people and the securing of the defense capability of our country.

The Presidium of the party's Central Committee and the federal government have charged party organs and organizations, members of governments and leading economic officials, with working out the tasks of the Eighth 5-Year Plan and the operational plan for the next year in economic production units and enterprises into concrete measures, and thus create the necessary conditions for their fulfillment. They emphasized that one of the decisive prerequisites of the realization of the goals set out is an improvement in management and organizational work, consistent familiarization with the demanding tasks of the plans, and discussion of how they are to be secured with all workers. At the same time, they emphasized the need to concentrate on the fulfillment of the tasks of the plan for this year, the first year of the Eighth 5-Year Plan, especially in its qualitative indicators.

The Presidium of the CPCZ Central Committee and the federal government expect that wide development of initiative and activity of the workers, particularly aimed at achieving high efficiency and economy, will make a significant contribution to the fullfilment of the tasks set out.

COMMENTARY VIEWS POLAND'S 10TH PARTY CONGRESS

LD051419 Prague in Czech and Slovak to Europe 2230 GMT 4 Jul 86

[Vaclav Kasnicka commentary]

[Text] The 10th PZPR Congress which took place this week in Warsaw exceptionally attracted great attention from the whole world. This is why Vaclav Kvasnicka chose this as the topic for the commentary of the week:

In the past period the congresses of almost all communist and workers parties of socialist countries have already taken place. Of course, every one of them had its specific characteristics, but they had one thing in common. This was the effort to achieve a qualitatively higher stage of the development of socialism for the benefit of the people of those countries and for the strengthening of security and peace in the world.

Despite this, the 10th PZPR Congress was in one respect different from the others. This is because it took place after the people of Poland as well as the PZPR had experienced a period of great crisis which was unfavorably projected into the life of society and of every Pole. It meant a serious test in the struggle for socialism. This is why if Wojciech Jaruzelski, first secretary of the PZPR Central Committee, could declare from the congress platform that the enemy's claims that the Polish nation is disappointed in socialism are not true, and that on the contrary that the majority of Polish society supports the goals of the socialist system, then this is a great victory not only for Polish Communists but for socialism as such.

At the same time the Polish experiences teach us that the struggle for socialism is not easy, that it takes place in a world full of antagonism, in a world in which the historic struggle between socialism and capitalism is taking place, a struggle which is being projected into all spheres of our, and international life, and in the form of the crusade by Washington against communism which has a fully planned and massively financed objective. This is why the Polish crisis at the end of the seventies and beginning of the eighties was primarily a reflection of the situation and complicated nature of the present confrontation of the two social systems. At that time in Washington they were already tolling the bell for socialism in Poland, and Reagan's administration made no secret of the fact that Poland was ready to bury socialism and part company with the other socialist states.

Precisely during this period of modern Polish history is found the source of many lessons which are valid not only for the Polish people. The most important of these is that despite the complicated nature of resolving the tasks of building socialism and the heightening destructive influence of foreign enemy centers, socialism has grown deep roots and the workers of socialist countries cannot imagine life without it. For the Polish crisis was not a protest of the Polish worker, the resistance of Polish workers to socialism; rather it was primarily a protest against those deformations that cost the Poles dearly and about which Wojciech Jaruzelski spoke so openly even from the congress platform. This basic lesson from the Polish crisis however, was explained by many in the West in their own way.

They said that they were concerned about the fate of the Polish nation, but in reality they were concerned with the liquidation of socialism in Poland. And when they did not succeed they unleashed a feverish anti-Polish campaign and inflicted a whole number of discriminatory sanctions against Poland.

At present, the U.S. Administration in particular feels so strong that in addition to a differentiated approach toward individual socialist states, in which it attempts to give preference to some to the detriment of others to drive a wedge between them, it also employs a joint global strategy against them all. It is attempting to cripple the economic strength of socialism with the arms race. This is why they speak openly in Washington of the fact that Ronald Reagan is trying to bring the Soviet Union to its knees through the arms race. That is also why he does not want to agree to any disarmament proposals from the Soviet Union and is relying on military power. Such a power game is in reality an expression of moral and political weakness of the leading force of the imperialist world, the United States.

This is also why Mikhail Gorbachev, head of the Soviet delegation, said from the platform of the 10th PZPR Congress that we have a comradely interest in Poland being a strong, independent socialist state, an active member of the socialist community and a strong link within it. This corresponds to the vital interests of the Polish people and our joint cause. Yes, it corresponds to the historic struggle for social progress and peace in the world. This is why the course and results of the congress of Polish communists pleased the allies of socialism and peace and were a disappointment to those who oppose it.

TURKISH FOREIGN AFFAIRS MINISTER ARRIVES

Received by Chnoupek

LD031618 Prague Domestic Service in Czech and Slovak 1600 GMT 3 Jul 86

[Text] Vahit Halefoglu, minister of foreign affairs of the Republic of Turkey, and his wife, arrived today for an official visit to Czechoslovakia. The guest and his entourage were welcomed at the airport by Bohuslav Chnoupek, Czechoslovak minister of foreign affairs, and other representatives.

Holds Talks With Chnoupek

LD041052 Prague Domestic Service in Czech 1030 GMT 4 Jul 86

[Text] Talks took place today in Prague's Cernin Palace between Bohuslav Chnoupek and Vahit Halefoglu, ministers of foreign affairs of Czechoslovakia and the Republic of Turkey.

The two ministers noted that relations between the two countries are stable, and are developing on the firm foundations and principles of peaceful coexistence between states with different social systems, and of mutual advantage. They confirmed their governments' interest in raising contacts in the political sphere to a higher level. They also exchanged views on further intensification of economic cooperation, using all modern forms including the expansion of production cooperation, and cooperation in third markets.

The Czechoslovak side expressed readiness to provide further supplies of investment equipment for the Turkish rubber and chemical industry, and particularly for power engineering.

Bohuslav Chnoupek and Vahit Halefoglu pointed out both sides' interest in establishing cooperation in agriculture, and in stepping up cultural exchanges, and they discussed ways of developing cooperation between the mass media of the two states.

Attends Luncheon

[Text] Bohuslav Chnoupek, minister of foreign affairs, and his wife, gave an official luncheon today in honor of Vahit Halefoglu, minister of foreign affairs of the Republic of Turkey, and his wife.

In a speech at the luncheon, Bohuslav Chnoupek underlined the importance of the appeal to reduce armed forces and conventional weapons in Europe adopted at the Budapest session of the Warsaw Pact Political Consultative Committee. He stressed that together with our allies, we are striving to ensure that even in the current complicated situation, businesslike talks should continue with a view to averting the danger of nuclear war. Our program, continued Bohuslav Chnoupek, is one of building a comprehensive system of international security.

Received by Husak

[Text] President of the Republic Gustav Husak received Turkish Foreign Minister Vahit Halefoglu in Prague castle today.

They positively assessed the long-standing Czechoslovak-Turkish relations, and indicated ways of further expanding and strengthening them during their talk. Both sides stressed that the development of mutual relations and cooperation is in keeping with the spirit of the principles of peaceful coexistence between states with different social systems, and with the effort to ensure lasting peace throughout the world.

Received by Strougal

LD041716 Prague CTK in English 1606 GMT 4 Jul 86

[Text] Prague, July 4 (CTK) -- Visiting Turkish Foreign Minister Vahit Halefoglu was received today by Czechoslovak Premier Lubomir Strougal.

The Czechoslovak premier said he was convinced that the visit will mean an important step towards the development of political, economic, and cultural relations between the two countries.

The two officials stressed that it was necessary and advantageous to intensify economic and scientific-technological cooperation which, as regards its extent, does not correspond to the economic potentials of Czechoslovakia and Turkey.

Interviewed by Prague Radio

LD051415 Prague in Czech and Slovak to Europe 2230 GMT 4 Jul 86

[Text] Vahit Halefoglu, the Turkish minister of foreign affairs, gave an interview to Josef Valiska of Prague Radio. When asked about the results of his talks with Czechoslovak representatives and how he sees perspectives of Czechoslovak-Turkish cooperation, he replied:

[Begin Halefoglu recording in English fading into Czech translation] In my opinion there are four main areas. First, I would like to speak about trade exchange. This should develop, the commodity structure of our trade should be widened, and a balance of the Czechoslovak-Turkish trade should be achieved. Second, there is economic cooperation, whether by means of joint action in Turkey or by way of Czechoslovak-Turkish cooperation on third markets. Third, the area of culture is of great significance because both our countries have rich cultural traditions and they therefore have something to offer in the cultural field. And finally it is necessary to take care to exchange information about political problems. We decided that we will regularly continue meetings between the foreign ministers of Czechoslovakia and Turkey and their colleagues, because this helps the development of mutual relations. I think that the present level of cooperation is not yet satisfactory, and that is why we should build foundations for wider and stronger cooperation. [end recording]

Chnoupek Hosts Dinner

LD041354 Prague CTK in English 1306 GMT 4 Jul 86

[Text] Prague, July 4 (CTK) -- Czechoslovak Foreign Minister Bohuslav Chnoupek said today at a dinner for his Turkish guest Vahit Halefoglu that good preconditions exist for the successful development of Czechoslovak-Turkish economic relations.

He pointed out the usefulness of political dialogue between the two countries and called for its extension. He voiced interest in intensification of economic and cultural cooperation.

Bohuslav Chnoupek said the international situation was complex, due to the policy of neoglobalism of the most reactionary imperialist circles which are trying to upset strategic balance.

The minister stressed that matter-of-fact talks should continue to avert the danger of nuclear war. He said the socialist countries seek to establish a comprehensive system of international security and regard complete liquidation of nuclear weapons by the end of the century as its most important part.

Bohuslav Chnoupek stressed the importance of the Warsaw Treaty appeal to reduce armed forces and conventional armament in Europe and mentioned the Czechoslovak-GDR proposal to create a zone without chemical weapons in Central Europe, and other peace initiatives.

Czechoslovakia believes that all preconditions exist to achieve a peaceful and just solution in all regions of conflict and tension, from the Mediterranean, the Middle East, across the south of Africa as far as Central America, Bohuslav Chnoupek said.

FISCHER, USSR'S LOGINOV DISCUSS 'PEACE PROGRAM'

LD032215 East Berlin ADN International Service in German 1838 GMT 3 Jul 86

[Text] Berlin, 3 Jul (ADN) -- GDR Foreign Minister Oskar Fischer and USSR Deputy Foreign Minister Vadim Loginov expressed at a meeting [date, place not specified] the deep interest of their countries in a beneficial international development. On the basis of the latest meeting of the Warsaw Pact Political Consultative Council in Budapest, they will do everything to contribute to an improvement of the world situation.

The socialist countries have again pointed the way in which the tense international situation can be overcome and mankind liberated from the nightmare of a nuclear conflagration, the ministers said. They affirmed that the GDR and the USSR, in the closest cooperation with the other socialist fraternal states, will use every opportunity to realize socialism's complex peace program. It is the declared goal to free the world from all nuclear weapons and to prevent the militarization of space. An end to nuclear tests would be a significant step toward a stop to the arms race.

The partners in the talks stressed that the Stockholm conference on confidence-building measures and disarmament in Europe should be concluded with substantial results.

MITTAG-LED DELEGATION ARRIVES IN TOKYO FOR TALKS

LD031623 East Berlin ADN International Service in German 1331 GMT 3 Jul 86

[Text] Tokyo, 3 Jul (ADN) -- Guenter Mittag, Politburo member and secretary of the SED Central Committee, and deputy chairman of the GDR State Council, arrived in Tokyo today for a several-day visit to Japan. He was invited by Ichiro Sato, chairman of the Parliamentary Consultative Committee of the Liberal-Democratic Party for Japan-GDR economic questions.

The program of the visit, it was officially stated at a press conference given by the Japanese Foreign Ministry, includes talks with Prime Minister Yasuhiro Nakasone, Foreign Minister Shintaro Abe, other leading politicians, and representatives of industry and trade on the further development of mutually advantageous relations between the GDR and Japan.

Guenter Mittag is accompanied by Dr Gerhard Beil, GDR minister of foreign trade, and Secretary of State Dr Alexander Schalck-Golodkowski. On their arrival at Haneda Airport, the guests were given a warm welcome by Ichiro Sato and chairman of the Japan-GDR Economic Committee, Dr Eishiro Saito.

The two Japanese politicians assessed the visit as being a new sign of the good relations between the two states, and expressed the conviction that it would serve their further development. One of the major tasks concerning current foreign policy is that the leading politicians of the two countries should meet and discuss important matters directly, Ichiro Sato said in the talk.

The airport welcoming ceremony was also attended by the executive members of the Japan-GDR Economic Committee, Yuzuru Abe, Gakuji Moriya, H. Suzuki, Bing Igarashi and H. Matsuda, secretary of the Parliamentary Consultative Committee.

The GDR ambassador to Japan, Dieter Jaeger, and directors general of GDR foreign trade enterprises and combines were also present.

In a statement to the Japanese press, Guenter Mittag praised the level of cooperation achieved in various spheres since the state visit by Erich Honecker to Japan in 1981, especially in politics, the economy and culture. In this the GDR is guided by the paramount principle that cooperation between states serves peace.

Together with the Soviet Union and the other Warsaw Pact states, the GDR consistently works for an end to the arms race on earth and to prevent it from spreading into space, Guenther Mittag said in his statement. The new disarmament proposals contained in the Budapest appeal of the Warsaw Pact states shows an immediately viable path for averting the disaster of a nuclear war and for improving the international situation.

The GDR is conducting a political dialogue with states with different social orders so that modertion, reason, and realism retain the upper hand in international relations.

In this sense he also looks forward to his forthcoming talks in Tokyo with interest, and the certainty that they will help to deepen the relations between the GDR and Japan and thereby at the same time serve to preserve peace.

During Guenter Mittag's visit to Japan the 15th joint session of the GDR-Japan and Japan-GDR economic committees will also take place. From 4-7 July 1986, the members of the two bodies will discuss scope for expanding trade and economic relations, and will reach agreement on a working program through the end of 1987. During a stopover in Moscow on Wednesday evening, Guenter Mittag held a warm, friendly talk with Aleksey Antonov, deputy chairman of the USSR Council of Ministers.

Visits Scientific Institutions

[Text] Tokyo, 4 Jul (ADN) -- On the second day of his visit to Japan, Guenter Mittag, Politburo member and secretary of the SED Central Committee, deputy chairman of the GDR State Council, visited research institutes in Tsukuba, the scientists' city near Tokyo, today. Specialists in various spheres informed him about the latest developments in the fields of microelectronics robot technology, laser technology, high energy, and other high technologies.

On his return, Guenter Mittag had a cordial meeting in the evening in Tokyo with the chairman of the Dietman's League for Japan-GDR Friendship, Yoshihiko Tsuchiya.

Mittag, Eishiro Saito Holds Talks

LD061230 East Berlin ADN International Service in German 1038 GMT 6 Jul 86

[Text] Tokyo, 6 Jul (ADN) -- Guenter Mittag, member of the Politburo and secretary of the SED Central Committee, deputy chairman of the GDR State Council, held talks with Dr Eishiro Saito, chairman of the Keidanren and of the Japan-GDR Economic Committee, at the guest house of the Japanese employers' federation Keidanren in Hakone near Tokyo on Sunday.

He pointed out that, on the basis of the directive for the development of the national economy during the 1986-90 5-Year Plan adopted by the 11th SED Congress, expanded opprtunities exist for increasing economic relations as well as scientific-technological relations.

Guenter Mittag also underlined that the GDR-Japan and Japan-GDR Economic Committees, which have been in existence for 15 years, have made a great contribution to the further development of economic relations.

Dr Saito praised the GDR's steady economic development and the comprehensive, mutually beneficial, relations between leading Japanese firms and foreign trade enterprises, and combines of the GDR. Good conditions and relevant interest will continue to exist on the Japanese side for the development of this economic cooperation.

In the course of the meeting the two sides emphasized that the peaceful coexistence of states with differing social orders and the path of comprehensive disarmament were the bases of the prospect of constructive cooperation which served the prosperity of the peoples.

The meeting was also attended by Dr Gerhard Beil, minister of foreign trade and chairman of the GDR-Japan Economic Committee.

VACLAVIK, CSSR DELEGATION CONTINUE VISIT

Received by Honecker

LD032038 Prague Domestic Service in Czech and Slovak 1400 GMT 3 Jul 86

[Excerpt] Erich Honecker, general secretary of the SED Central Committee and chairman of the GDR State Council, received a delegation of the Czechoslovak People's Army today in Berlin, led by Colonel General Milan Vaclavik, minister of national defense. Erich Honecker praised the visit of the military delegation as a new expression of the close links between the parties, people and armies of the two fraternal socialist countries. Their fraternal bond has proved to be a stable factor of peace on the dividing line between socialism and imperialism in Europe, he stated. Both sides confirmed that together with the Soviet Union and the other fraternal states, they will do everything necessary to further strengthen the unbreakable bond of the Warsaw Pact states in the interests of safeguarding peace.

EEC URGED TO LIFT IMPORT RESTRICTIONS

LD040858 Budapest MTI in English 0759 GMT 4 Jul 86

[Text] Budapest, July 4 (MTI) -- The Hungarian Government has recently informed the Commission of the European Communities on its continued readiness to sign an agreement with the European Economic Community (EEC) on lifting, within reasonable time, the discriminative non-tariff import restrictions that are incompatible with the general agreement on tariffs and trade. At present some 300 Hungarian agricultural and industrial products are exposed to discrimination by the common market countries. It is all the more unfavourable for Hungary, as 40 per cent of its hard-currency exports go to the EEC countries. Hungary also considers the lifting of discriminative measures an important political issue.

Hungary first expressed readiness to sign a bilateral trade agreement with EEC in 1982-1983. Talks were held, both on high and expert level, with the EC commission and the various memberstates to find out whether the conditions were ripe for official commercial talks with EEC. The answer was no.

The EEC member states have compiled separate lists of imports from the socialist countries (except Yugoslavia) exposed to discrimination. Hungary was mainly hit by the French and Italian embargboes. It exports, for instance, 10 million dollars' worth of honey a year to the EEC and it could increase deliveries many times over if the restrictions were lifted.

Hungary holds the position that the majority of the restrictions cannot be justified by any economic consideration, but are based upon political motivations, as was once again proved in May when EEC, on the pretext of the Chernobyl accident, limited the import of farm produce and food.

Hungary is of the view that the terms of an eventual agreement with the EEC have not changed since 1982-1983. It demands that, under the rules of GATT signed by Hungary in 1973, EEC should lift the unlawful quantitative restrictions imposed on Hungarian goods, and expects the EEC to grant the same customs preferences to its farm and food exports as to the rival countries.

VARKONYI ARRIVES IN FRG FOR 'OFFICIAL VISIT'

LD062334 Budapest Domestic Service in Hungarian 2000 GMT 6 Jul 86

[Text] Foreign Minister Peter Varkonyi has arrived in the FRG. He was invited for an official visit by Hans-Dietrich Genscher, foreign minister of the Federal Government.

Talks Begin

LD071050 Budapest Domestic Service in Hungarian 1000 GMT 7 Jul 86

[Text] The Hungarian Foreign Minister has begun his talks in the West German capital. Zsolt Szalai reports:

Peter Varkonyi, who has a rich program for today, is currently paying a visit to Helmut Kohl. This morning he has already had one round of talks with Hans-Dietrich Genscher, the West German foreign minister. Besides this, he also met the speaker of the Bundestag and several leaders of the Social Democrats. He will hold also talks with representatives of the other parliamentary parties, including the Greens and the Democrats. Tomorrow, directly before leaving for home, he will be received by President von Weizsaecker.

According to information gained at the FRG Ministry of Foreign Affairs, besides reviewing relations between the two countries, Peter Varkonyi's visit is considered very significant here also from the point of view of the development of East-West relations. Genscher wants to find out more details about the most recent Budapest proposals of the Warsaw Pact before his official visit to Moscow during the second half of this month, Also, the Hungarian-West German foreign ministerial talks held here and the Soviet-West German foreign ministerial talks to be held in Moscow incidentally coincide with the U.S. statements that are less negative concerning the Soviet disarmament proposals, something that could animate East-West dialogue.

ECONOMIC CONGRESS VIEWS ENTERPRISE MANAGEMENT

LD042140 Budapest Television Service in Hungarian 1730 GMT 4 Jul 86

[Text] The 25th itinerary congress of economists opened in Miskolc today. It will deal with topical issues of our economic policy, such as the desirable enterprise conduct, strategy, and cooperation. The itinerary congress was addressed this morning by Lenard Pal, secretary of the MSZMP Central Committee. He said, among other things:

[Begin recording] It is well known that one of the major obstacles to the improvement of enterprise economic management is the restricted nature of the enterprises; room to maneuver. Today's biggest problems are posed by the lack of fulfillment of the investment requirements that are considered necessary, the far too slow trickle of working capital imports, the unsatisfactory rate of capital reorientation, and the excessive centralization of earnings.

Creating the conditions necessary for modernizing production is indeed difficult without investment. Despite this, I believe that the barrier to progress should not be sought today in the level of accumulation, which is not slow in our country by international standards. The reasons for the slow rate in the modernization of production should be sought, among other things, in the inadequate, not intensive enough utilization of investment resources, in the low efficiency of investment processes and, first and foremost, in the fact that a large proportion of realized investment projects were of the kind that simply expanded capacity and preserved the old technology and production.

The deduction of a significant portion of the profits is, as you are well aware, a temporary measure forced upon us. As soon as demand for support from the budget can be reduced, and if the foreign trade balance improves, then it will be possible to fully implement in this area as well as the requirements aimed at increasing efficiency.

It is also true, however, that, despite the far-reaching centralization of earnings in the first 5 months of 1986, the enterprise investments' total exceeded that of the same period last year by 12 percent and the wages paid increased by 7.3 percent; and yet industrial production only rose by 1.7 percent in the same period. (end recording].

10TH PZPR CONGRESS ENDS WITH ELECTIONS ON 3 JUL

Czyrek Proposes Jaruzelski Candidacy

LD032313 Warsaw PAP in English 2042 GMT 3 Jul 86

[Excerpts] Warsaw, July 3: On Thursday, July 3 at 09:00 hours the debates of the 10th Congress of the Polish United Workers' Party resumed behind closed doors. This part of debate was presided over by Kazimierz Barcikowski.

Chairman of the Returns Commission Tadesuz Czechowicz presented the results of elections to central party authorities, held Wednesday [2 July] night. The protocol of the Returns Commission states the election of a 230-person Central Committee and a 130-person Central Audit-Control Commission. On behalf of the Returns Commission, its chairman congratulated the newly elected Central Committee of the PUWP and the Central Audit-Control Commission. The congratulations and wishes were received by the delegates with an ovation.

On behalf of the congress Presidium, Jozef Czyrek told the delegates the first plenum of the CC had proposed Wojciech Jaruzelski for first secretary of the CC, which the delegates welcomed with ovation.

"Proposing Wojciech Jaruzelski, the CC was aware that the candidate met the expectations of the delegates and the whole party," Czyrek said, to which the congress responded with long applause, just as the news that Jaruzelski had also been recommended by the Presidium of the Congress.

Czyrek said he believed there was no need to go ahead with elaborate justification of Jaruzelski's candidacy, as everybody knew his life story and role in the work of the party and state.

"He had fought for the homeland's independence and defended our Polish people's democratic revolution, amde outstanding contribution into the strengthening of People's Poland's defence potential and forming the ideological, politicial and patriotic profile of the Armed Forces which under his command passed its historic test, defending Poland, peace and socialism," Czyrek said. "At a time of unusual danger, he took upon his shoulders the great responsibility and hardship of overcoming a dangerous crisis and bringing the country onto a road of the socialist renewal, national agreement and rebirth," he added.

"Our congress has evaluated party and state achievements in that work and let that evaluation stand for the delegates' recommendation in support of Wojciech Jaruzelski's candidacy for the post of first secretary," Czyrek said to long, intense applause from the delegates. "To implement the grandiose and difficult tasks posed by the congress, the party and country will need a helmsman of just that stature, so much dedicated to the cause of the nation and its socialist state, a creative architect of further, socialist transformation of our homeland, and at the same time an unusually hard-working and modest man, one who is sensitive to people's problems and is a statesman of prominent contribution into strengthening Poland's role and position in the socialist community, Europe and worldwide.

"Considering Comrade Jaruzelski's life story, individual qualities, attitude and achievements, we can be confident that the resolutions and decisions of the congress will be consistently and with dedication implemented, for the benefit of the working people and their socialist homeland," Czyrek concluded.

Wojciech Jaruzelski received ovational welcome as candidate for the party's first secretary.

After a break, Czyrek announced to the delegates that in tune with the recommendation, the first plenary meeting of the Central Committee elected Wojciech Jaruzelski first secretary of the CC. It met with thunderous applause from the delegates.

New Central Committee Meets

LD032255 Warsaw PAP in English 1624 GMT 3 Jul 86

[Excerpts] Warsaw, July 3: During a break in the debates of the last day of the 10th PUWP Congress, the newly elected PUWP Central Committee had its first full session here today to nominate candidates to the post of its first secretary and to elect the Political Bureau and PUWP CC Secretariat. According to regulations on the election of PUWP delegates, authorities, and control organs, the Presidium of the Congress consults the delegates for nomineees to the post of the CC first secretary. According to these regulations, the number of nominees to the latter post is decided upon by party committees, which they do in an open voting.

Henryk Jablonski, the doyen of CC members, took the floor to speak on the election of the first secretary. He said he was expressing the wish of not only members of congress Presidium but of all participants in the congress as well as of over two million party members that he who had taken the party through the toughest period in history and was architect of multi-pronged actions which restored political and moral strength to the party chose to continue to hold the post of the helmsman of the PUWP CC. His actions let the Polish working class recover its leading role within the nation and let the Polish People's Republic resume its due place in the family of socialist countries, Jablonoski said.

Jablonski also pointed to the fact that the party starts a new stage on the road mapped out five years back. This is the source of unanimity and the universal conviction about the need for continuation at the toughest and most responsible post within the party, he said.

Wojciech Jaruzelski's candidature to the post was received with an ovation, and no other nominees were named for the post. The Central Committee approved the candidature by open voting, with one abstention (by Wojciech Jaruzelski). The candidature proposed by the Central Committee next received full approval of both the congress Presidium and delegates to the congress.

Next, a secret ballot meant to elect the first secretry was held. Taking part in the voting were the 229 members of the Central Committee present at the full session. Out of the 229 votes cast, 228 were cast in favour of Wojciech Jaruzelski.

Speaking on behalf of the Central Committee, Jozef Czyrek warmly congratulated Wojciech Jaruzelski upon being elected to the post. Said he: "The choice we have just made is concordant with the will and expectations of the 10th PUWP Congress and of our entire party. This means election of a leader to correspond to the huge, responsible tasks which the 10th Congress will have laid down for us to effect."

While addressing Wojciech Jaruzelski, Czyrek said: "We are deeply convinced that you will discharge these tasks with the same selflessness and commitment which were so characteristic of you in your to-date activities."

Wojciech Jaruzelski next took over as chairman of the session. He expressed warm thanks for electing him to the post, for confidence vested with him, which -- he said -- is a great obligation. Next, delegates to the congress were consulted on candidatures for Political Bureau and CC Secretariat during a break in the full session. The list of candidates, presented by CC First Secretary Wojciech Jaruzelski was approved of by the CC. Wojciech Jaruzelski conveyed cordial greetings of fruitful work to the elected members of the Political Bureau and the PUWP CC Secretariat.

Glowczyk Reviews Team's Work

LD031215 Warsaw Domestic Service in Polish 0951 GMT 3 Jul 86

[Speech by Jan Glowczyk, candidate member of the PZPR Central Committee Politburo, at 10th PZPR Central in Warsaw's Palace of Culture and Science -- live]

[Text] [Glowczyk] Esteemed comrades, on the third day of the 10th Congress, 310 delegates, together with the 700 invited guests, took part in the sessions of the 14 subject teams. Three hundred and ten delegates took part in the discussion -- a third of this number were workers -- and 27 invited guests took part in the discussion as well.

Seven hundred and seventy delegates and 37 guests submitted their speeches for inclusion in the protocol. If one counts others who wanted their speeches to be included in the protocol, in all 1,140 participants in the subject team sessions, including 1,080 delegates to the 10th Congress, had their say.

The reports of the discussions in the individual groups are included in the bulletin handed to the comrades. The conclusions published concern all areas, and form rich material for the work of the newly elected Central Committee. They have been conveyed to the congress resolution commission and will be utilized in drawing up the specifics of the schedule for implementing the resolution.

In the rich and varied discussions in the subject groups, unequivocal support was voiced for the course of the party's program, which was defined in the report by Comrade Wojciech Jaruzelski, first secretary of the Central Committee, for the course of effective implementation, the course of socialist consistence. [applause]

The tasks addressed to all party members and to party organizations and echelons concerning the economy and reform, intraparty activity, sociopolitical life, and the foreign policy of the party and the state, have met with approval from the delegates who have spoken in the groups. The discussion participants have expressed support for the draft party program, which was presented to the congress.

However, acceptance of the aims and tasks included in the documents presented to the congress was linked in the group discussion with criticism of the methods that have been applied to date and the style of work in the party and administration and public organizations. Many causes have been pointed out, including above all many subjective ones, for the incomplete implementation of the resolution of the Ninth Congress. Thought has been given to such forms of one's own work and that of others that would ensure effective implementation of the resolutions of the 10th Congress.

The deliberations of the groups dealing with socioeconomic problems were characterized by a party view of the economy and by criticism treated as creative inspiration for new and improved work. Most of the speeches pointed out the positive results of introduction of the economic reform, both in the functioning of enterprises and in the gradual redesign of the economic consciousness of society. The view was expressed that the main directions of reform adopted by the 10th Congress have proved themselves in practice.

At the same time, worrying phenomena have been reported. These include the tendency to keep using old habits and to continue to act in a way that fails to take account of rational criteria. Support was universally voiced for radically accelerating the economic reform. Contributions regarding this issue, made by workers and representatives of the community of engineers and of economic experts, were unanimous here. Acceleration is necessary at the current stage in order to be able to ensure effectiveness in a more efficient manner, to reach equilibrium faster, to strengthen work motivation, and to accelerate the increase of the national income. This will not come easy. Comrade Jerzy Sytek spoke of this in his fighting speech. We have not yet learned to pay for work. The pressure on remuneration is frequently in an inverse relation to productivity. We must come to learn the bitter taste of the reform, for without this it will not be effective.

The initiative to carry out a general review of organizational structures within the economy, the state, and the party, contained in the Central Committee report, has gained complete support. An opportunity for giving greater support to the economic reform was discerned in this grand undertaking.

Job certification and evaluation, said Comrade Bogdan Guz, from Radom, is a very important element of rationalization of employment. It cannot, however, be an action carried out in spurts and starts; rather, it must be a constant method of action. Many speakers drew attention to the necessity of accelerating the structural changes within the economy. It was pointed out that it is possible to attain this goal in stages, through rational structural decisions of self-financing enterprises.

These should be reflected in the changes of the profile and in modernization of production, in accelerating the processes whereby the final output is made to correspond more with modern requirements, in better adapting oneself to the market and export requirements.

Restructuring, said Comrade Mieczyslaw Lewandowski from Szczecin, is essential, although it is frequently a painful process. It will be less painful if we tackle it without waiting to go bankrupt.

Issues relating to orienting the economy more toward exports took up a great deal of time during the team sessions. It was pointed out that numerous industries and enterprises exist that have opportunities waiting to be used to increase export. Comrade Krystyna Besprzynska, a forewoman from the Zary Clothing Industry Enterprise, said that it was necessary to take a selective view of the development of export. The choice is difficult, but it is essential. One has to make a decision and chose enterprises capable of tackling competition on the world markets; it is these enterprises that need support.

The issue of enhancing the interest shown by enterprises in introducing technical innovations and of eliminating the barriers that impede modern solutions passing from the scientific superstructure to production process came to be regarded as one of the main issues.

The divergence between research and development work and the needs of industry, which continues to occur, was pointed out. The adversary of the engineer-innovator, it was stressed, if often not so much bureaucracy or bad regulations, but another engineer who has done nothing and has never invented anything. Party organizations should try to overcome envious groups which arise swiftly as soon as an unconventional innovation or solution is found.

The interest taken in the problems of the countryside and the food economy is proven by the participation in the teams of more than 200 delegates and invited guests. During the discussion they pointed out that the proper use made of resources depends on the agricultural industry itself and on other departments that work for the cause of agriculture. Just as the participants of plenary debates had done, they signaled the need for changes in the regulations governing land economy, for an improvement in the processes of selling and exchanging, and for the integration of land in such a way as to ensure, as Comrade Jerzy Swiderski said, that it finds itself in the best possible hands.

The possibility of increasing the production of food lies in the improvement of the agrarian structure, in the improvement of the professional qualifications of farmers, and in making up for the delays in the development of the agriculture and food industry. Jozef Rekowski, from the Gdansk Voivodship, said in part that progress in the agricultural and food processing industry will not only prevent wastage but will make branch of industry an important export unit. It was accepted that a significant task for the party is its role in inspiring the expansion and improvement of agricultural and cooperative self-management work in the countryside.

After matters relating to improvements in providing food for the nation the most important issue during the subject group sessions concerning the needs of society was the subject of housing construction. Participants insisted that the economic policy should place more stress on housing construction. In the present 5-year period this must be preceded by the expansion of industries that produce technical means and building materials in order that, in the next 5-year period, we can radically increase the speed of housing construction.

Those who are employed in the construction industry, among them Comrade Edward Krol from Lodz and Comrade Waclaw Maciolka from Legionowo, pointed out the depreciation of the fixed assets of the building industry and the shortage of modern machinery, even that of simple tools. In a critical and self-critical way attention was also drawn to the lack of consistency in the improvement of labor organization in the building industry and in the introduction of technical innovations.

Comrade Janina Hitnarowicz, master craftsman in the Szczecin Prefabud Enterprise, pointed out that there are everyday problems in this matter, problems that cause builders to have sleepless nights, she said. She also mentioned the numerous bureaucratic hindrances that she meets in the course of her work.

A demand was made to change the atmosphere that had been created around the building industry workers. It was decided that it would be worthwhile [uznano za celowe] to increase the financial contributions paid out by the population for new housing construction by implementing mechanisms that would favor the accumulation of means for this.

In the 13th subject group, in the discussion and the statements included in the minutes, the dominant feature was the concern to ensure financial, cadre, and organizational conditions for the efficient functioning of health protection and for halting the deterioration of the natural environment. It was also postulated that changes should be made in the organization of forestry.

Comrade Antoni Korniak, from Szczecin posed the question: Why is it that the health service operates within an anachronistic and nonaccountable system of budget allocations, whose framework holds up the development of health service projects, and destroys a lot of initiative and all motivation?

Esteemed comrade delegates, the discussion in many groups confirmed the appraisals contained in the report of the Central Committee concerning implementation of the 10th Congress, resolution, and the state of the party, the state, and the economy, as well as the conclusions ensuring from those appraisals. The discussion focused on the search for an answer: How to effectively, efficiently, and adroitly implement the party program after the 10th Congress, and heighten the consistency of work? A great deal of attention was devoted to the party's style of work. The need to win over to the ranks of the party the very best workers, and the need to guarantee the influence of nonparty workers upon the work of individual basic party organizations was pointed out.

Referring to the decisions of the 16th plenum, we assert that not all party organizations and echelons have elaborated forms and methods of work in workers' environments appropriate to the requirements. The hope has been expressed that the addenda and amendments to the statute introduced by the 10th Congress will lead to improved efficiency in drawing up programs, and in accountability and control in the party; to an increase in the efficiency of the work of its links; and to relieving them of red tape and back-and-forth debate.

Problems of the party's cadre policy were broadly taken up during the discussion. We stress that the main premises of the PZPR's cadre policy adopted by the 13th plenum are generally accepted in the party. Attention has been drawn to the question of introduction of those principles into practice. It has been said that the basic party organizations do not always manage to benefit from the rights granted them in that field. Cadre policy cannot be reduced to making and withdrawing recommendations. It ought to include intensive political work with the cadres, and the creation of a cadre reserve, especially of young people.

Discussion of ideological matters and the propaganda work of the party was focused upon answering the question: How to effect meaningful and worthwhile progress in both these fields? In almost every speech dealing with ideological and propaganda work, great stress was placed on the need for close bonds between ideological work and the practice of everyday work, and warnings were given of the danger of this work becoming detached from life and remaining mere words.

Attention has been drawn to progress noted in editing the party press. This positive appraisal is, however, accompanied by criticism of oversimplification, which is still common, and of declamatory tendencies. While the information role of television was positively assessed, at the same time criticism was leveled at shortcomings in the cultural and creative role that it discharges, particularly, in the sphere of the film repertoire.

A typical feature of the discussion was concern for the younger generation and its ideological-political outlook. The efficient implementation of the party program depends upon its being understood and accepted. Winning young people over to the party goals is of special significance. This was said by one of the participants in the discussion during the session of the third team, and this statement can be regarded as the recurrent and chief theme in many speeches relating to young people.

Culture is an area that plays an important role in influencing society ideologically. A socialist state ought to be an effective protector of culture; it ought to shield it from commercialization, from being submerged in kitsch and cheapness. In the view of the comrades who took part in the discussions within the fourth team, this requires bigger subsidies for the development of culture fund. While examining the party's influence on life in society, the participants in the discussions drew attention to the fact that many phenomena that apparently have nothing to do with one another are mutually interconnected. The development of culture constitutes a barrier impeding the spread of social pathology. In turn, an effective opposition to social evils makes for a greater sense of justice and is conducive to the process of identifying oneself with the socialist state and the party.

It is, first and foremost, the members of the party who should implement its policies in each area of society's life. It was emphasized that party members must stand out by the honest and solid way in which they go about their duties, by being fronttrankers at work, by seeing the job at hand through to its completion, by culture in their relations with fellow workers, and by honesty in their lives. Concern for creating precisely such a model of the party member and activist -- and this was frequently emphasized in the discussions -- constitutes one of the main obligations of each primary, works, rural, and ministry party organization.

The effectiveness of the implementation of resolutions we will pass today will depend, above all, upon us ourselves, on our persistence and consistency, on our ability to persuade those who do not belong to any party of the fact that our arguments are correct, on the position party organizations will have within the communities in which we live.

The formula of the party building a national accord -- not just in political areas, but also revolving round social and economic issues -- has been met with acceptance and support. The concept of accord, good work, and economic efficiency, and of putting our house thoroughly in order came to be seen as an important chance for Poland's development.

Comrade delegates, as far as the area of foreign policy is concerned, progress in the process of rebuilding the international position of our state has been emphasized. This position has been gained thanks to the consistent implementation of the Ninth Congress line and as a result of the country's socioeconomic situation having become stabilized. Support was expressed for the concept of the party's foreign policy directions, presented in the Central Committee report and in the draft program.

The idea of a declaration on European security and cooperation was talked about with appreciation. It was pointed out during discussions that the internationalist tie that links the PZPR to the CPSU, and Poland's alliance and fraternal cooperation with the USSR are of fundamental significance for our country, for the socialist community, and for peace in our continent. It is with great satisfaction that the contribution made by Comrade Mikhail Gorbachev, general secretary of the CPSU Central Committee, to the proceedings of our congress, and the expressions of friendship and appreciation directed towards the Polish people, our party, and its first secretary, Comrade Wojciech Jaruzelski, were emphasized.

The proposal that our party should work towards convening a world conference of workers' parties, devoted to matters that are of supreme importance for, and jointly shared by the entire communist movement -- the peace and security of our globe, our earth -- was met with support.

Esteemed comrades, many teams pointed out the importance of educating society in the patriotic and internationalist spirit. This pertains, in particular, to the awareness of the young generation; it revolves around the issue of inculcating the feeling that it is only socialism that is equal to the challenges of modern times, ensuring the peaceful future and development of our country, socialist Poland. Thank you. [applause]

Czyrek Discusses Program Commission

LD031315 Warsaw Domestic Service in Polish 1013 GMT 3 Jul 86

[Speech by Jozef Czyrek, member of the PZPR Central Committee Politburo and chairman of the Party Program Commission, at the 10th PZPR Congress in Warsaw's Palace of Culture and Science -- live]

[Text] Esteemed comrades! The Party Program Commission has submitted to the delegates the amended and enlarged draft of the first long-term PZPR program in the postwar history of the party with the recommendation that it be examined and approved. I think, therefore, that there is no need to present its content at greater length. I will limit myself, therefore, to commenting on the course of the work on the program, and on some of its characteristics and intentions. In accordance with the line and spirit of the Ninth Congress, the draft program did not come about in the quietude of an office. It was born out of a general party discussion, in confrontation with reality and with the living experiences of the party. One can say that in putting their stances down on paper every party organization made a contribution to editing the program, to shaping the concepts on overcoming the results of the economic collapse and accelerating the country's development, and to defining a vision of the future of socialist Poland.

This is of great significance for the further ideopolitical consolidation and activation of party ranks. As we know, over a million people participated in the general party and public discussion, including many nonparty citizens. The profoundly reedited party program presented to the comrade delegates before the congress took this great achievement of the discussion into account.

Our congress debate has enriched it. We can say, therefore, that this will be a program worked out by the whole party, a product of the historical and contemporary experiences and interests of our nation and state. The main sources of ideological inspiration for us were the assumptions of Marxism-Leninism, the experiences of the Polish and international worker movement, and the progressive traditions of our nation. We were striving in the program for a creative linking of the universal principles of socialist construction with national, Polish, conditions for their implementation. The program is, therefore, a synthesis of the theoretical and practical achievements of the party, a long-term concept of the continuation and intensification of socialist renewal. We also tried to utilize the experience of fraternal parties, especially the great achievement of the 27th CPSU Congress, inspiring us in the search for creative and innovatory solutions, to a bold acceptance of the challenges of the present and of the future. The starting point of the program is the fundamental value of our ideology -- the welfare and dignity of man and his subjective role in historical processes.

Out of the fundamental aims and values of socialism the program highlights, in particular, social justice and people's rule. In mapping out ambitious aims and assumptions the party at the same time points in the program to the conditions necessary for achieving them and defines priority tasks for socioeconomic development and directions for enhancing the strength and socialist democratic nature of the state, and modernizing its structures and ways of functioning. The program's intentions include the aspiration for the creative development and deepening of the line of the Ninth Congress aimed at continuing and deepening socialist renewal and accelerating the socioeconomic development of the country. In drafting the program we tried to point to the interdependence of these tasks.

The continuation of the policy of socialist renewal -- the deepening of people's rule and extending the participation of working people in the process of leading and managing -- is one of the conditions for necessary acceleration. And vice-versa. Without the acceleration of the country's development one cannot imagine the full implementation of the provisions of socialist renewal. It is obvious that the conditions for the success of the economic reform depend both on consistent implementation of its assumptions, on improving its mechanisms, and on changing the hitherto extensive way of thinking -- in other words on shaping a modern social awareness.

In formulating the program we were guided by the assumption that socialist development should embody the elements of continuity and change. In other words, it should signify both the continuation of tested laws governing the construction of socialism and a creative approach to our concrete conditions, to new problems and tasks, to the achieved level of socioeconomic development, and to social needs and aspirations. During our work we had to resolve many complex problems and make choices between various proposals. The issue of defining more closely the character and function of the program evoked a great deal of discussion. We adopted the assumption that the program should equip our party with as clear and precise an expression of its strategic aims and of the main roads leading to them as possible, and that subsequent party congresses, starting with the resolution of our 10th Congress, and the central committees elected by them should define more detailed plans and ways of implementing them.

We have tried to avoid voluntarism of any kind, to stand firm on the foundations of realities. We proceeded here from the assumption that we must not be the prisoners of current conditions, which will, after all, undergo changes, that we must use all levers to intensify development. The party's ability to organize the nation's collective effort around the goals outlined will be of key significance in implementing the program. We must be aware of the fact that in presenting the program the PZPR is taking on great commitments to the working class and to the whole of society. The correct definition in the program of the directions of strengthening the leading, and at the same time ancillary, role of the party is all the more important. We stress in the program the decisive role of the working class as the fundamental force of socialist development and the fundamental significance of the worker-peasant alliance. We point out the great and growing role of the alliance of the working class and peasants with the intelligentsia. This will determine the rate of Poland's socioeconomic and civilizational prgress.

The program states that it is the party's task to create all the foundations for strengthening this alliance as the basis of national accord, of the creative force of socialist construction, of the introduction of the scientific-technical revolution, of modernizing national education, and of developing and disseminating culture.

Hence, the draft program confirms the steadfast will of the PZPR to broaden and deepen national accord and confirms its determined struggle against the opponents of socialist Poland.

We understand accord to be a constant process, an inalienable foundation of the development of socialist democracy. The right to criticism, public control, and consultation must be an organic element of it. It is a matter of fundamental importance for national accord to make itself manifest in joint action. Our program should fulfill such an integrating function, it should consolidate all patriotic forces of our nation around its implementation.

Esteemed comrades, the draft program affirms forcefully the tried and tested line of Polish foreign policy in serving the nation's most vital interests. We point out at the same time the vital need for a new look at contemporary international relations, taking into account the growing interdependence and links of states and nations; the need for a new way of thinking in the nuclear sphere where the development of weapons of mass destruction threatens the annihilation of human civilization. This requires that the struggle for peace and security and for overcoming imperialist threats be accelerated. The peace program put forward at the 27th CPSU Congress creates for mankind the hope that the world will have a safe future.

In the hope we attach particular attention to the processes currently taking place in the socialist world. The aspiration to accelerate the rate of development and to exploit to this end all the advantages of the socialist socioeconomic system are the dominant undercurrent of these processes. The program points to the fact that Poland must participate in the historic process that will lead the socialist community on to a new and higher stage of development. This is not only a question of our ambitions but also of the position we wish to occupy in our community and in the modern world. The program gives expression to the feeling of the patriotic and internationalist responsibility of the party for the position and role of socialist Poland on the international arena and for its contribution toward the construction of a peaceful future and toward the progressive transformation of the world that despite tremendous threats, has, after all, not stopped being a world of great development opportunities and hopes. Poland resolutely favors freeing Europe and the world of arms of mass destruction; it favors constructive East-West dialogue, jointly tackling and solving the great problems of the present time in conditions of peace, cooperation, and detente.

The draft of the declaration concerning security and cooperation in Europe adopted by the congress team responsible for international affairs is an expression of this stance. I propose on behalf of the team that the contents of this declaration be approved.

Comrades, we are aware that the consistent implementation of the party program should decisively change for the better the quality of life of working people and promote the fuller satisfaction of their material and spiritual needs and the resolution of many problems that have become acute today. We know that this road will be neither easy nor straight. It will require a lot of effort, persistence, and in particular, iron-willed consistency in the implementation of the set goals. The course of the 10th Congress shows that achievement of these goals is possible and that our party is resolved to do everything to keep in step with the requirements of progress and modernity.

As Comrade Wojciech Jaruzelski stressed in his report the party culls the optimism with which we have come to the congress from its belief in the working class and in the fervent patriotism and creative forces of our nation. The fact that our party has finally drawn up its first long-term program and indicated to society what it is striving for and what sort of Poland it wants to shape might also be a source of optimism. In asking that the submitted draft program be approved the commission would like the authorization of the Politburo for the introduction of the necessary terminological amendments and for the inclusion of those suggestions and proposals that were submitted after the draft was handed to the delegates or that will be submitted during the course of the present session. Thank you. [applause]

Porebski Reports on Resolution

LD031537 Warsaw Domestic Service in Polish 1026 GMT 3 Jul 86

[Speech by Tadeusz Porebski, PZPR Central Committee Politburo member and chairman of the Party Resolution Commission, at the 10th PZPR Congress in Warsaw's Palace of Culture and Science -- live]

[Text] Comrade delegates! Work on the working draft of the 10th Congress Resolution was begun by us last February and was undertaken by a team of several editors chosen from a team of 90 persons of the Third Congress Commission set up at the 23d Central Committee plenary session. Getting down to work, the editorial team proceeded from the assumption that the main content of the resolution should respond to social needs expressed in the pre-congress discussion and inspired by our party's draft program, the congress theses, and in the earlier national debates which took place before the People's Council elections and before the Sejm elections. We proceeded from the assumption that the resolution must be a specific expression of the tasks falling to the current 5-year period, emerging from the long-term party program and, together with the other documents passed at the 10th Congress, should be the axis of the party and state's socioeconomic life in the next 5 years.

The first version of the working draft of the 10th Congress Resolution was presented to the entire team of the Third Congress Commission at the end of April. The next version was drawn up on the basis of that discussion and the written comments of team members, then presented at a meeting of the Central Congress Politburo in the last 10 days of May. In accordance with its decision, the importantly augmented draft resolution was sent to all 10th Congress delegates at the beginning of June, with the request that proposals, suggestions, and comments on the draft content be sent in. Meetings of voivodship teams of delegates in all voivodships discussed the working draft of the resolution.

As a result, hundreds of comments and proposals for specific entries were brought to the attention of the editorial team. These were taken into account to a considerable extent in the next version.

For example, the proposal for an entry on professional organizations of private farmers, the proposal for a conderable expansion of the entry on the mass media, and many others were used. This course of resolution work is a new phenomenon in party life, for up to now delegations to a party congress acquainted themselves with its draft during the deliberations. Therefore, the statement justified, without exaggeration, that the delegates are the creators of the document. The fact that the present party congress has approved the PZPR program has caused the resolution's different structural precision [odmienne rygory strukturalne] from what took place in previous resolutions at our party congresses. Previous resolutions contained program elements which were long-term, more than 5 years. This one does not have to, because the program contains them.

Since the beginning of the work on the draft resolution, there have been intense disputes over the number of statistics in our document. Some comrades favored including as many as possible, others favored including relatively few. The version presented to you, comrades, on behalf of the congress commission, is a sensible compromise.

The draft resolution directly refers to the achievements of Central Committee plenary sessions between the 9th and 10th Congresses, which on the one hand raised the standing of those plenary sessions and, on the other, contributed to lessening the volume of the draft itself. The working draft, 60 pages long [corrects himself] 66 pages long, was presented to the Congress Resolution Commission on the first day of deliberations. Three days of intensive work on this document considered the Central Committee report delivered by Comrade Wojciech Jaruzelski and the proposals and suggestions from delegates.

The first section of the draft is new in comparison with other congress resolutions. It is entitled: The Most Urgent Social Tasks, and contains the six most important social matters, emerging from both the course of the pre-congress discussion in the People's Council and the Sejm election campaign, and which the party has placed at the center of attention in the current 5-year period, and which it obligates all party cells and the state administration to take up with determination, and to which it appeals to the whole of society to give all-around, universal support.

Let me recall these six important issues. In the first place is the issue of improving the supplies of consumer goods, including foodstuffs, and of abolishing meat and processed meat rationing. In the second place is the issue of achieving progress in solving the housing problem. The third issue concerns effectively curbing inflation and the fourth focuses on providing proper health care and protecting the natural environment. The fifth issue is to do with satisfying the population's growing requirements and spiritual aspirations; that is, further development of education, schooling, and culture. Finally, the sixth issue revolves around the policy of fixing the population's wages, old-age and retirement pay, and other benefits, a ploicy that reasserts the principles of the socialist social justice.

Naturally, these problems can be fitted into all the remaining chapters.

However, it seems, proper to give them greater prominence in the first chapter since they are the most important issues around which our work and attention will be concentrated. An adendum near the end of the draft resolution makes it incumbent upon the Central Committee to work out and present to the party a detailed plan to implement the 10th Congress Resolution. This plan must be worked out soom as possible and be presented during the second or third Central Committee plenary sessions.

These, then, are the three motions I have been entrusted to present , by the Congress Resolution Commission. I ask the congress to examine pass them if it should see fit to do so. [applause]

Esteemed conrades, on behalf of the Congress Resolution Commission, set up by the 10th Congress pass the resolution in the version presented, taking into account the addenda and amendments supplied to the delegates today;

Second, the commission proposes the 10th Congress authorize the newly elected Politburo to carry out the essential editorial changes prior to making the resolution public. I will not conceal that this is a request for many changes, since the editing the resolution's final version, the haste with which it has been done, and this, after all was unavoidable, have, lingistically speaking, resulted in the resolution containing quiet a number of thoughts which have not been formulated in the best possible style, form the language point of view; and

Third, the commission proposes in view of the thrust of the draft resolution, the thrust we would wish to keep intact, all detailed motions, of which there have been many, as well as the detailed conclusions from the plenary discussion and from the discussion that took palce within the congress teams, should be forwarded for detailed examination by the party Central Committee.

It is also proposed that the 10th Congress should make it incumbent upon the newly elected Central Committee to make use of them during the process of working out the plan for the implementation of the 10th Congress Resolution.

Delegates Discuss, Adopt Resolution

LD031506 Warsaw Domestic Service in Polish 1036 GMT 3 Jul 86

[From the 10th PZPR Congress session in Warsaws Palace of Culture and Science -- live relay]

[Text] [Drozdziel] Comrades, my name is Kazimierz Drozdziel. I am a worker at the Komuna Parys shipyard in Gdynia. During this congress, our delegation has several times moved an amendment to the resolution on the national economy. Unfortunately, however, we have failed to encounter understanding by certain comrades who are members of the government. This is why I have taken the liberty of asking the 10th Congress delegates for help. The whole point is that one additional sentence should be fitted on page 31.

It is as follows: Conditions must be ensured for effective and maximum use of the shipbuilding industry's production potential. This is it. We simply want to work. Thank you. [applause]

[Session Chairman Barcikowski] Any other comrades? Please go ahead.

[Kryzysztofiak] I am Miroslaw Krzysztofiak, my mandate number is 250. I could say three time lucky. I have already moved this proposal twice, to no avail, and yet it seems to me to be of no small importance. On page 24, line one reads: In all branches of the national economy, support will be given to the setting up of various forms of small plants poineering production of new output and the introduction of modern technological processes. I move that this sentence be struck out.

In keeping with the essence of the reform, in keeping with the creation of the conditions where all enterprises should concern themselves with this, with new output and new technological processes, this sentence, as it were creates a certain loophole. We have recently had a costly experience. Surrounded by an ineffective economy, we wanted, through the so-called large-scale economic organizations, to promote progress. The economy must be effective as a whole; it must concern itself with the problems tackled in that sentence. Thank you. [applause]

[Barcikowski] Would any other comrade like to have his say? We will ask Comrade Porebski to let us know his attitude to these motions.

[Porebski] Esteemed comrades! Since, as was obvious in my introduction, I have participated for these last 4 months in preparation of the draft law, I have to say our coastal region comrades, to put it in as few words as possible, bombarded us with numerous texts which we tried, much as possible, to change to satisfy our comrades. It would be unjust to bear us a grudge for this -- for such is our role that when we represent some milieu we should fight for it -- there is nothing wrong with that.

Proposals went much further than that. Even yesterday we discussed the subject during the commission's debates. To avoid stretching things out for too long here, I propose a motion, whose contents I have partially jotted down, on the maximum effective use of potential, be adopted because it agrees with our provisions regarding the economy. [applause]

As far as the small pilot enterprises are concerned, comrades, well, I wouldn't want to speak too long here -- this is a motion put forward by NOT [chief technical Organization]; if I remember correctly, and other organizations concerned with the economy, but this is a problem one can discuss. However, as a technician, as an engineer, I say one efficient solution that would aid scientific and technological progress is the existence and the expansion of such pilot enterprises, which are efficient -- in the sense that they do not involve us in any extra costs. There are also other solutions -- this is not the only one. If we, and here I would ask you to grant me your confidence, if we wish to stop talking about scientific and technological progress and start introducing it -- then I, for one, am sure this is one from among the possible, effective solutions. I put forward the motion to retain this provision.

[Barcikowski] Are there any further comments? I see none. I therefore propose to put to the vote...I put to the vote the draft resolution with the amendments set forth and accepted by Comrade Porebski. Who favors adopting the resolution in this form? Thank you. Who is opposed? Who abstains? I declare the resolution of the 10th Congress unanimously adopted. [applause]

The comrade delegates have received the text of the draft declaration of the 10th Congress on Security and Cooperation in Europe. Have the comrades any comments on the draft tabled? I see none. We shall proceed to the voting. Who among the comrade delegates favors adoption of the declaration in its proposed forms? Thank you. Who is opposed? None. Who abstains? None. I declare the declaration of the 10th Congress on Security and Cooperation in Europe unanimously adopted [applause]

Barcikowski Presents Appeals Reports

LD031514 Warsaw Domestic Service in Polish 1044 GMT 3 Jul 86

[Report of PZPR Appeals Commission read by Kazimierz Barcikowski, member of the PZPR Central Committee Politburo, at 10th PZPR Congress in Warsaw -- live]

[Text] The 10th Congress Appeals Commission started work at its first meeting. The commission members acquainted themselves with appeals coming in to the 10th Congress, decided on the course and rules of work, and divided up tasks. A 10-man presidium of the Appeals Commission was chosen, comprising two chairmen in the persons of Comrade Henryk Jablonski and Comrade Tadeusz Nfowicki, and six regional teams, to examine appeals from individual voivodships The commission assures that decision will be made in accordance with the statute and resolutions of the 10th Congress and with proper objectivity. With this in view, it will enable those submitting an appeal to present their arguments to commission members in a direct conversation and will obtain opinions about the interested parties in their own party organization and at their work place. Because of the considerable number of appeals, individual cases will be examined in succession and each person making an appeal will receive a written reply. Up to 3 July of this, up to the 10th Congress, a total of 383 appeals were received. Of these, 162 people are appealing against explusion from the party; 41 against being crossed off the list of party members; 46 against party penalties; 92 people have asked for party training periods to be credited. In addition, 28 people have sent in accusations and complaints to the 10th Congress about various spheres of socioeconomic life or personal matters. That is the wording of the communique. Does any comrade want to speak in the wake of this report. [pause] I don't see anyone. So we approve the report. Of course, the commission will submit a report on its work to the next congress.

Messages to Congress Explained

LD031455 Warsaw Domestic Service in Polish 1047 GMT 3 Jul 86

[Speech by Woldzimierz Mokrzyszczak, candidate member of the PZPR Central Committee Politburo, at the 10th PZPR Congress in Warsaw's Palace of Culture and Science -- live]

[Text] Esteemed delegates: During the congress 2,196 letters and telegrams with greetings and wishes for the delegates and for the party leadership reached the congress Secretariat.

Those who sent the letters and telegrams included party factory committees and organizations, workers collectives from factories inside and outside Poland, PRON links, youth organizations, trade unions, Polish People's Army units including soldiers doing their military duty outside the country, veterans associations, creative unions, and socioprofessional associations. We also received 378 letters and telegrams from private persons. Greetings for the congress also came in from young people still at school and from scouts. In the telegrams the work forces of many factories reported that they were following the congress discussions with attention and that through their work they were expressing support for the policy line of the 10th Congress. The letters and telegrams pointed to the exceptionally responsible work done by the Central Committee in the difficult and complex internal and external conditions between the Ninth Extraordinay Congress and the 10th Congress. Words of particular acknowledgement were directed to Comrade Wojciech Jaruzelski, first secretary of the Central Committee.

The letters and telegrams stressed that the Central Committee report made a broad impression in Polish society among party and nonparty people. It was stressed that it reflected all the fundamental problems worrying society and that it expressed profound concern for acclerating the country's socioeconomic development, for strengthening law and order and discipline in the economy, and for consistently introducing economic reform. Attention was drawn to the fact that the report presented in a worthy and principled manner the main directions of Polish foreign policy. The consistency of their implementation was stressed with particular emphasis and the important role and significance of our alliances, in particular the fraternal friendship with the Soviet Union, were pointed out. Those writing letters and telegrams expressed satisfaction with the fact that the Soviet delegation to the 10th PZPR Congress was led by Comrade Mikhail Gorbachev, general secretary of the CPSU Central Committee. Many of the telegrams referred to his speech while at the same time requesting that the most cordial greetings and thanks be conveyed for the direct and fraternal words addressed to our party and Polish nation. At the same time, full approval for the peaceful initiatives presented on behalf of the Soviet Union by Comrade Mikhail Gorbachev was expressed.

The congress has received 362 reports about production pledges having been fulfilled and 223 reports that tasks undertaken within the framework of voluntary public work were carried out. One result of these production pledges and public work is the fact that, among other things, thousands of additional metric tons of coal have been extracted, thousands of additional metric tons of steel have been smelted, numerous additional consumer durables and foodstuffs have been produced, and thousands of additional metric tons of raw and other materials have been saved. New public facilties and amenities have been built, including sport, reecreation, and leisure centers. Hundreds of local roads have been modernized. There were 112 telegrams about the fact that shock labor shifts were introduced for the duration of the congress. Apart from the party organiations, trade union and youth organization branches initiated this upsurge in public involvement. Individual farmers, state agricultural farm and production cooperative work forces have also reported that they fulfilled many production pledges and voluntary work tasks. In many telegrams the congress Presidium was informed that during the congress primary party organizations organized open party meetings devoted to discussing the subject matter of the debates. New party candidates have been admitted during many such meetings.

A total of 188 persons have also come directly to the 10th Congress Secretariat. They came to us with their personal matters and problems. Most of them did not belong to any party. Speaking of what worried them, they expressed hope that the resolutions to be passed by the 10th Congress would make for a speedier solution to the country's many social and economic problems of pressing importance.

In all letters and telegrams, apart from the messages of greetings to the congress, the hopes and expectations of the public and support for the party's program and its political line were expressed. Allow me, on behalf of us all, to thank the senders for their kind attitude to, and interest in, the deliberations of our congress. [applause]

Jaruzelski Makes Closing Speech

LD031825 Warsaw Domestic Service in Polish 1720 GMT 3 Jul 86

[Speech by Wojciech Jaruzelski, first secretary of the PZPR Central Committee, at the closing session of the 10th PZPR Congress in Warsaw -- live]

[Text] Esteemed comrades. Dear guests. I apologize for the delay, but democratic procedure takes up a great deal of time. We also carried out our duty of political culture by talks with, and expressing thanks for their previous selfless work, to those comrades who are ceasing to perform their duties in party leadership. It was also necessary to hold the necessary consultations and talks with those comrades whom we have proposed to join the ranks of the Politburo and the Secretariat of the Central Committee.

The 10th PZPR Congress is coming to a close. In the plenary discussion, and in the working teams, the repreentatives of all voivodships, social millieux and professional groups, of all generations creating a generation-bsed unity and continuity of our partyl, rose to speak. In final stage of our work we dealt with organizational matters, the results of which I would like to present to you now comrade delegates.

The Central Committee elected the following comrades to membership of the Politburo: Kazimierz Barcikowski, Jozef Baryla, Jozef Czyrek, Jan Glowczyk, Czeslaw Kiszczak, Zbigniew Messner, Alfred Miodowicz, Wlodzimierz Mokrzyszcak, Zygmunt Muranski, Marian Orzaechowski, Tadeusz Porebski, Florian Siwicki, Zofia Stepien, and Marian Wofzniak.

The following were elcted candidate members of the Politburo: Stanislaw Bejger, Bogumil Ferensztajn, Janusz Kubasiewicz, Zbigniew Michalek, and Garbiela Rembisz.

The following were elected as Central Clommittee secretaries: Jozef Baryla, Henryk Bednarski, Stanislaw Ciosek, Kazimierz Cypryniak, Jozef Czyrek, Jan Glowczyk, Zbigniew Michalek, Tadeusz Porebski, Andrzej Wasilewski, and Marian Wozniak.

The central authorities of the Central Control and Audit Commission were also elected. Its elected chairman is Wlodzimierz Mokrzyszczak, and the deputy chairmen are: Tadeusz Hupalowski, Bogumil Moraczewski, Tadeusz Nowicki, and Jerzy Wilk.

This is the composition of the highest party bodies which was just decided a moment ago. [applause]

Comrades and dear guests, representatives of all voivodships, social milieux, and professional groups, as well as all generations which constitute the unity of generations and continuity of our party, participated in the plenary discussion, as well as in team discussions.

The speeches were open, matter-of-fact, and sincere. Satisfaction with accomplishments was combined with an awareness of the extent of tasks. The principle: "Let us never forget about the past, and always think about the future" has been confirmed. The congress was a working, creative, and critical debate. Criticism is no longer a guest in our party. It is an ever present family member. Adherence to principles is indispensable so the party can act in a combative and effective manner. Deliberations consisted of many subjects, universal and complex, as is our life, as is present day reality in Poland. The enormity of the material, the feeling of responsibility for its serious treatment does not allow an immediate and direct generalization about the discussion.

The Central Committee, Politburo, and Central Committee Secretariat consider it their primary duty to summarize this variety of party thinking quickly and process it into a concrete plan of implementation at the appropriate levels of party, state, and social activity.

The achievements of the pre-congress and congress debate will not remain without penetrating consideration, without a concrete reply. Normal life continued throughout the whole country during the days of the congress. We were an active fragment of it. We think with gratitude of all those who were with us. For a long time now, there have not been so many manifestations of lively interest in the work of our party, so many manifestations of support shown for it. We should value them the more as they arose in new circumstances, not on the basis of loudly proclaimed declarations and obligations, but in a natural and authentic way. Numerous reports have flowed in about social and production deeds. Many enterprises have reported about the early fulfillment of their tasks for June, the second quarter, and the first 6 months. With the active participation of youth, congress honor guards [zjazdowe warty] were mounted. Basic party organizations [POP] accepted many new candidates these past days. Thousands of letters and telegrams were directed to the Congress with good wishes and expressions of readiness for the implementation of party resolutions. Without whole hearts, we say thanks for this support and encouragement expressed by what counts most: initiative, work, concrete acts. [applause]

The attention with which our deliberations were heard, the hopes associated with the congress, are above all a great obligation for our party. Practice will determine its fulfillment. Not words, but facts will take the yet unsolved problems, discussed so intently from the congress platform, off the agenda.

Changes announced by the congress will not occur immediately. Nothing will occur on its own. It will be decided by the persistence with which we will implement the decisions adopted. If we achieve that which results from a realistic assessment of our reserves and strengths, things will be better for working people. Socialism will be strengthened in Poland. [applause]

We do not have illusions we will not continue to be in the line of fire of external and domestic opponents. Already, we hear their falsifying, grating accompaniment. But after all, they have been hindering us not just from today or yesterday. Contrary to their expectations, this strengthens our resistance. By sharply and decisively opposing those who want to do harm and complain, [jatrzyco] we open up a new opportunity for all those who want to join in work for the good and future of socialist Poland. Certainly there are also those who think that it happened and has now passed; the congress and after the congress; words were spoken and noted down, but life will go its own way anyway. Decisions may be waited through. [as heard] This is true. More than once, they were waited through and afterward, they awaited the well-known consequences. This time this will not occur. It cannot be so. [applause]

In the speeches, particularly in those of our female comrades, we heard how many difficulties, burdens, troubles, of various types there are. Their causes are multifarious. We perceive them. They are however, justified a bit too often and too easily from various tribunes as apparently objective, not dependent on us.

On the other hand achievements are on the whole subjective and personal. We therefore must put all the more effort into rooting out a generalized approach to shortcomings, to mistakes; [we must] speak more specifically, naming names. Unfortunately, there is still a great deal of anonymity in assessments. Even our fundamental congress, which had a specific purpose, did not entirely break through this barrier. A party member has no right to say: This does not concern me, either when he sees that things are going badly or when he should be supporting a just initiative, taking advantage of all chances and possibilities.

The party will gain more supporters and a better understanding if it consistently clears life of all superfluity, all nonsense, and various forms of transgressions of social justice. Particularly where there are party members, there can be no place for deviations. From the very midst of life, you have brought, comrades, the truth about how many there are among us who are worthy of the highest respect, who are examples of diligence, of devotion, of modesty. These examples dominate; and next to them how many others are there?

Forgive me for using drastic descriptions of waste, of parastisim, of callousness and rottenness, which make the blood boil.

This is an example of so-called Poland A and Poland B. It is the will of the party that the better one, of which we are proud, which is linked to the best traditions of the party and the nation, should be totally victorious, that all that blemishes the good name of socialism and the dignity of our nation should be thrown overbroad. We appeal to all members of the party. You granted us the mandate for this congress. The program, the resolution, and other decisions adopted today are our joint cause. They are at the same time a firm obligation for the implementation of its decisions. The congress is closing one stage and opening up another. To maintain its ideological climate and political temperature for as long as possible and to transfer them to Polish households, this is our party's ambition and task. To promote progress, the party must become an example of modernity and efficiency and of being capable of objective self-assessment. Firmly establishing the meaning of the words the same party but not the same party constitute the achievement of the 10th Congress.

Our deliberations and the adopted resolutions have left no doubt about the following: renewal or stagnation, reform or ossification, democracy or autocracy, openness or the pulping up [papkowanie] of information, consultations or arbitrary decisions, the strengthening of the rule of law or acquiescence to the violation of socialist rules and norms. These questions have been definitely and irrevocably resolved. In each of these matters the 10th Congress has put the proverbial dot on the 'i' [applause]

Now the most important thing is for the choice to be made unanimously to find full affirmation in every ministerial department and voivodship, town and parish, in every workplace and institution.

Comrades, the first program in our party's history was adopted today: [It is] a creative expounding of Marxist-Leninist thinking, a signpost for the process of building and strengthening socialism in Poland. The years ahead of us must bring fundamental progress along that road.

In this sense, the congress has laid the path into the 21st century; but at the same time kept its feet firmly on the ground, close to the realities of the situation. To link the boldness of long-term plans with a profound sense of reality, with appreciation of the small facts from which great things often are born, those are Leninist instructions.

The tasks for the next 5-year stretch of our road toward a higher phase of socialist transformations have been specified by the congress resolution. In all caution, an alternative was posited: quicker or slower? Quicker to bring economic equilibrium closer; what is more, assets for social purposes, better food for the nation, a healthy market, meeting housing needs, and a determined implementation of tasks in the field of education, health protection, and environmental protection.

It is therefore going half-way to meet the hopes for systematic, measurable progress in working conditions and in society's living conditions. Quicker: That means energetically joining in the technological race, making better use of the great intellectual potential of our society [instituting] a boldly thought-out modernization of the economy.

We favor that kind of acceleration. We will submit its conditions and forms for public consultation. Faster pace is a party proposal addressed to management personnel and workforces, to all working, truly patriotic Poles. Acceleration in development is not just physical objects, indicators, and economic concepts. A universal orientation toward effectiveness in economy, science, technology, education, and culture will be quicker if it is supported with the necessary transformations in social awareness, in the way people think, and in their attitudes. Progress depends above all on organically linking personal motivations and individual ethics of work to modern equipment for achieving it, and to a well-organized, functional, and rationally-managed economic system. That is the plane on which the battle for the future will be decided. System solutions will be used to release the most important, social, human reserves: The first will be consistent implementation of the economic reform and entering its second, enhanced, stage. The second will be the universal review -- rationalization of organizational structures. The third will be optimal personnel management.

Every one of us must promote the organizational and structural reconstruction. It is a duty of the party echelons and organizations. We are counting on the issue of functionality, clear definition of tasks, proper deployment of people, and full use of their potential in the process of work finding millions of supporters. We must reach a situation where in every way there are as many and such people as necessary; where there are no overlapping powers; where there is no official, formal justification for apparent work and for idle acts; and where progress is served by every single day, every single work station, and every single man operating it.

I am glad that I can add the Karol Swierczewski Precision Products Factory to the good examples given in the Central Committee report. The mutual workers' conversation with Comrade Mikhail Gorbachev was a great satisfaction. The work brigades to which they belong are a great cause. They teach comanagement, concern for a high quality production; they shape a feeling of collectivism, they favor effectiveness. However, too few brigades and partnership groups exist in our country. They should grow as soon as possible everywhere the technological conditions for this exist. Resistance to this manifested among some leadership cadres should be decisively overcome. The party obliges all enterprise committees, all its members in managements, and self-managements to decidedly support this initiative.

The precongress and congress discussion gave testimony to the universal call for the programmatic, organizational, and cadre side of all activities to create a chance for people to show what they can do, to ensure their energy and knowledge do not get bogged down in the labyrinth of inertia, paper jungle, or bureaucratic world of appearances. The harmonious linking of the experience of the older generation with the enthusiasm of youth is indispensable. We will create even better perspectives for them. This does not, however, have anything to do with spoiling them or nursing them. Our obligation is to create conditions for youth to mature more quickly, to show bolder initiative and solve more difficult tasks; to effectively eliminate whatever slows progress, which does not correspond to the principles of our system. Comrades! The achievement of the 10th Congress fully confirms the Polish People's Republic finds itself in the great developmental current of socialism. Its far-reaching prospects were mapped out best by the historical 27th Congress of the party of Lenin, the CPSU. The peaceful and humanitarian goals of socialism along with the importance of our comprehensive fraternal cooperation were stressed with full emphasis from this tribune by Comrade Mikhail Gorbachev. His visit to Poland and participation in our deliberations greatly enriched these congress days. Comrade Gorbachev won over everyone with his sincerity and feelings of respect and friendship toward the working class, working people, and the whole of our nation. [applause]

This fruitful visit constitutes another helpful step along the road of unity and fraternity with a great socialist power, the Land of the Soviets. Polish-Soviet friendship and lasting cooperation based on alliance are the priceless historical gain of our nations. [applause]

People's Poland is and will be a reliable link in the socialist community and a strong and active part of the world forces of progress and peace. The numerous delegations which arrived for our congress of fraternal parties, of the socialist countries, of the communist and workers' parties and also revolutionary-democratic parties of national liberation movements and socialist and socio-democratic parties conveyed to us expressions of solidarity. We reciprocate them with full sincerity. [applause]

Our guests are not only seated in the delibertions hall but also participated in many meetings with the working people of our country. They had the opportunity to see for themselves the internationalism of the Polish working class and of the working people of our nation. We thank you warmly, dear guests, for the expressions of respect and support for socialist Poland. [applause]

An important place in the congress deliberations was occupied by international problems, matters of peace and security. Today, it is not enough to live, to have a guarantee of life. Poland comes out firmly in favor of halting the arms race and going over to disarmament; of mutually beneficial cooperation among nations on an equal basis. We have a special moral right and duty, from here, from heroic Warsaw, to call on you yet again to defend and strengthen peace, detente, and dialogue. This has found eloquent expression in the declaration on security and cooperation in Europe adopted by the congress.

In the struggle for a new, just profile of international relations, our party and the socialist state will not stand still. [applause]

Comrade delegates, the congress has elected new party authorities. Permit me, on their behalf, to thank you warmly for the confidence you have in us. We consider it a duty to implement uncompromisingly what has been decided, and at the same time, the authoriy to make greater demands and stricter assessments.

This is a Central Committee with a strong worker-peasant class backbone. Together with the participation of experienced activists and eminent specialists in various fields, it should guarantee a close bond with the working class; with the whole of society; a competent and honest solving of problems. Some comrades have ended their activity in the Central Committee, on the central party authorities. Under the most difficult conditions, requiring a special wisdom, courage, and toughness, they created the achievements of the past term of office. We thank you for that sincerely, dear comrades. [applause]

We are still counting on your advice, help, and devoted actions, as always. The newly elected authorities will be faithful to the principle; start with ourselves, the higher the post, the greater responsibility, the greater the effort in service to the party, the working class, and the nation. [applause]

I shall repeat what we said in the report: there can be no people or institutions beyond control, assessment, and criticism. The Central Committee will take care that its own style of acting, and that of the party as a whole and all its bodies, be shaped in such spirit. In the process of improving the quality and effectiveness of party work, we are counting on you comrade, delegates. The Central Committee is deeply convinced that the mandate that is valid for a whole term of office will be confirmed with efforts so the ideas of the 10th Congress become a material power, reach the widest possible circles of citizens, stimulate imagination, and set initiative in motion.

I emphasize the contribution of those whose work particularly contributed to the favorable course of the congress, the contribution of the commissions, and teams. Our appreciative words have been earned by all organizing and technical services, as well as comrade printers. Thanks to their effort, the congress proceedings were so efficient.

Thank you to employees of the press, radio, and television for the complete, matter-of-fact, and comprehensive briefing of society about the course of the congress. We count on journalists and the whole propaganda front to disseminate the ideas of the highest party forum in a creative and combative manner and at a high standard of both form and content.

Esteemed comrades, soon we will be able to speak of the 10th Congress in the past tense. However, we will do everything to ensure that it will continue in future actions, that it may be present in every term of office commencing from the last few days. Let the realism, creative atmosphere, and inquisitiveness that characterized the congress proceedings unceasingly accompany the party's work. We call out: More democracy, more discipline, more consistency. [applause]

The basis of principles, the synthesis of that which we are taking out from the 10th Congress is the requirement of efficiency. It is precisely through this that verification of the quality of our work will occur. The national delegates' conference, which we must already think about, will be an important stage in this, and, starting today, we must also work intensively to come to the 11th PZPR congress with our heads held high. We commenced the proceedings on a free day, on a Sunday. Let this be yet another call whereby we do not excessively burden work time through our party and social activity. That is also why tomorrow none of us should be missing from our professional posts.

The summer season is beginning. We cannot allow standstills and breaks in active work. Let us remember that not much time remains until the accountability and election campaign.

Its most important aim is to translate the resolutions of the congress into the language of concrete tasks in all party echelons and organizatons, in all milieux, for all basic organizations and, above all, the worker crews. As was said -- among other things, during the proceedings of the first team -- we must return to the 16th plenum; we must put into practice all of its pro-worker resolutions, consistently and to the end.

With this thought in mind, fulfilling the intentions of the congress, this coming Tuesday, [8 July] instead of having a Politburo meeting we, its members, will go to meetings in factories, at places of work. The significance of our proceedings will be assessed by history. But history is created by people. It was stressed from this tribune that to the dialectic continuity of socialist renewal we must now add the line of socialist consistency, executive efficiency and discipline. If we are a match for this then we will be instrumental in making sure that history will issue a good and worthy report on this event, which we created together in this hall. Deeds and accomplished facts will decide this. May there be as many as them as possible. [applause]

Dear comrade delegates, it is only in this way that we will confirm and fulfill the slogan visible above this hall: In guiding the nation the party is serving the nation. [applause] I declare the 10th PZPR Congress closed. [applause; "International"; national anthem]

Press Conference Held

LD041157 Warsaw Domestic Service in Polish 1005 GMT 4 Jul 86

[Excerpts] [Unidentified reporter] Good day from the Hall of Columns at the Office of the Council of Ministers. A meeting of representatives of the highest party authorities, including the authorities elected yesterday on the last day of the 10th Congress, with journalists started some minutes ago. The conference is being conducted by Jerzy Majka, TRYBUNA LUDU chief editor, and the congress press spokesman, and Maciej Gorski from INTERPRESS. Among the people present are: Wojiech Jaruzelski, first secretary of the Central Committee; Premier Zbigniew Messner, Politburo member; and Stanislaw Ciosek, Kazimierz Cypryniak, and Andrzej Wasilewski, Central Committee secretaries. In an introductory speech Wojiech Jaruzelski briefed the audience on the main trends of the 10th Congress; the congress endorsing the line of accord, struggle, and reforms; and on a frim and consistent stance by Poland and Polish Communists in their struggle for peace and a better and safer future for the world. Then the questioning began. The first question was asked by Pavel Kopecky from Czechoslovakia who raised the subject of the foreign delegations' contribution to the congress. Later, (Ralph Stevenssen), a Swedish Television correspondent, asked whether General Jaruzelski was satisfied with what he has done so far.

Leaders Answer Questions

LD041949 Warsaw Television Service in Polish 1800 GMT 4 Jul 86

["Part one" of press conference held in the Council of Ministers' office in Warsaw on 4 July devoted to the results of the 10th PZPR Congress, given by PZPR Central Committee First Secretary Wojciech Jaruzelski, Premier Zbigniew Messner, and PZPR Central Committee secretaries Stanislaw Ciosek, Kazimierz Cypryniak and Andrzej Wasilewski -- recorded]

[Text] [Jaruzelski] I am pleased to have the opportunity to meet so wide and representative a group of press, radio, and television representatives from many countries.

I think that this wide representation also strongly testifies to the interest in the deliberations and results of the 10th Congress. I take this opportunity to express thanks to all of you ladies and gentlemen who objectively and extensively reported on the congress' deliberations. At the same time, I consider this meeting as a form of compensation to those of you, ladies and gentlemen, who asked for personal interviews for the press, radio, and television. For obvious reasons I cannot meet all these demands, but I think that today's meeting will be able to meet our joint demands.

Ladies and gentlemen, I think you undoubtedly have acquainted yourself with congress materials; with the Central Committee report, which I had the honor of delivering; and with the report by Comrade Zbigniew Messner, chairman of the Council of Ministers, who is present here. Thus, summarizing these documents would be inappropriate, as well as summarizing the congress' deliberations as a whole. I only think that one has to resolutely underscore that the congress was an important event in the life not only of our party but the whole country, that it had and still has strong resonance abroad, and that it confirmed the policy of socialist renewal adopted by the Ninth Congress, while at the same time raising it to a higher level in accordance with emerging conditions and needs, and stress what we consider as particularly important, that is, the consistency of the implementation and efficiency of our activity, which so far -- and this is not a secret -- has not been a strong point.

I also wish to emphasize the consistency in the fulfillment of the line of accord and struggle, and consistency in the fulfillment of the reform, which we are proclaiming as a second stage, anticipating its greater efficiency and consistency. A very important novelty and a very serious operation -- if one is allowed to call it that -- is the review of the structures and organisms of our state, in the wider sense of the word, connected to an attestation in work places and also connected to various forms of personnel reviews.

I regard those accents concerned with international affairs as very important. I think that the clear confirmation -- here, from Warsaw, from our congress -- of the PPR's peace policy and the emphasis on the permanence of our initiatives is also support for those initiatives to which we attach great importance, here I am thinking of the Soviet initiatives. Personally, the initiatives presented by Mikhail Gorbachev came as no surprise to anyone. His presence at the congress and the presence of the Soviet delegation gave these proceedings and the events accompanying them a specific tone. We are very happy with the course of this visit. It emphasized the steadfastness of our friendly relations, and it emphasized Poland's status in Soviet politics -- the esteem and recognition for our party, the working class, and the Polish nation. We value this very highly.

I think the participation of 107 foreign delegations, representing a very wide range of political trends, is worth noting. This testifies to the fact that Poland cannot be isolated, that it has many friends, and that many of these friends have our country's direction of development and politics, which we are striving to fulfill within the limits of our strengths and capabilities. [as heard]

In a word, this was a congress that in some sense sums up and closes a stage in the life of our country -- the stage of normalization, the stage of consolidation. At the same time, it opens a new stage in which these efforts will have to be continued. However, very numerous difficulties will have to be overcome.

We are far from being triumphant. We are conscious of many hinderances, many problems whose solution will demand a lot of time and effort. We would like to attain understanding from all of our partners in this respect, and I wish, through mediation of the press, radio, and television, to assure that in matters of the strengthening of peace, dialogue, and internatinal cooperation, Poland can be relied on always. I would be very happy if our meeting today contributes to better mutual understanding. We will try, as much as we are able, to come up to your expectations associated with this conference. Please present your questions.

[Kevin Ruane, BBC, in English, fading into Polish translation] Mr General the party statute states that the high post of the first secretary can be held by one person for a maximum of two terms. I wish to know how you treat your current election as first secretary: as the beginning of a second term or perhaps, as a third since you became first secretary in October 1981? I would also like to know if you would be satisfied with a successive election as first secretary at the next congress? And, generally, what do you think about this: Is it right that one person should hold a high function for many, many years?

[Jaruzelski] I will reply beginning with the final part of your question. The congress, the 10th Congress -- and the Ninth Congress of our party, above all -- clearly specified the attitude toward this matter, introducing terms of office [kadencyjnosc] in the holding of these precise offices. We maintained this and we will consistently implement this. My personal intentions do not reach into a future that I would specify myself. It will be specified by the party, it will be specified by people who have put their faith in me at this moment and whose trust I do not wish to let down. As I said when taking on the office of premier in that exceptionally difficult time in our history: I will lay it down at any time when it becomes possible and when the high Sejm recognizes it as purposeful. So it happened. I think I will behave consistently in this case also. But, it is not up to me to specify when this will occur.

[Zgymunt Slomkowski, TRYBUNA LUDU] The 10th Congress laid a particularly strong emphasis on the implementation of the program and the resolution. Is there no risk that, even with the best of intentions, the attitude, which could be described as no discussion, no being clever, and no criticism, just implementation, will gain prominence in the party? In line with this, will this implementational course not become a pretext for practices which could be described as more normalization and less democracy? Another question. This is connected with a statement in the plenary discussion by one of the comrades from Lodz, who used the following wording: Those who give more to the enterprise are entitled to demand more of the enterprise, and not just in zlotys. We know this is a more widespread position, but at times it is treated as a demanding stance, colliding with the realities and functions of the enterprise under the reform. Is it not possible for narrow economic and managerial tendencies, which represent a threat to the implementation of the letter and the spirit of the 10th Congress, to slip in this way, under the cover of the catchword of efficiency?

[Jaruzelski] These are very important questions and we could combine the answer to them. First of all, I interpret them as a warning. I am grateful for that since, presumably, the emphasis that we made, that I made in the closing speech might suggest predominance of the implementational, managerial factor over the democratic factor, the self-management factor, the public factor. I would like to declare most emphatically that absolute balance between these two factors has to be maintained, that decisins can only be consistently and effectively implemented, executed if they are born thorough democratic procedures, if they win the support of the public, of the work force at the enterprise.

That is why we attach such great weight to the work of self-managements. Self-managements are and will remain permanent phenomenon in our conditions and in our economy.

That is why we have laid such emphasis on establishing the team system. This is a particular form of democratic relations and of comanaging in the enterprise by employees collectives, workers in particular, which bear the responsibilty and decide on the way to execute these tasks. There would have been nothing more misleading than breaking the balance here. The stress on the implementation, as I have said, arises from the fact that today we have created a very wide structure of democractic and self-managing acvitity. We have also made many correct decisions, as I can state with satisfaction. The Western press treats decisions as such, resolutions as such, and laws as such -- at the worst, with indifference. I pay no heed. However, the implementation aspect is our weakness; here we want to lay emphasis. But, using a facetious expression by Boy, our outstanding writer and a humanist: One has to have both hands and legs; nothing must be distorted.

[Oleg Losoto, PRAVDA, in Russian, fading into superimposed Polish translation] At the 10th Congress, concluding yesterday, an extensive exchange of views took place on matters of the party and Poland. Which of the issues would you put at the forefront?

[Jaruzelski] At the forefront should be that which is fundamental for a communist, workers' party -- namely, the confidence in and the bond with the working class and the nation. We know that in this domain, in this field we suffered great losses. I will not characterize the matter further; it is known and was many times critically and self-critically discussed by us. We have made a giant step on the way to rebuilding confidence and bonds; all of our activities and policy must continue to be subordinate to their consolidation. All we are doing in the areas of social life and social morale has to serve this goal. I think this is the main issue.

[Klaus Branke, Radio GDR, in Polish] What, according to your point of view, are the trump cards for achieving the expected acceleration of socioeconomic development?

[Jaruzelski] Perhaps, in a slightly hackneyed way, one might say in agitational fashion, that I think the Poles themselves are the greatest chance -- our nation; the working class and its avant-guarde, the party; and the masses of superbly prepared and highly qualified people. People's Poland has at the moment 1 and 1/2 million people with higher education, among them are many outstanding specialists with international reputations. We are a young society; a young generation is coming to power and is taking on more and more responsible functions, which, thanks to the 10th Congress, has gained -- this we desire, and I think that this will occur -- new, great impulses for action, for overcoming all that halts today's progress and development. Therefore, man is our biggest chance, that and the full use of his capabilities -- and one must say openly that, so far, we were not always able to ensure this happened. A major conclusion of the 10th Congress is to assure that this great human moral and intellectual potential is activated, pushing forward at full speed toward the great work of the development of socialist Poland.

[Andrzej Siezieniewski, Polish Radio and Television] Comrade General, in your closing speech yesterday you said that one of the achievements of the 10th Congress was to have strengthened the sense of the words: The same party, but different. To what extent does this phrasing convey the substance of the transformations that have taken place in the party over the last few years; are there still areas that need improvement?

[Jaruzelski] I will begin with the last part of the question. It seems to me that there are no walks of life that do not require improvement. Similarly, in the work of our party there are many such areas; we spoke of them at length in the congress. The very criticism of both the reports and the discussions confirms this. In fact, it answers that part of your question.

We would probably have to use up too much time to present and describe all those factors that today allow us to say with complete responsibility that the party is the same but different. Not many observers of your Polish life -- and not just domestic observers or those from the friendly countries, but also those from countries with which we do not maintain friendly relations -- irrespective of their point of view -- to which they are entitled -- could deny that the situation in Poland, the situation in the party and its methods of work have changed in a fundamental manner as compared to those in the seventies and before. We want to strengthen this trend and -- here we go back to the early part of the answer -- to improve them. We do not regard the state that we have achieved as perfect. There are still various nooks and crannies, if I may say so, where the light of renewal has not reached; we must persistently overcome these.

[Matthew Vita, ASSOCIATED PRESS, in English, with superimposed Polish translation] In the preelection campaign, in press articles, and in the declarations of journalists we observed a certain intensification of the reproaches and accusations voiced in relation to the United States. However, in your speech during the congress there were, in principle, no overtones like this. It could rather be said that we perceived a conciliatory tone. Maybe we can expect a continuation of this tone. In line with this, I have two, more specific questions. In your opinion, can we expect improvements in Polish-U.S. relations during the term of the Reagan government? We know Poland is putting forward demands in relation to the United States as regards economice sanctions and the propaganda campaign directed against your country, led by the U.S. Government. Therefore, in connection with what I said earlier about the conciliatory tone, is Poland ready to make some conciliatory gesture toward the United States that could accelerate an improvement in these mutual relations?

[Jaruzelski] It is perhaps inappropriate to compare these or other declarations in concrete matters contained in our publications, in the statements of representatives of these or other elements of authority, which constituted a reaction to specific moves by the U.S. Government, including the recent speech by the President, by Vice President Bush, and many other, very unfriendly factors in relation to Poland, to which we gave and will continue to give answers. This accords with our sense of honor and responsibility. On the other hand, the report outlined a wider panorama, transcending these -- let us call them incidental manifestations and facts -- and expressing, on the one had, great pain that Polish-U.S. relations continue to be in a state of impasse, and on the other, frequent readiness to improve these relations. This improvement may be achieved only on the basis of the recognition of our sovereign rights, the recognition of our methods of solving internal problems.

You speak about a gesture. You speak about some step from the Polish side that would -- I do not know if I am to understand it this way -- placate the United States. Well, I cannot really see such a possibility. What we are doing, I think, is the greatest proof of the credibility of our intentions: what we are doing in Poland, what we are doing for peace and detente, what we are doing in the sphere of democratization, and what we are doing in the field of cooperation and good relations with other Western countries, including members of NATO, who perhpas do not love human rights and democracy less than the U.S. Government -- if less, then this is this pact's matter. True, we are a nation in which the Catholics are the majority and there is this well-known saying, to turn the other cheek, but in this instance we will not avail ourselves of this noble commandment.

'Part 2' of Conference

LD042236 Warsaw Television Service in Polish 2005 GMT 4 Jul 86

["Part two" of press conferecne held in the Council of Minister' Office in Warsaw on 4 July devoted to the results of the 10th PZPR Congress, given by PZPR Central Committee First Secretary Wojciech Jaruzelski, Premier Zbigniew Messner, and PZPR Central Committee secretaries Stanislaw Ciosek, Kazimierz Cypryniak, and Andrezj Wasilewski -- recorded]

[Text] [Words indistinct] [Margueritte, LE FIGARO, in Polish] Mr General, I understand that for the leaders of socialist states, for the general, for Mr Gorbachev, an absolute priority is the socioeconomic development of their states, to not allow a collapse of civilization. On the other hand, it seems to me that, for instance, for the state or party apparatus the absolute priority is more straightforward; it is simply to maintain oneself, maintain one's position. Consequently, with whom does the general intend to implement his program, and would a return to authentic social dialogue on the basis of respecting the Constitution of People's Poland, for which the church is stubbornly calling, not be indispensable to the implementation of the program?

[Jaruzelski] We are also stubbornly calling for this, only apparently our voices sometimes sound different and are understood differently. We are doing a great deal -- as you, sir, and you all know -- to come out to meet with various milieux and various views. I once more firmly state: No one in Poland is persecuted for their view. You know this very well, you meet with thousands of people who have the most critical judgement about the authorities, about the government, about the party, and not a hair falls from their heads. On the other hand, we do not particularly see the possibility of finding a common language with those who stand on the ground of negating the basic, fundamental principles of our system, our state, those who gave practical, concrete examples in past years, and whose behavior today reveals that they have not changed these views. Too great a responsibility rests on the authorities of the Polish People's Republic for them to be able to scorn these experiences.

We have behind us not only the last few years, but whole centuries in which Poland was laid in the grave by anarchy, frustration, and the liberum veto [Latin phrase used to signify a noble's veto on legislation in the time of the Republic before the 18th century partitions]. That is why we believe that while strengthening democratic processes, we should simultaneously strive to keep them undisturbed by anarchy-creating processes. Anarchy is a contradiction of democracy. And as I am here relating myself to a question set by Mr Margueritte -- whose many publications I read with interest, many of them witness to a penetrating knowledge of our realities, even sometimes of a sympathetic attitude to them, but I familiarized myself, with a certain amusement, with you last, or one of your last, publications, if it was correctly translated, in which you relate in all seriousness that Mikhail Gorbachev, during two conversations with me, very firmly taught and warned me, and called attention to various things, and apparently this had an effect -- I would like to know what sort of listening device or other instruments you have that allowed you to be so eminently present during our talks. Only I have to disappoint you, for in fact they were not talks of this kind. They were talks between friends, characterized by complete, mutual trust, which I particularly value.

[Warsaw Domestic Service in Polish at 2120 GMT on 4 July carries "extensive excerpts" of the press conference, which adds the following passage at this point:

[Robert Siebert, LOS ANGELES TIMES; in English with superimposed Polish translation] General, as is known, Poland, next to the Soviet Union, was the most seriously affected by the effects of the Chernobyl accident. In your view, general, what international measures should be taken to avoid similar accidents in the future and to ensure efficient warning about such accidents to neighboring countries?

[Jaruzelski] We talked about these matters, and I personally did. But I am of the opinion that the most competent statements on this matter were those on the Soviet side by Mikhail Gorbachev and by leading IAEA circles. There is an initiative, a proposal that jointly, on the basis of international agreements, there should be settlements, decisions that would allow people to counteract or to reduce the scale of the imminent dangers, as it appears from the many breakdowns that have taken place in nuclear power plants. What I am saying should not sound too sinister or catastrophic: There is a threat hanging over us related to the fact that there are approximately 400 such power plants in the world. We are building one ourselves, and we shall continue to build that one and another too.

This tragedy and others that have taken place are also a lesson that allows these dangers to be eliminated or at least, to be reduced substantially. Here I can say that in recent talks with Mikhail Gorbachev he informed me that extensive studies on this case have been carried out in the Soviet Union, that there are volumes of materials gathered that throw light on this occurrence from various angles. After a final assessment these materials will be made available to us and, I believe, to other international bodies as a joint experience that should prevent various threats and their consequences in the future.

[Stanislaw Glabinski, INTERPRESS] First question: I would like to say that the reading of the congress documents, parts of the congress debate, and a conference by Minister Orzechowski seem to indicate that there is a program for far wider and more active actions by Poland in the sphere of international relations. It would seem that this is a normal thing, that the normalization of the situation in the country turns the leadership's interest toward international issues of our state. I also do not conceal that among the journalists exchanging information in the foyer, apart from the speculation about personnel changes, there were also considerations as to whether Poland would want to put forward a wider, new and extensive program or initiatives in international politics in the immediate future, soon, maybe this year. I would like to ask how much truth there is in this, and in what direction we would want to act both geographically and as regards the subject? That is the first question.

The second concerns domestic affairs. I would like to ask whether the new leadership is fully aware of the fact that it is assuming office at a time when one sphere of our cultural life is in a state of very advanced disintegration. Here I am thinking about publishing. The publishing movement is in such a state that a book is published in 3 years for a friend, and normally one has to wait 5 years or more. The lines to get a book published are much longer than the lines in front of butcher shops. I would like to ask whether the new leadership has a program of changes, and whether Poland can return to the level of an average civilized European country?

[Jaruzelski] First of all, the effectiveness of management and greater national income will be decisive. The national income can be divided in different ways. Some parts of it can be increased or decreased, but it is a reality and we are moving within its range. Undoubtedly, it also concerns the whole sphere of culture. Funds for culture will be increased, but we probably will not be able to do it in a radical manner without negatively affecting other spheres that also require more substantial material support.

[I am of the opinion that the dynamics which should intensify in the development of our economy will also serve the issues of culture, including books.

[As far as Poland's initiatives in foreign policy are concerned, we have always been very active in this sphere. I do not want to remind you of the well-known Polish initiatives that are still highly valued in the world. We are in the mainstream of the initiatives that have been worked out jointly by the Warsaw Pact -- for example, the recent initiatives from Budapest, including one as important and directly connected with our interests as the reduction of conventional weapons. I remind you: Poland has a large conventional army. Our active and constructive approach, I believe, will be an important factor in the negotiations.

[We have proposed many initiatives in various spheres. I recently did so at the United Nations. There are modern initiatives, and some of them gradually acquire greater and greater importance. We will continue to consider to what extent Poland is to maintain a traditional and active role in international politics. I believe that there are still more and more circumstances conducive to that. In accordance with what you have said, the stronger we are internally, the better our voice is heard and the more credible it is. Also, our friendship and ever better relations within the socialist community and with the Soviet Union somehow consolidate our capabilities. We are becoming an increasingly strong partner; thus we have more opportunities to exert influence on a wider scale.

[I say that there are no initiatives that could be presented here because, even if there were, I believe they should be kept for a different occasion. An initiative is strong when it is fresh, whereas when it is rehashed later in different conditions it loses its value.]

[Leszek Pawlowicz, CBS news, in Polish] General, many of us are wondering about the effects, the consequences of the personnel changes in the Politburo. On the basis of this, a slight observation in so far as all over the world we journalists are suspected, and probably rightly so, of inquisitiveness, and military personnel all over the world -- maybe in connection with the Greek origin of this word -- are suspected of being apodictic. Will the arrival of the generals' group to the Politburo have some influence in this direction, or is the general afraid of this?

[Jaruzelski] I am treating this, despite everything, as a good joke, because all the generals, as you mentioned, have been, first of all, party members for longer than they have been generals; that is definite. Secondly, they have all been in the supreme party authorities -- candidate Politburo members become Politburo members, secretaries become Politburo members -- well, these are [pauses] these are not qualitative changes. These are changes that take place on the same plane and simply result from specific regulations, from specific principles of the functioning of the leadership circles, the practice and experiences adopted by us. This introduces or emphasizes nothing new in this sense.

As far as the generals being apodictic is concerned, I must admit that this reply would be very difficult for me because it could be acknowledged as a defense of my style of work or activity. I think, of course, that there is a lot to improve in this style, as in all others, and my duty is to act with increasing effectiveness, but effectiveness, sir, in our conditions. After all, in all conditions it is better to listen to people in order to not commit mistakes. This lies in our (?best) interests. We do not initiate and expand democratic processes because someone from across the ocean or from another part of the globe demands this of us. They do not have any rights, either political or moral, to do this.

But, because in our own interests, on the basis of our bitter experiences we have become convinced that only basing ourselves on a thorough knowledge of the situation, basing ourselves on peoples' opinions, listening to them, and transforming this into the optimal shape of decisions promises success. We are not masochists or sucidial. We do not practice policies that are ineffective. And effectiveness means both democracy and discipline. That is all a general can say about it.

[Adam Bronikowski, television news, in Polish] This is not our first time to try to rationalize employment, and I must say in general we never managed it. Perhaps this resulted from certain principles of our system. What are the chances that this rationalization of employment, this elimination of an apparent shortage of labor can finally be solved?

[Messner] You have narrowed down the issue and related it only to employment. In the initiative contained first and foremost in the Central Committee Report delivered by the first secretary, this much wider approach concerns not just a review of employment and rationalization of employment, although it should be said that is also involved, but also a comprehensive review, as you probably remember, of structures. This concerns not just sectors of the national economy alone but also administration and even -- this was said unambiguously -- public organizations, not to mention political ones. So the issue of verification in this form will be a very serious undertaking by a party and government team which will cover all walks of our life to obtain rational structures, to uncover all those inexactitudes or, let's say, abnormalities or warps which appeared over the last period. And against that background there is, of course, the issue of rationalization of employment. Of course, we have more than once attempted to rationalize employment through personnel review, but -- as you put it in your aside -- how do your reconcile this with system principles? I do not think there are any contradictions here as we are talking of using people properly at the right places of work. That means that when there is overemployment in one place, there are shortages at another. Because of this there is a need for personnel mobility between particular industries, sectors, economies and enterprises, so employment is rational. Of course, this has to be influenced by economic factors, not just purely administrative ones; that is, it will not be possible to implement the review itself, its administrative aspects, it official and legal aspects, the aspects of correct establishment of structures if it is not supported through economic reform, which we have been implementing since 1982, contains such elements.

If they have not yet been put into practice to such an extent as to give immediate results in all cases, then the consequences, if the two trends coincide -- that is, the trend of the realistic revelation of the state of employment, organizational strutures, the state of administration and other spheres of the national economy and at the same time, the economic compulsion about which I spoke, which means effectiveness of economic management and, by the same token, striving for the best possible exploitation of work resources -- then they ought, in total, to give results.

We are aware the problem is unusually difficult, and we are treating it not only in the sphere of slogans, that means we regard it as a slogan which should be put forward at the present stage. This is a great concern, and we approach this with great concern for the qualitative weight of solving this problem since its solution will meet with great and various difficulties, among others -- well, let us not hide this -- also particular problems. Various types of slow-downs and defenses will manifest themselves. We must take this into account.

From this, it is assumed this will require a lot of effort and that that kind of a team is to be created at central level and so, of course, work will have to be properly prepared in individual voivodships, in individual enterprises, branches and milieux. I think with resistance and consistency, aided by economic mechanisms, we will acheive a positive result. I am convinced of this.

[Jan Krauze, LE MONDE, in Polish] We were under the impression that, among full members of the Politburo, there are only two, namely Ms Stepien and Mr Muranski. [as heard] The general said that there were four of them. Could the general name them, so there are no inaccuracies. My question is a little different. Will the citizen's councils, which the general mentioned in his report, be connected to PRON or not, and will representatives of the so-called opposition be able to take part in them?

[Jaruzelski] Quite rightly, in the composition of the party leadership to date, in the party leadership, the Politburo, Politburo members, candidate Politburo members, secretaries, ought to be treated as an integral leadership group and, if we are speaking about differentiation of this sort: Politburo members or candidate Politburo members, then they have an exclusively, let us call it, formally prestigious character, but they do not influence the degree of involvement and the importance of their contribution during our proceeding. Starting from this assumption, until now there were four workers in the leadership, and there continue to be four workers in the leadership, namely, you mentioned, you gave two surnames: I will add a third -- Alfred Miodowicz. He continues to be a worker. For 30-odd years, he is a worker, remaining in active cooperation with his parent enterprise, in which he proceeds to fulfill his duties as a worker. At the same time he is the chairman of the OPZZ. Should this exclude him as a worker? On the contrary, this increases the workers' voice. This increases the force of the workers' influence, as, through him, those millions he represents can now speak. And finally, a candidate Politburo member is Comrade Rembisz, a female worker from Poznan. And in this way, that is four people. [sentence as heard]. Please show me such a leadership; it would probably sound altogether like a joke if we expected this, for instnce, in the leaderships, authorities of the Western, capitalist states -- that they contained workers. That is why I am very much puzzled by such a great concern for their sufficient number to find themselves in our authorities. I wish to stress that never before in the history of our party have there been so many workers and peasants in the Central Committee, so many delegates to the congress who are workers and peasants. This makes credible our calls: A workers' party, a party of working people. But let us not measure this against such subtle evaluations very far from the heart of the matter.

[Krauze] Thank you very much.

[Jaruzelski] You set another question, about citizens' councils. [pauses] Citizens conventions, yes, those which we are proposing, and the social-consultation councils at the level of the Council of State. This is an idea put forward as a sort of offer, expressed in any case more than once before, though in a somewhat different form, for we state it is not necessary to organically enter PRON, recognize oneself as to its constituent part, to find a plane for discussion and dialogue. The patriotic movement can be a side in this dialogue, in relation to other agents; we even mentioned those which could be involved in this. This is, a futher concretization of this offer, resting on our creation of a certain plane, which in the given case at the central level would be the Council of State, at the local level territorial, voivodship councils, at which representatives of various ways of looking at our reality could meet with a full guarantee of the unequivocality of the recognition of the Polish reason of state [racja stanu], the Constitution of the Polish Peoples' Republic.

This has to be a credible recognition, which manifest itself by a certain attitude, by a certain conduct, and this alone gives the possibility that this common language is not artificial or imitation, that this is not a game of appearances, and that it serves Poland.

[Bozydar Sosien, PAP, in Polish] The following statement was made from the congress rostrum: The work is often sick. This is a bitter statement, but unfortunately a true one. In this connection I would like to ask whether the party, while implementing a program adopted at the congress, will lay greater emphasis and give priority treatment to the system of incentives. This first. Secondly, can we expect the authorities will be more consistent in disciplining work. Here I think even of brutal dismissal from certain posts and certain spheres of work people, who comrade general named strongly in his final speech. Here I think of sluggards, indolent people, idlers and layabouts. And a final question: Can one expect that material success achieved through hard work will not be something embarassing, as often happens now.

[Jaruzelski] The congress dealt with the issue of work to a considerable extent. First, these economic, organizational and moral incentives, which should contribute to the increase of effectiveness, productivity and discipline of work: I do not think I can add anything new to the thoughts formulated at the congress, which found their reflection in the resolution. This is now a duty of the party and state leadership to act in all these spheres I have mentioned so work acquires higher and higher standing and is more and more effective. That includes respect and recognition for success in work and its proper material reward. We talk openly about these matters. We think that good, above-average work should be well rewarded and above average.

We are not defining some artificial limits here. These days we have people -- outstanding inventors, rationalizers -- who are, frankly, very rich by our standards. No one should envy this, although envy is a human thing and regretfully it does appear. We shall defend such successes if they are based on these healthy foundations. I think the team system is one opportunity for employees to appraise the contribution of individual collective members and to differentiate this as appropriate through remuneration. The fundamental thing is for that remuneration to be proportional to effort and proportional to work results. That is a fundamental matter and there will be unceasing struggle for it.

[Syrian reporter -- name indistinct -- in Arabic with superimposed translation] Comade General, I would like to refer to your visit to the Maghreb countries. Can we expect a high-level visit in the immediate future to other countries of that region, in particular Syria?

[Jaruzelski] Poland and Syria are linked by good, friendly relations. We support all justified efforts of the Syrian people for the country's security. I think we are also making an actual contribution to this by maintaining a Polish military unit on the Golan Heights within the UN Armed Forces. Our economic, political and other cooperation is developing well. Syrian delegations took part in the congress. We are interested in continuing the development of these relations and undoubtedly an important element of these woould be visits, equally by President Hafiz al-Asad to Poland and my possible visit to Syria. In general there is agreement on these matters, but in this instance we have not yet determined specific dates and the order in which they will take place.

[Pavel Minarik, RUDE PRAVO, in Polish] Congress delegates are already at work today in enterprises and institutions throughout Poland.

To what, in your view, comrade should they pay most attention in their conversations with party members and nonparty people in the communities where they live and work? And another question: are any new forms of implementing congress resolutions envisaged?

[Jaruzelski] I could reply very concisely and perhaps even untypically: They should above all listen, just as our public, our working class undoubtedly followed what was said from the congress platform quite closely. There would be no point in repeating it yet again in a similar or identical manner.

Hearing how the words at the congress were received, however, would be most valuable. That is why we should be going to work enterprises, and why I announced the whole party leadership will go next Tuesday [8 July]. We will hear how the working class, working people, want to implement the program and what they advise us in this respect to achieve higher efficiency of this process.

Of course my answer is simplified, because surely there will be a need to convey many matters, especially concerning the color of the congress, some details, some reflections and some feelings. We believe, however, that hearing opinion and including it in future work will be most valuable.

This afternoon at a Central Committee Secretariat meeting we determined some principles for future activity. We agreed with the comrade premier that, in the nearest future, a joint meeting will be held of the Politburo and the government Presidium. We will be in touch with our allies the United Peasant Party and the Democratic Party to coordinate joint principles of activity. A meeting of the Council of State will be held soon; then a meeting with the chairmen of the people's councils and voivodas. All in all we are undertaking actions from the start, but at the same time taking care to avoid an excess of meetings and conferences. We will organize to the extent they are necessary. In technical terms, the post-congress campaign will be set in motion and will then be transformed into an accountability and election campaign in particular party cells beginning this autumn. As far as new forms are concerned, I would rather not talk about it more extensively, because first, many interesting thoughts, initiatives and suggestions were made at the congress on how to implement the congress resolutions, and, second, these meetings and conferences I mentioned a moment ago are to serve the task of developing the most efficient and surely new forms of our work.

[Antonio Villardo, Mexico, in Spanish with superimposed Polish translation] It seems to me that the draft program of economic renewal drafted at the congress is marvellous. I am afraid, however, that this problem is foreign indebtedness. In Latin America we have been experts for years in seeing how our dreams disintegrate when we have to pay the interest from international indebtedness. From my point of view the question of the possible remission of debt is very ambiguous. I would like to ask two things. Above all, would Poland like to support the Latin American initiative on the remission of debt? Second, I would like to know whether the initiative of Fidel Castro regarding global negotiations to solve the problem of foreign indebtedness is known here and whether it is discussed?

[Jaruzelski] Debt is, of course, an enormous world problem, though it arose in different circles of our world structure. On the one hand, in those states which find themselves in the orbit of the finances, the financial mechanisms of the capitalist world, above all the countries of Latin America, where debt -- we speak of this openly -- has the character of a certain kind of financial colonialism, because the rise of this debt, its nature, its results, have precisely such a nature.

Poland also bears the great burden of debt which actually arose under different conditions. We feel the responsibility we bear for the debt, although this was brought about by many factors which were beyond our control. The worsening payments situation was affected most by restrictions and sanctions applied against Poland, which as I have already said, cost us -- financially and materially -- half the total debt. We must overcome this great burden, this great financial barrier which makes it difficult for us to accelerate our development, and that is why we must do it in such a way and on such a scale as described in the Central Committee report and by the chairman of the Council of Ministers, without infringing on the basic elements of the development dynamics. Besides, to do this would not be in the interests of creditors who should, I think, be interested in Poland being able to meet its obligations. For this to occur we need economic growth -- particularly export growth -- and in this we count on an understanding, rational, and partnerlike attitude from our creditors.

Poland's ever-increasing participation in the CEMA system, the developing economic integration, and the plans and programs for cooperation up to the year 2,000, are our great opportunity to strengthen our economic power.

We shall become economically stronger and the debt problem will be less troublesome. I spoke about the issue of debt from the UN rostrum when I proposed that outstanding experts and representatives from both the debtor and creditor countries study a realistic way out of this situation. I proposed, among others, that a center based at the Jagiellonian University be formed. I mentioned this in my report and certain steps have been taken. But looking at the issue realistically I realize this is just a beginning and that the problem is much more wide-ranging. For the scale of the problem, [the solution lies] along the lines of the proposals by our dear friend Fidel Castro, which we have studied with great interest and which, I think, are a far-reaching and radical solution, and to improve the financial situation in the world and in particular the countries which suffer most from the burden of debt.

I think the talks should rotate around this, that we should create the conditions for regaining and strengthening of world economic order. The current situation may transform itself, at some stage, into financial anarchy, which will touch not only those countries suffering most, but also the most affluent creditor countries, which should have the courage to have a somewhat more long-term, far-reaching view, to avoid that which could threaten financial, economic catastrophe.

[Gwozdz Zdislaw, Austria, in Polish] (?In) the hope that you, general, were able to acquaint yourself with the last communique of the episcopal conference, I pose the following question. In its communique, the conference assessed the state of social life in the country much more harshly than you, when presenting the Central Committee report to the 10th PZPR Congress. How do you explain these differences of assessment, and do you expect a coming together of these assessments?

[Jaruzelski] I admit I would have been very surprised -- I am not such an optimist to expect the communiques and positions of the episcopate will converge with the opinion of the Politburo of a communist party. This is something of an ideal which, in our earthly lives, we will, for certain, not attain. However, what is important is to achieve understanding on certain primary values for the nation, for the state, and I think in particular my talks with Jozef Cardinal Glemp, the Polish primate, aim in that direction and allow for such a plane to slowly, with effort, with resistance, with difficulties, be constructed.

We also spoke about this from the congress tribune, indicating the church, which, as it claims, has a rule over souls in Poland, would have a lot to do in this situation to improve many aspects of our social and economic life, actively influencing people's attitudes, their activity in the work process. This also, in some way, was reflected in this communique, and I am very glad that, for the first time, at such length, if I perceive this correctly, matters about work, about national and social wealth were noted. Up until now, at least in such a clearly articulated way, there has been no such thing.

I would, however, not attach excessive importance, as I have said, to our differences of opinion on some issues. Neither the socialist revolution in Poland nor the bourgeois revolution in France would have been possible if the masses that accomplished them had faithfully followed the sociopolitical teachings of the church, which, as we know, opposed these revolutions. The church adjusts to the situation, to historical processes with a certain delay, as I have already mentioned. We think the Catholic Church in Poland will eventually fully recognize the realities, recognize actual developments and, just like most clergy today, including many who do so actively, participate in strengthening the concrete reality we are building. The church has the principle of not acknowledging its mistakes; it is an acceptable principle. We have a different way of speaking of our past and of our errors, sometimes even taking it, I would say, to the level of self-flagellation. What is important, however, is that even without speaking about its errors, after some time the church actually acknowledges them as both its policies and its position change. We count on this very much. The Polish church, with its patriotic traditions and its sense of realism, I believe and wish it to be so, will adapt more and more fully to the reality in which, after all, it participates through the millions of its faithful.

[Gerhard Kowalski, GDR, in Polish] Tomorrow a large operation begins for the third time — the youth and children's exchange between the GDR and Poland, an operation of which you, comrade first secretary, were one of the founders. I would like to ask you to say a few words on the subject. What will the exchange look like this year?

[Jaruzelski] I think the exchange of young people, who take their holidays in the GDR and Poland, is a great achievement of ours, an achievement of Polish-GDR friendship. Every year we mutually attain greater range and more experience. This year, 300,000 young people will participate, a very large number. We call this investment in our friendship for the 21st century. For these young people, who will familiarize themselves with their neighbor and friend, retain memories that are the best form of strengthening friendship's long-term meaning. That is why we relate to this initiative with great goodwill. We highly value the hospitality our GDR friends show to Polish children and youth and we try to reciprocate it. This is, one might say, a model element of building relations of a new type between Poles and Germans that sweeps away, if I might put it thus, all that which in our history was burden, was ballast. It shows cooperation and relations on precisely this ground can be and must be developed.

[Waldemar Rudnik, Polish television, in Polish] Several times, as a result of television programs, the comrade general visited places where, putting it mildly, reality is far from what we would wish in the shape of law and order. The results were sometimes, at least locally, often electrifying. What of it though, when subjects for our publicistic activity are found next door that are, if not equally, then only just a little less drastic?

The question comes from this. I would add that frequently we wait without result for replies to press criticism from those who know very well the first secretary will not get everywhere to fix things for badly functioning party cells or insensitive administrations. My question is will the general specify the intended activities of the new party leadership so that press criticism could have a new political rank, as I am inclined to regard the reality hitherto, from my experiences, as barely satisfactory.

[Jaruzelski] One of the barriers, a weighty one... Perhaps here it would here be appropriate to seek the basic reserves of the mobilization of activism, removing various kinds of reservation. These are bad examples of the functioning of some sections of the authorities, party cells or administrative or state authorities, using negative fact. It after all rebounds with a hundred-fold echo. People evaluate the authorities not according to the best and most correct programs, but according to that which finds itself in their nearest surroundings, which has an influence on their lives. That depends on people.

There is a certain paradox here. People make peoples' lives mutually more difficult. Someone is rude to someone in a shop; then that person is rude to someone else at the post office, and so on. So, this is a matter not only in economic categories, but also in psychological and moral ones. This is a matter of upbringing processes. In any case, after all, let us say this openly, Poland is not all exception. In other countries, especially those that attribute special attainments to themselves in the process of democracy and human rights, much heartlessness is found; many people find themselves at the margin, on the outside, deprived of the right to work, deprived of the conditions for existence, constantly bombarded with all sorts of extreme, stressful situations.

We might be poorer but we are much further advanced, and in spite of everything we are much healthier. But this does not mean we are healthy here; here we must do an awful lot, and as I said yesterday, we will combat with full determination, consistency and severity all which deforms and makes ugly the life of the society and which insults, as I would put it, the nature of our ideal, which we serve; all which undermines the good name of Poland and makes it difficult for us to overcome difficulties. In this sense we support even more decisively press criticism which exposes and condemns such phenomena; if it is genuine criticism we will protect it and give it priority. At the same time it must be balanced and present what is beautiful, noble and good, and which can serve as an example. We must not develop a habit of seeing everything as extremely negative phenomena, as they do not, after all, dominate. Many millions of people work honestly, sincerely, wisely, and deserve their work be respected and appreciated. In such proportions the matters which will be presented will have educational value, and we will encourage such a direction in the propaganda activity and support it.

[Unidentified voice] Ladies and gentlemen. That was the last reply, I would like to thank you all for your interest and your participation in today's conference. Good bye. [applause]

Further Coverage of Conference

LD051000 Warsaw Domestic Service in Polish 0530 GMT 5 Jul 86

["Further fragment" of 4 July press conference in the Council of Ministers' Office in Warsaw July devoted to the results of the 10th PZPR Congress, by PZPR Central Committee first Secretary Wojciech Jaruzelski, Premier Zbigniew Messner, and PZPR Central Committee secretaries Stanislaw Ciosek, Kazimierz Cypryniak and Andrzeij Wasilweski -- recorded]

[Excerpt] [Jackson Deal] [THE WASHINGTON POST, in English fading into Polish translation] Mr General, I would like to add to the questions on church-state relations: I would like to ask what is the standpoint of the authorities to proposals by the church authorities to give an official status to political prisoners in Poland? Secondly, what is the standpoint on the Church Foundation, the Agricultural Fund -- will it be officially recognized? What are its prospectives?

[Jaruzelski] I did not have the time to more thoroughly familiarize myself with that which you call the church proposals. I judge this relates to the last pastoral letter of the episcopate, issued in the last few days. I intend to familiarize myself with this letter in more detail. As always, we familiarize ourselves with all the more important statements of the church, always leaning in a direction so state-church relations arrange themselves constructively. This is, after all, the priority interest of our nation and state. I will not characterize these relations. I had occasion to do this once more in the Central Committee report. That presentation is official. It is obligatory and it is lasting. As to so-called political prisoners. I have also had occasion, more than once, to state my views on this subject. These are people punished with imprisonment for transgressing against the laws in force in the state. Such punishments are aimed at persons who do not observe the law in civilized countries, including the one you represent, but I believe that in these matters, if you'll forgive the expression, there is more hypocrisy. We have heard here, and we well know, that in the United States priests have been arrested and tried, and I could adduce many other examples from other Western countries. There is also the connection between political activity and violation of the laws in force in the country in question. In these matters things should be placed in their proper categories, and things which do not deserve it should not be elevated to a higher category. We do not wish to have political prisoners, above all non-political prisoners. We do not need them. They are a burden to us. If we have them, it is because they effectively wish it upon themselves through their own actions. In Poland there is ample scope for broad, energetic, multifacted activity in which patriotic civic aspirations may be indulged, but on the basis of the existing law, on the basis of the Constitution.

As for the Agricultural Fund, that is a long subject, for it has a long history, and if I were to begin expounding upon it I expect I would bore you. But the topic is still open. It is being discussed. There are some contentious points. But they do not touch upon the central idea, the central principle, as this has been emphatically endorsed by us in the adoption of the law on funds, the inception of conversations, the drafting of the draft law on that fund, some elements of this law are under discussion. If certain contradictory views on this material could be removed I believe it would be possible to speak successfully of the introduction of this fund. One of these disagreements is the standpoint of the authorities, which rests on our regarding it as being indispensible for its influence concerning what resources will be directed to which programs of agricultural development, which should be specified through cooperation with the government, that is, with the ministry of agriculture.

After all, we have a very wide and extensive program, stretched out over years, of investing in agriculture, various types of solutions in this economic field. We cannot treat this as competely isolated and not subject to certain general rigors, this quota which would be a church subsidy resulting from the church fund. It has to be applied in a logical, organic way, (?with) the approbation of the state and government bodies, which are in charge of all aspects of this matter. This is one of the basic points in which this disagreement exists: Let it be overcome as quickly as possible.

[Iji Oskala [word indistinct], in Polish] Comrade first secrtary, I apologize, I do not precisely know the Polish tongue. I am here for only the 6th day. I already have one question. Yesterday, there resounded from the platform of the 10th PZPR Congress a voice of peace to the whole world. The comprehensive system of international security cannot be solved in a short time. What concrete steps should be taken?

[Jaruzelski] The question is very fundamental and I do not feel fully able to reply here in a way that could have a more universal significance. This is, after all, a problem which touches on all states, relates to the great powers in the first rank, relates to the whole world. I feel that especially those proposal recently made by the Soviet Union, by the socialist countries, are precisely such a road, such an offer, which assumes gradual steps and assumes the elimination of the most threatening aspects of the current situation. To them there belongs, on the one hand, the elimination or limitation, the slowing-down of nuclear armaments, the most threatening type of armaments. These proposals manifest themselves in various formulas in the years of experience with nuclear arms, and are devoted to a long-term, strategic task: their gradual and planned liquidation and to counter the very dangerous, new factor in the arms race -- its transfer to space.

I have already mentioned we are working for something very important for Poland and Europe, the proposal to reduce conventional armaments. Every one of these moves, independently from its material-military eloquence, would have a great psychological, political, moral eloquence. The point is this first step, and I understand in this way your question -- that something must happen. Unfortunately, nothing is happening at the moment. These proposals are hanging in a vacuum. The negotiations at different levels -- Vienna, Geneva, Stockholm -- are not pushing the matter forward. We, for instance, are very actively interested in the Stockholm negotiations. They, after all, are to form the fundamental bases of trust. Our readiness to subject ourselves to arms inspection and disarmament is a very important step forward.

World opinion -- and after all, you people here represent that opinion to a broad degree -- should approach these initiatives with greater understanding. They result from the deepest conviction about their usefulness for the peace of Europe and the world, and they are often bold and honest. I stress: They are honest. I know [passage indistinct] these negotiations through their honesty, the creation of equal chances for everyone, the assurance of equal security, underline the cleanliness, the authenticity of the intentions which illuminate them.

[Marek Hausil, EKSPRES WIECZORNY, in Polish] During the precongress discussion and during the work of the congress, some debaters referred to the necessity of continuing the line of the Ninth Congress. This was also confirmed in the Central Committee report. What, comrade general, is this continuation to be and by what should it be characterized? A second question: In the statement which Comrade Gorbachev gave to the EKSPRES during his visit to the Swierczewski plant he spoke about inviting the comrade general to the Soviet Union. Are dates of this visit known?

[Jaruzelski] The continuation of the Ninth Congress: The whole congress was saturated, in its essence, with the spirit of the Ninth Congress. All these themes which tend toward the line of socialist renewal were after all, born at the Ninth Congress, born at the time, and, as I have already mentioned, only implemented in new conditions, in relation to new needs. And we are, and we will be, loyal to this line. Detailing all its components would take a little too much time. As to this invitation to the Soviet Union, I accepted it with great satisfaction. The dates will be set. At this moment we have not yet set these dates.

MIODOWICZ DENIES CONFLICTS BETWEEN 3 POSTS

LD052125 Warsaw Domestic Service in Polish 1700 GMT 5 Jul 86

[Interview with Alfred Miodowicz, PZPR Politburo member and OPZZ chairman by an unidentified reporter; date and place not specified -- recorded]

[Text] [Reporter] Let us listen to an interview with Alfred Miodowicz, a Politburo member and at the same time, let us recall, a member of the Council of State...

[Miodowicx, interrupting] Well, this is usually widely remembered, as it always arouses some controversy.

[Reporter] He is at the same time the chairman of the OPZZ. That means he holds three very important posts, has three very important tasks.

[Miodowicz] I am simply the OPZZ chairman and my duty is always to represent the interests of the working people in general, and particularly, interests of trade unionists, such is my role in the Politburo above all. This is my task. Apart from this, the situation is different from the previous ones, for it is not the Politburo that has selected its member to become the head of trade unions, but the person who was elected in democratic, very democratic and direct elections in Bytom, and has after some time become a member of the Politburo. Understanding the subtlety and consequences of this different situation clarifies many things.

[Reporter] Now being a Politburo member, comrade, you will have fewer possibilities of direct contact with party comrades from your parent organization in the Lenin steelworks.

[Miodowicz] It is not so. (?It is hard to) fortell, but now my view is that for the safety of every public activist, and particularly, a union activist, one ought to stick firmly to the base so that one does not keel over. Well, if I am constantly in touch and see what goes on in our steelworks, then even when it comes to a return it will not be any suprise to me and I am not going to rend my garments and despair, so to speak. I have always thought that one's roots are important.

MOJSOV PREVIEWS HARARE NONALIGNED SUMMIT

LD051307 Belgrade TANJUG Domestic Service in Serbo-Croatian 1607 GMT 5 Jul 86

[Excerpts] Belgrade, 5 Jul (TANJUG) -- Lazar Mojsov, vice president of the SFRY Presidency, has expressed his belief that from its summit in Harare this September the Nonaligned Movement will bring out clear proposals for resolving key international problems. In an interview with Radio Sarajevo, Mojsov said: "There is no doubt that the Nonaligned Movement, which has to date now always put forward the right answers, will present at its eighth summit in Harare in Spetember the international community with a precise platform for resolving key international problems from the standpoint of the general good, and with clear recommendations on ways for overcomimg crises and creating a democratic community of equal nations and countries as the essential condition for lasting peace and the progress of mankind."

Speaking in connection with the 30th anniversary of the Brioni meeting of Tito, Nehru and Al-Nasir, which paved the way for nonaligned countries in Belgrade, Mojsov said that these events are much more than just a jubilee, because they mark the emergence of a new epoch in international relations. The first summit meeting, according to Jojsov, signified the beginning of a reorientation in the development of international relations contrary to that of "great power politics and bloc divisions of the world."

Mojsov recalled that for Yugoslavia and for President Tito the orientations toward independence and autonomy, an equitable position in international relations, were laid down as essential principles even during the National Liberation War and were built into the foundations of the policies of the new Yugoslavia and its relationship with other countries.

Lazar Mojsov stressed that Tito's vision and efforts received full affirmation at the first summit of the nonaligned in Belgrade in 1961, at which the concept of the policy of nonalignment was founded. "The quarter century of the movement's existence is a period of its constant growth and maturing, the expansion of its influence and the acceptability of the nonaligned principles and platforms as the way to preserve world peace and resolve international problems," he said.

Mojsov recalled that, in addition to the political questions, the countries of the movement have also eagerly broached the question of restructuring and adapting the existing unequitable international economic order and have advocated fundamental changes in all areas, from the right to self-determination, independence and equality to equitable participation in international economic exchange and the information system.

The vice president of the SFRY Presidency stressed that the Nonaligned Movment has preserved its independence and freedom of action despite constant efforts to divide the nonaligned countries and place them under the wing of one or other of the military blocs. This, according to Mojsov, has been achieved thanks to the strength of the principles and aims of the nonaligned policy, which involves its members and aligns them in a united authentic front in the struggle for peace, equality and freedom.

Later Mojsov stated that the movement is still faced with the same pressures today, but he expressed his firm belief that the nonaligned will resist such attempts, as they have to date, and submit at their eighth summit in Harare forceful and precise guidelines for resolving key international problems with the aim of "creating a democratic community of equitable nations and countries as the essential condition for lasting peace and the progress of mankind."

Harare Platform Discussed

AU031702 Belgrade Domestic Service in Serbo-Croatian 1300 GMT 3 Jul 86

[Text] The Federal Social Council for International Relations met under the chairmanship of Mirko Ostojic. It discussed the draft platform for the activities of our delegation at the eighth Nonaligned Summit in Harare. Dragan Colovic reports:

In an extremely fruitful discussion, it was confirmed that the world has changed considerably in the last decade, that the concentration of military, political, economic-financial, and technological power in only a few countries has reached such proportions that concrete and urgent answers and action by the nonaligned and developing countries are needed. Answers and action are needed not only by them but also by others, primarily the small and medium-developed neutral countries and even those that belong to the blocs, which because of the concentration of power primarily in the leading bloc countries have lost much of their independence, and see their prospects in the policy of nonalignment as the most comprehensive force for peace.

Several proposals and suggestions were made at the Council session on how to respond to these great challenges of our time, avoiding an aggravation of the international situation. It was said that the nonaligned countries and our country, too, should make an extremely constructive, responsible, realistic, bold, and efficient approach for the purpose of strengthening the role of the movement as a global factor. In this context, the necessity of developing quite specific forms of economic-financial and scientific-technical cooperation of the nonaligned and developing countries, and a greater reliance on their own forces were especially stressed.

What is new is that because of increased military and other pressures and armed interventions the cooperation is now expanding to the military field. However, bearing in mind the sensitivity of this question -- the nonaligned countries could be reproached that they are embarking on creating a third military bloc -- those taking part in the discussion have supported the view that at the present stage, one should concentrate on cooperation in questions of defense doctrine.

Several critical observations were also made about the content of the platform; especially a certain idealization of the situation in the Nonaligned Movement. Criticism was also expressed about the institutionalization of the movement. It was therefore said that the platform for the activities of the Yugoslav delegation at the eighth Summit in Harare should be improved and harmonized with the demands of the moment. Action by the nonaligned countries is necessary, but it must be realistic, for this is the only way they can contribute to the strengthening of the action ability of the movement. The movement needs this ability now more than ever.

SUNDIC VIEWS PRAVDA ARTICLE ON TIES WITH PRC

LD031620 Zagreb Domestic Service in Serbo-Croatian 1300 GMT 3 Jul 86

[Milika Sundic commentary]

[Text] Marking the 65th anniversary of the founding of the CPC, Moscow has, through a prominent article in PRAVDA, called upon China to join the Soviet Union in efforts to promote the traditionally good relations between the peoples of the two countries because, in the paper's view, all the necessary conditions for removing the existing differences in Soviet-Chinese relations exist. PRAVDA does not deny the differences in the two countries' approaches to a whole series of international issues but goes on to add that this fact should not reduce the possibility of working together on the basis of equality and adherence to principles without detriment to third countries.

This is not the first time that Moscow has invited Beijing to cooperate on the basis of equality but, in contrast to the previous attitude to relations with China, the PRAVDA article contained an important new feature: It does not maintain that the improvement in and promotion of bilateral relations depend solely on China.

On this occasion as well, however, PRAVDA dissociates itself from China's preconditions for normalizing its political relations with the Soviet Union maintaining that cooperation between the two countries should not develop to the detriment of other countries, hinting here at Afghanistan and Vietnam, obviously.

It must be said that China is ready to develop and promote its relations with the Soviet Union, but under the condition that Moscow removes three existing obstacles: that it withdraws its troops from Afghanistan, abandons its support for Vietnam's intervention in Cambodia, and reduces its troops on the Chinese border. The Chinese side refuses to accept the Soviet explanation to the effect that to comply with its demand would be detrimental to third countries because, in China's view, each of the three demands concerns China's security.

Recently there have been rumors about the possibility of a meeting between Hu Yaobang and Gorbachev in due course. There are also hints that the two countries' foreign ministers may exchange visits and that the two parties may even resume relations. As things stand at the moment, however, China is not willing to take any major steps because, in its view, this could be interpreted as acquiescence to both Soviet support for Vietnam's interventiuon in Cambodia and the presence of Soviet troops in Afghanistan.

It must be said that China does not deny that there has been an improvement in relations between the two countries recently, particularly in the economic sphere. It does not hide its interest in seeing relations develop further but only under the condition that the Soviet Union removes the obstacles to which Beijing has been drawing attention for years.

It cannot be denied that China's demands are justified because all of them are too important to be disregarded easily. But even if the Soviet Union itself would like to see the three obstacles removed, there are no prospects whatsoever of the Soviet Union withdrawing its troops from Afghanistan or ending its support for Vietnam's intervention in Cambodia at the present time.

As for the reduction in Soviet troops on the Chinese border, this issue could be resolved to mutual advantage. In the case of the first two issues, the Soviet Union refuses to admit that it is wrong while China, for its part, cannot, nor does it what to, ignore them because that would be in contradiction with its idea of the principle of equality and noninterference in the internal affairs of others.

Nevertheless, despite all the differences in relations between the two countries, it cannot be denied that both sides are making efforts to improve them, and this is not of little importance.

SUNDIC SEES MITTERRAND AS U.S.-USSR MEDIATOR

LD041536 Zagreb Domestic Service in Serbo-Croatian 1300 GMT 4 Jul 86

[Milika Sundic commentary]

[Text] Today's meeting between Francois Mitterrand and Ronald Reagan in New York as well as the forthcoming visit of the French head of state to Moscow, where he will hold talks with Mikhail Gorbachev, offer a chance to the French president to play a significant role through an immediate dialogue with the leaders of the two superpowers in seeking a way out of a crisis which has for a long time burdened relations between the Soviet Union and the United States. Though perhaps the role of a mediator does not suit him because of France's specific position in Europe, the world and [words indistinct] Mitterrand will undoubtedly be able to lead a dialogue with both Reagan and Gorbachev better than many statesmen, [words indistinct] as much for future relations between the two superpowers and the two blocs, as for the [words indistinct] meeting between Reagan and Gorbachev. Mitterrand's efforts to bring closer [word indistinct] of Moscow and Washington will be so much easier since the two superpowers themselves have already undertaken certain steps toward the negotiating table.

The United States has accepted the Soviet initiative to start preparations for a meeting between Foreign Ministers Shultz and Shevardnadze, and, judging by a statement by President Reagan, this can be considered a reliable indication that he will meet Gorbachev by the end of the year, or at the latest at the beginning of the next year. The course and the outcome of the talks which Mitterrand will hold with Gorbachev from 7 to 10 July in Moscow to a great extent depend on what President Reagan says to Mitterrand (?before) the meeting with Gorbachev and on the development of relations between the two superpowers.

If President Reagan -- and the U.S.-Soviet summit largely depends on this -- speaks in positive terms about any of the Soviet proposals sent to the United States, or if, on the other hand, he shows his readiness not to part with the Soviet leader without any agreement, this would be enough for Moscow to mitigate, at least to some extent, the lack of trust in Reagan and his intentions. However, no matter how skillful Mitterrand may be, his mediation will be in vain if his talks with Reagan and Gorbachev end only in (?promises). After all, the two superpowers are not used to somebody else, on their behalf, looking after their mutual behavior, except in cases when they themselves, as for example at the present time, have no better solution to coordinate their attitude toward each other, which are very often irreconcilable. But, considering France's specific position in the Western military treaty and its relatively close relations with Moscow, Mitterrand is equally acceptable to both Reagan and Gorbachev, not only as a mediator, but also as a statesman who in (?the present situation) is most suitable to speak on behalf of West Europe, whose voice has recently been increasingly taken into account [word indistinct] in Washington.

Actually, Europe is beginning to realize its delicate position between the two superpowers, and in particular a danger to which it would be exposed if the Soviet-U.S. confrontation [word indistinct]. Of course, West Europe because of its own contradictions is still far from being satisfied with its position, since its alliance duties, and primarily its duties toward the United States, very often place it in [word indistinct]. Coming to terms with such a situation could be dangerous (?for) East-West relations. Mitterrand is aware of this fact and that is why he has taken on the role of a mediator between Moscow and Washington.

AUSTRIAN FOREIGN MINISTER PAYS VISIT TO BELGRADE

LD011313 Belgrade TANJUG Domestic Service in Serbo-Croatian 1144 GMT 1 Jul 86

[Excerpt] Belgrade, 1 Jul (TANJUG) -- Austrian Foreign Minister Peter Jankowitsch arrived for an official friendly visit to Yugoslavia today. At Beograd Airport in Surcin the guest from the neighboring country was welcomed and greeted by Raif Dizdarevic, federal secretary of Foreign Affairs; Milan Veres, assistant federal secretary; Milos Krstic, SFRY ambassador in Vienna, and others. Paul Leifer, the Austrian ambassador in Belgrade, and the embassy staff, were also there to welcome him.

Talks With Dizdarevic

LD021315 Belgrade TANJUG Domestic Service in Serbo-Croatian 1835 GMT 1 Jul 86

[Text] Belgrade, 1 Jul (TANJUG) -- Raif Dizdarevic, federal secretary for foreign affairs, and Austrian Foreign Minister Peter Jankowitsch this afternoon exchanged views about bilateral cooperation. The talks between the two foreign ministers were held in an open, friendly and cordial atmosphere with the two sides agreeing about all the issues that were discussed. The first round of talks concentrated on political, economic and cultural relations between the two neighboring countries while the talks, scheduled for tomorrow, will focus on some international issues.

During the first part of today's meeting the two sides agreed that bilateral relations are very good and are developing to the satisfaction of both sides. Regular consultations have been considerably contributing to this. The importance was stressed of numerous contacts at various levels which contributed to the strengthening of trust and cooperation between Yugoslavia and Austria.

Particular attention was devoted to the status of our national minorities living in Austria. The Austrian foreign minister spoke about the positive contribution made by the Slovenes and Croatians living in his country to the promotion of bilateral relations between Yugoslavia and Austria. The two sides agreed that the Croatian and Slovene minorities constituted a bridge of cooperation.

During the talks the two sides expressed an interest in seeing Article Seven of the State Treaty on Austria being fully implemented.

It was noted that Article Seven is not the limit but that cooperation should be further developed, beyond its provisions.

It was stressed, in reference to economic cooperation, that a reasonable level has been attained but that all possibilities have not yet been exhausted. The two sides agreed that for some time now economic cooperation has been sluggish, and that a fresh impetus is needed. Yugoslavia is interested to see economic relations developing further and is also keen to resolve the deficit which has for a number of years been a feature of its trade with Austria. It was stressed during the talks that there are broad possibilities for our country to join the Eureka program, which in some way would also stimulate and promote bilateral relations between Yugoslavia and Austria.

The two ministers positively assessed financial cooperation between the two countries and referred to the possibility of realizing the program of joint investments.

The two sides are equally interested in the possibility of Austrian investment in Yugoslavia and in that context discussed the realization of some projects which could make a further contribution to the promotion of overall economic links. In this connection the two ministers exchanged views about some aspects and possibilities of introducing tariff concessions.

Today's talks also covered the issues of cooperation in tourism where sound results have already been achieved. Both sides expressed an interest in the further promotion of scientific and technical cooperation, particularly in relation to the Eureka projects.

Today's talks also covered the problem of environmental protection which will be a subject of special talks to be held soon and which are expected to result in an agreement. Talks will soon begin on a new agreement on cultural cooperation, which has reached a very high level of development. The dialogue also included the issues concerning the position of our workers temporarily working in Austria. It was agreed that further efforts should be invested in order to improve the position of our people living and working in Austria. Reference was also made to the successful cooperation between various departments in the Ministries for Internal Affairs and to cooperation in the sphere of information.

1 Jul Dinner Toasts

LD021341 Belgrade TANJUG Domestic Service in Serbo-Croatian 2151 GMT 1 Jul 86

[Text] Belgrade, 1 Jul (TANJUG) -- Raif Dizdarevic, federal secretary for foreign affairs, hosted a formal dinner in honor of Austrian Foreign Minister Peter Jankowitsch in the Palace of the Federation in New Belgrade this evening. During the dinner, which took place in a very cordial atmosphere, they exchanged toasts.

After expressing satisfaction with the visit of the Austrian foreign minister to Belgrade, the federal secretary for foreign affairs stressed that in Yugoslavia there is great interest and readiness for developing good-neighborly relations with Austria. Continuing his toast, Dizdarevic said: "Today we have established an identity of interests in development and cooperation. We established that the level of cooperation, the level of understanding and friendship, are such that we can speak about our relations only in very positive terms."

Dizdarevic then said that it is necessary to provide new impulses for cooperation and in particular for economic cooperation for which new paths and forms should be sought in order to emerge from the situation of a certain stagnation. According to the federal secretary, the interest of Yugoslavia is not exclusively of an economic nature, rather it includes many other areas of life.

Dizdarevic said that in the talks in Belgrade the two sides established that in some aspects of cooperation between the two neighboring countries the pace is too slow and that it is necessary to overcome this. The two sides stressed the significance of minorities -- Slovene and Croatian -- for the entirety of Yugoslav-Austrian relations. In this connection the federal secretary stressed readiness to realize Article Seven of the state contract of Austria. Nonaligned Yugoslavia and neutral Austria are linked by many common things in the world in the which they live, the federal secretary pointed out and concluded that further efforts will be needed to improve general circumstances in international life, and in particular in Europe on realizing the system of security and cooperation, as well as cooperation within the UN framework.

In conclusion of his toast Raif Dizdarevic expressed his conviction that Austria as the future host will make a great contribution to the success of the forthcoming CSCE meeting in Vienna.

After thanking his host for a cordial reception and his warm words, Austrian Foreign Minister Peter Jankowitsch said that as soon as he arrived in Yugoslavia he had the impression of being among friends. He stressed that his visit to Yugoslavia is no coincidence. Austria wishes to strengthen its relations with its neighbors, and in view of this I am paying this visit to Yugoslavia, Peter Jankowitsch stressed, adding:

"Yugoslavia and Austria have succeeded in eliminating all those barriers and obstacles from the historical heritage and in embarking on the path of cooperation. We succeeded in achieving such good relations and such a degree of trust as never before. And this is not everything that is opening up before democratic Austria and nonaligned Yugoslavia. That is why we were able to have such talks today."

Minister Jankowitsch then noted that in today's talks in Belgrade the promotion of economic, cultural and other types of cooperation was also mentioned. In his view this confirms that the two countries are also able to discuss the problem of national minorities, which should really present a bridge of cooperation between the neighbors. The Austrian minister further substantiated this by mentioning the need for national minorities everywhere in the world to become a bridge of cooperation between neighbors.

Continuing his toast, the Austrian minister said that present-day Europe presents countries such as Austria and Yugoslavia with difficult tasks. Peace and detente are presently not threatened maybe, but constant efforts should be made to improve peace and detente, Peter Jankowitsch said, concluding that Yugoslavia and Austria share views on the forthcoming CSCE meeting in Vienna, which should offer a new contribution to improving circumstances in Europe.

Received by Mikulic

[Text] Belgrade, 2 Jul (TANJUG) -- Branko Mikulic, president of the Federal Executive Council, received in Belgrade today Austrian Foreign Minister Peter Jankowitsch. They discussed bilateral relations between Yugoslavia and Austria and also the possibility of expanding further economic and scientific and technical cooperation, especially in connection with the Eureka project. Reference was also made to joint appearance on third markets. The two sides noted that national minorities must be a bridge of good-neighborly relations and friendship. Raif Dizdarevic, federal secretary of foreign affairs, also took part in the talks.

TANJUG CITES COMMENTARY ON SFRY-ALBANIAN TIES

LD031411 Belgrade TANJUG in English 1255 GMT 3 Jul 86

[Text] Belgrade, July 3 (TANJUG) -- Yugoslavia's readiness to make every effort and normalize relations with Albania was again expressed at the recent 13th LCY Congress, but the effort still seems to be futile, Radio Yugoslavia assesses in a commentary today. Albania continues to apply a double standard in its policy towards Yugoslavia by officially expressing the wish to promote bilateral relations, while continuing to support Albania separatists in the Yugoslav Province of Kosovo, the commentary says.

Yugoslavia's wish to cooperate with Albania on the internationally recognized principle is interpreted by Tirana as the setting of conditions for cooperation in the fields of water resources management, cultural exchanges and the opening of the Titograd-Shkoder railway line.

Tirana, of course, does not mention that an Albanian delegation simply walked out of the water resources management talks after its attention was called to the fact that the level of Albania's Fierza Dam was raised by over ten meters, despite the technical standards set in the existing agreement. This created a danger of flood for farmland in Yugoslavia, although a part of Yugoslav territory had already been flooded when the dam was under construction and no compensation was paid. The Albanian delegation, the Radio Yugoslavia commentary says, also walked out of talks on cultural cooperation only because a request was made that the Yugoslav minorities in Albania be granted the right, such as the Albanian nationality in Yugoslavia already enjoys, to participate in interstate cultural exchanges. Instead, Tirana continues to instigate intolerance between the Albanian nationality and Yugoslav nations.

Albania's claim that the Yugoslav authorities have been postponing the opening of the Titograd-Shkoder railway line for political reasons is completely arbitrary, the commentary says. The reason lies simply in the fact that the section is not yet fully equipped for integration into the European railway ststem.

The line, which has no major economic significance for Yugoslavia, will be opened soon anyway, and passengers on the first train to the Yugoslav-Albanian border will include foreign correspondents specializing in the two countries' relations. It remains to be seen whether they will be allowed to cross over to Shkoder, noted Radio Yugoslavia in its commentary.

CANAK COMMENTARY DISCUSSES 10TH PZPR CONGRESS

AU042012 Belgrade Domestic Service in Serbo-Croatian 1700 GMT 4 July 86

[Branislav Canak commentary]

[Text] The 10th PZPR Congress in Warsaw elected new leadership and established new directives of the course of the country's development. What are the basic characterics of this development? Here is Branislav Canak:

The 10th PZPR congress is the first congress since the unscheduled ninth congress held 5 years ago. What appears to be only a statistical fact hides in fact an important political fact. This congress has ended one phase of the development of Poland which will undoubtedly determine the entire development and goals of Poland for some time. The beginning of that period was characterized by rather unarticulated wishes for changes of all kinds, wishes that basically came from three diretions: from the weakened PZPR, from the then still undeveloped trade union Solidarity, and from the church. We say that some wishes were expressed but they did not have anybody to listen to them. The problem in Poland at that time was not the different interests but the lack of a magic democratic formula that would harmonize them. Extreme forces started to develop in Solidarity, but this lasted only until the war conditions of December 1981, when the trade union was pronounced illegal. This is how the phase in which the party could pay more attention to problem of strengthening its own role in the society, started and which has at this congress resulted in at least an impression that the PZPR is steering the country with full confidence again. [Word indistinct] changes, restorations, and reforms decorated the ninth unscheduled congress, but nothing could of course be implemented because behind all those things were various compromises between various sides.

Today, as we have said, the conditions are different. But other things have changed too. At the beginning of the year the 27th CPSU Congress was held in Moscow, at which many, including even some radical, reforms were announced. The fact that at this highest gathering of the Soviet Communists this was the way of looking toward the future while critically looking at the past, meant that in the entire socialist community certain processes could more or less start quicker.

This is why when Wojciech Jaruzelski demands new, even deeper reforms, this means that he is thinking primarily about those reforms that would pull ideas from, as he said in his speech, the historical achievements of the 27th CPSU Congress.

The consolidation of the party has not been completed yet, and according to Jaruzelski's words bureaucrats and all those who are not interested in anything represent a burden. Poland owes nearly half of the $63 billion which the CEMA countries owe to the world. The deep reorganization and modernization of the economy have not been imposed in order to increase production, but so that debts can be repaid. At the congress this was frequently referred to as the need of the future and a need spurred by the scientific and technological development of the world. This makes the task, as it appears, that much more complex.

Let us say in the end that, judging from the press reports, this scheduled 10th congress in comparison with the unscheduled 9th congress heard the term real socialism before the term self-management, self-management understood to mean the Soviet concept of self-management of people that is why Jaruzelski, alluding presumably to 1980 and 1981, says that the current slogan, the self-managing Poland, is anarchosyndicalist and counterrevolutionary nonsense. This really sounds [word indistinct] because this kind of assessment could hardly be heard even at the Eighth PZPR Congress a few years ago.

FEDERAL EXECUTIVE COUNCIL APPROVES ECONOMIC PLANS

LD032153 Belgrade TANJUG Domestic Service in Serbo-Croatian 1452 GMT 3 Jul 86

[Excerpts] Belgrade, 3 Jul (TANJUG) -- Under the chairmanship of Milos Milosavljevic, the Federal Executive Council held a session at which it approved several regulations within its competence.

The council set in motion an initiative for concluding a social compact on special measures which would ensure the implementation of the policy of more rapidly developing the Socialist Autonomous Province of Kosovo from 1986 to 1990. The compact is to be signed by Yugoslav Assembly, the assemblies of the republics and autonomous provinces, the Yugoslav Chamber of the Economy, and the Association of Yugoslav Banks.

In the draft compact it is envisaged, among other things, that the SFRY Assembly make conditions more favorable for the repayment of credits which organizations of associated labor in Kosovo have used from the federal fund for crediting the more rapid economic development of less developed republics and autonomous provinces, and which fall due in the period from 1987 to 1990. The Yugoslav Chamber of the Economy and the Association of Yugoslav Banks, for their part, would propose to the business and other banks measures for securing a certain amount of permanent working assets under the same conditions according to which credits are given for priority purposes. For certain projects the SFRY Assembly would examine the possibility of making credits available for meeting a part of the dinar obligations arising from foreign loans under more favorable conditions. Likewise, priorities are proposed for utilizing credits for importing equipment and spare parts which are not manufactured in Yugoslavia, as well as customs and other concessions for these imports.

The Federal Executive Council also approved three reports on the implementation of particular laws relating to the utilization of social funds.

In the report on the implementation of the law on the financial reorganization and liquidation of organizations of associated labor it is stated, among other things, that last year the number of basic organizations in the economy that were registering losses grew by 9.7 percent and numbered 2,369. Losses were contributed to by the high growth in the cost of business operations under conditions of pronounced inflation; the shortage of reproduction materials; the high level of indebtedness, interest rates, and exchange rate differences; the increase in allocations from income for general and joint consumption; low labor productivity; the inadequate utilization of capacities; and poor internal organization. Bankruptcy proceedings have been initiated in 108 cases and as a result, 2,165 workers are no longer employed. In this area too, the necessary measures will be taken following debate in the assembly.

The council approved the draft law on securing federations funds in order to increase the role of the SFRY in the capital of the International Finance Corporation.

By a change in the decision on the level of the rate of interest in arrears, the Federal Executive Council reduced this interest from 86 to 66 percent.

NEW MEMBERS ELECTED TO SAWPY PRESIDIUM

AU251948 Belgrade BORBA in Serbo-Croatian 20 Jun 86 p 3

[Excerpts] Belgrade, 19 Jun -- Between the last session of the Presidium of the Federal Conference, of the SAWPY, and this one, electoral conferences at which the new members of the Presidium of the Federal Conference of the SAWPY were elected have been held in Montenegro, Bosnia and Hercegovina, Kosovo, and Slovenia. The new members of the Presidium of the Federal conference from Bosnia and Hercegovina are Mirko Ostojic, Veki Smailovic, and Kazimir Jelsic. From Montenegro the new member is Ramiz Bambur, and from the Provincial Conference of the Kosovo SAWP they are Dr Bozidar Colakovic and Bajram Selimi. Joze Smole was elected from Slovenia. Mirjana Todorovic represents the Confederation of Trade Unions of Yugoslavia, while Rudi Kolak and Uros Bajic were elected from the Federation of Veterans' Association of Yugoslavia.

The Presidium of the Federal Conference of the SAWPY also discussed some cadre questions. Stojan Dimovski, secretary of the Federal Conference of the SAWPY, was elected president of the Cadre Council Commission, the post that has been held up to now by Milan Uzelac.

STUDENT EDITOR DISMISSED FOR 'UNACCEPTABLE' IDEAS

AU011711 Paris AFP in English 1703 GMT 1 Jul 86

[Text] Belgrade, July 1 (AFP) -- The editor of a student newspaper in Kragujevac in the Federal Republic of Serbia has been dismissed along with five of his colleagues for defending ideas considered 'unacceptable' by the authorities, the daily VETERNJE NOVOSTI reported here Tuesday. The newspaper, POGLEDI (VIEWPOINT), published by the University of Kragujevac, ran an interview with a well-known political oppositionist, Vladimir Mijanovic. Mr. Mijanovic led the 1968 student movement and in 1984 was the main defendant in a trial of six intellectuals accused of anti-state activities. But the charge against him was dismissed.

The newspaper, which had a circulation of about 2,000, was ordered pulped by the public prosecutor and a new edition was printed. But the editorial staff revealed the censorship by leaving one page blank opposite a picture of Mr Mijanovic, with the inscription: "leave a space."

COMMISSION FOR EDUCATION, SCIENCE, CULTURE MEETS

LD280416 Belgrade TANJUG Domestic Service in Serbo-Croatian 0845 GMT 27 Jun 86

[Excerpts] Belgrade, 27 Jun (TANJUG) -- Those employed in education, science, and in cultural areas are no less responsible than others for the economic crisis, the biggest sin which we carry in our arms at this congress, Nenad Ristic pointed out in the Commission for Education, Science, and Culture, which resumed its work today. According to him this problem has not been sufficiently dealt with. We cannot be proud of the fact that we are among the last in Europe according to funds allocated to these activities, but how can we persuade society that there is no money for science when it is obvious that scientists make numerous journeys to symposiums from Ohrid to Opatija. Also, Ristic said, we have witnessed the opening of quite a few new culture clubs which are closed soon after. All these are our little cultural obrovac [a well-known case of failed investment] cases.

Speaking about the satellite television, which is on our threshold, Ristic said that we were much more ready to accept its technological rather than program and cultural challenge. If we intend to accept the race with Europe in the area of video media, the LCY must be the initiator in linking the Yugoslav public in this area, in order to avoid having each radio and television center ask for its own, not all cheap, satellite.

The situation in health service varies from area to area, so that in some branches of medicine we have achieved a very high level of development, while in others, as in the mortality rate of babies, we are at the bottom of the European ladder, Dobraslav Ivkovic said. This is also the consequence of subjective shortcomings and not only of the lack of money.

Despite objective difficulties, subjective shortcomings and unemployment, in the area of upbringing and education of Romanies, certain results have recently been achieved. Two years ago the first efforts were made for Romany children in Pristina, Gnjilane, Titova Mitrovica, Urosevac, Prizren, Vuciturn, and Pec to study in thir mother tongue in primary schools, Ali Kransnic said and illustrated this with numerous examples.

He cited that 4,350 members of the Romany nationality attended primary schools, 408 secondary schools, while over 100 Romanies are presently being educated and acquiring education in high schools and universities.

Saying that if we want a congress of change we should listen to young people, Jeranko Benedikt stressed that we needed leaders of a different type of know-how than yesterday and today and that it was necessary to break with the voluntaristic, rotational cadre policy in which know-how and expertise are not of crucial importance. We shall also have to, Benedikt stresses, learn to listen to those who think differently if we do not want to lose those who have always been the striking force of change, and they are young people.

Fuad Muhic dealt with the Marxist theory and anti-Marxist ideologies which in the time of crisis, according to him, have become widespread. Using the term "associated opposition" he stressed that its members were not so naive as to openly oppose the League of Communists. From time to time they would flatter individuals, granting them the epithet of "more liberal". This is where the lack of confidence among us comes from, Muhic belives, this is the cause of confused membership divided into the so-called European and Balkan parts.

This is why some do not see the existence of opposition, while others see it everywhere.

Jasmina Muratagic spoke about young people and an education which does not facilitate their employment, development, or life. She quoted the words of Comrade Tito that work should be done properly since young people are watching and listening.

Enver Baki spoke about the position of the Turkish minority in Kosovo, saying that there were problems in realizing constitutional rights, particularly regarding language and the alphabet, while the same cannot be said about information. Members of the Turkish nationality in Kosovo are concerned about the lack of Turkish language textbooks and teachers and some communists are not paying enough attention to this.

This congress should deal with more serious issues than the right-wing members of the Serbian Writers' Society, Oskar Davico said, thereby explaining his contribution to the discussion on the economic situation which then followed. According to him, the Writers' Society presently does not have more significance than would a society for the protection of dogs of (?Alsatian) breed.

In the continuation of the discussion he "returned to the issues of culture" and condemned protectors of academics of nationalistic tendencies.

Despite everything, Davico concluded, if this country did not exist it would be made from mud. It will exist as long as it has its young and old sons who defend it and respect the oath made to Tito that there will be no departure from his way.

Davico invited the congress to adopt a decision about punishing all officials who would disagree with decisions made, particularly those who are against the Chamber of Associated Labor, if we come out in favor of it in a plebiscite.

Through the prism of culture and civilization, Mirkovic said, many areas of life can be viewed, from behavior in public transport to international relations. Is it not, he said, that overindebtedness, getting rich, the lack of social solidarity or what is happening in Kosovo, present a severe infringement of the basic civilized and cultural norms? Here one can also include dogmatism and the lack of readiness for a dialogue which is clearly manifested in incorrect explanations of an essentially positive slogan "answering a book with a book".

Listening to the voice of the public is also an element of culture, Ljubisa Samardzic said. Therefore, we should pay tribute to all those who had open lists at elections, but election activity should have been part of all the party meetings so far. The Central Committee should have fought for such political culture.

Mihajlo Apostolski spoke about the history of writing the history of Yugoslavia, which has not been completed as of yet. Bureaucratic relations have brought historical science into a difficult position. Without general culture, the Yugoslav working class and socialist self-management cannot develop either.

Ideological-political training and Marxist education of young people, according to Sotir Kostov, is of considerable importance, but to young people Marxism in schools and at universities is presented in too idyllic terms.

Society is presented as already transformed, with great potential opportunities and more or less resolved problems.

In schools and at universities young people are presented with one-sided information, Kostov added, which incorrectly prepares them for life. This is the manifestation of conformism and of bureaucratic spirit. Marxism as it is presently taught presents a burden to a great number of pupils and students and it has very few points of contact with the practice of the socialist self-managing society of our country. Delegate Saliju Saib also spoke about this topic.

Veselinka Malinska spoke enthusiastically and in an inspired way about the culture of political life. "As regards the culture of political life and policy as a method of resolving social problems, priority should be given, above all, to wisdom: to that great and irreplaceable human capacity which unites knowledge and experience and possesses a sense of moderation, time, and space, links up history and the present, and can determine best of all how to tackle the future. It can be a characteristic of both the young and the old."

This wisdom exists among all people and in every country. It needs to be discovered and stimulated. Thus, I would add to the slogan "This country needs young people", "This country also needs wisdom".

"With both of these slogans, Yugoslavia, in its history, has had good experiences -- with young people in 1941 and with Tito in many of our victorious years."

The selection of cadres for work in scientific research institutes, according to the view of Azis Nijaz, is one of the most important factors of research work. Talented and capable young men should be discovered and guided at the earliest opportunity. This must be the aim of long-term cadre policy and then results are bound to follow.

Turning to the situation in the field of high school education, Marija Bakalovska noted that it is essential to construct a term policy in solving the problems of the student living standard because these problems have deeper economic and political effects on society. In Bakalovska's words, the living standard is always being equated with accommodation in halls of residences, refectory facilities, credits and grants, while the ideological side is neglected.

It has already become a practice that those who deal with historiography also deal with excesses, underlined Rene Lovrencic. The history of Yugoslavia's nations and nationalities has not yet been written. It is being taught in an old-fashioned way, which effects the way of understanding and a critical approach to us as society, but not to others. Apart from that, Lovrencic said, it is sad that we have nothing to offer to foreign countries in this respect, despite the interests that some have showed.

In the intercongressional period everything to do with national romanticism was removed from primary and secondary schools' text-books. Efforts were made to coordinate educational programs with the needs of associated labor, claimed Drita Mehmeti. In her words, associated labor does not always plan according to its needs, which she assessed as irresponsible. She drew attention to the need that the Yugoslav Socialist Youth Federation and the LC in particular should tear the mask from teachers imbued with nationalism.

Kisic also proposed a congress of cultural creators of Yugoslavia which would, in the spirit of Tito's vision of brotherhood and unity and the AVNOJ [Anti-Fascist Council of the National Liberation of Yugoslavia] principles, contribute to efforts to produce a comprehensive program for becoming acquainted with culture and maintaining cultural contacts in Yugoslavia. This would be, concluded Kisic, a contribution to the implementation of the stands of the 13th and the most beautiful greeting to the 14th LCY Congress.

Before a break after this morning's discussion 100 delegates took the floor and another 16 are expected to take part in this afternoon's work.

The IC has frequently lost initiative and been a mere observer of cultural events, said Branko Prnjat, first speaker in this afternoon's discussion of this commission. Prnjat recalled poor assessments of the influence of mass culture on young people, and the domination of and production of contents of the lowest possible level and taste. The LC reacts here in a sluggish fashion, because the relationship between art and creativity has not yet been established.

After the counterrevolutionary events in Kosovo, nationalism and irredentism in Macedonia were most prominent in Tetovo. The situation is much better today, stressed Sadiku-Dzemazije, though there are still instances of opportunism, above all in schools among teachers. She drew attention to the problem of the emancipation of the women of Albanian and Turkish nationalities, who, despite the fact that they are sharing the lot of insufficient sociopolitical involvement of Yugoslav women, are still under a strong influence of tradition.

Recalling that we have too long been satisfied with institutional forms, Marko Spadujer said that this congress should issue a call to action for overcoming a crisis with all the intellectuals ready to fight for the idea of self-managing socialism. Also welcome are those with good will, humanists, and all the rest except the ones who are up to their neck in nationalism and anti-communism, Spadijer said.

In contrast to other speakers, Novica Samardzic said that presuppositions on cultural isolationism and the breaking up of the Yugoslav cultural sphere were over-emphasized and that this was done by bureaucracy which strives to put everything under control and prescribe creativity, because it is intellectually not up to anything which is slightly more complicated.

Samardzic proved this by a claim that books published by any editor could be found in any part of the country, ascribing a possible narrow selection to the lack of interest on the part of bookshop managers. Stories about cultural isolationism are for Samardzic anachronistic also because a struggle is being waged in the world against cultural imperialism and for the preservation of authentic national creativity.

Delegate Josip Kosuta pleaded for cultural cooperation in Yugoslav territory, proposing that at least twice annually cultural problems should be reviewed at sessions of municipal LCY committees and by the LC as a whole.

Dragisa Ivanovic pointed out that it is impermissible for young people to be separated from and set in opposition to other generations, and that he disapproves of this, f their interests, tasks and efforts are common ones.

Opposition of young people to older generations is not a good thing, for older people are the root of every revolutionary movement, as long, of course, as they are on the right path, along the lines of the LCY and on Tito's course.

The state of affairs in musical culture is alarming, although one cannot think of a more civilized, and even more a self-managing country, without an appropriate musical culture. In musical schooling we are among the lowest-ranking in Europe, Vinko Sale asserted, illustrating this by numerous examples: Just in Serbia proper for instance, instead of the European norm of 120 music schools, there are only 38, and there is a shortage of at least 800 music teachers. This is all because of the fatal delusion on the part of the LC and society that musical culture has no influence upon the formation of young people.

Also taking part in the discussion were Husein Bakalovic, Vita Burnac, Draga Trubic, and Sanda Jancic.

(?Summing up) the 3 days of lively, but at time polemical, debate, commission chairman Stipe Suvar stressed that 111 delegates and (?guests) took part in the debate, and 6 submitted their discussions in written form.

This evening the commission members will adopt a report on their 3 days of work, which Silvija Zubic Rjacvec will submit to the congress tomorrow at the plenary session.

Delegates in the Commission for Education, Science, and Culture of the 13th LCY Congress adopted at about 2100 hours local time [1900 GMT] this evening the report which will be submitted to the congress tomorrow.

The proposed report was considerably improved in a relaxed, comradely, and constructive atmosphere, in the packed hall, after 3 days of work which lasted longer than planned because the number of those who wished to take the floor constantly increased.

Live speech replaced written reports, witticism took the place of rejoinders, and the good-natured approval of even serious criticism of the text bore witness to the unity of views on the problems and also on ways to overcome them.

Resolution on Cultural Tasks

LD281326 Belgrade TANJUG Domestic Service in Serbo-Croatian 1039 GMT 28 Jun 86

[Text] Belgrade, 28 Jun (TANJUG) -- The realization of the development goals of our society is inseparably bound to the development of culture as the content and mode of human life. The development of culture thus conceived, implies that working people, in controlling social reproduction as a whole, also control the circumstances of the ruling of this cultural life and development. This all demands that the League of Communists (LC) continue to stimulate and liberate the creative energy of working people in all areas of social life, it is stressed in the resolution on the tasks of the LCY in the development of culture.

In the transformation and self-managing organization of institutions and basic organizations in culture, it is essential to become more rapidly liberated from monopolistic tendencies and elitist prejudices about the extent to which culture is imperilled if working people and citizens are involved in the conduct of cultural policy.

There should also be liberation from the over-simplified reduction of self-managing linkage and agreement-reaching in the decisionmaking process about the narrowest and most specialized questions in the realization of a program of cultural activity.

In the coming period, organized subjective forces will direct their activity towards improving the material position of culture and its economic stability. The tendency up to now to seek solutions chiefly in an administrative manner by restrictive and short-term measures has not led, it is stated, to the economic stabilization of cultural activities, nor has it contributed to the integration of culture into social labor. The improvement of the material position of culture should be sought, it is stressed in the resolution, in the more organized direct linkage of cultural activities with all parts of associated labor.

The congress document pays appropriate attention to the role of the information media and publishing and to their obligations in the control of trash and in the affirmation of true cultural values. The LC stresses that, in view of the cultural and civilizing importance of the book, it is essential to strengthen activity in improving the social and economic position of libraries and publishing activity.

The autonomy of the socialist republics and provinces in the creation of the social and material conditions for the development of cultural activities has accelerated, it states, the expansion of scientific and art institutions, the organization of education and upbringing and institutions for information and cadres. Starting from the already created values and the importance of their contribution in the formation and development of a national and social consciousness, the development of productive forces and social relations, the LC stresses that it will continue, in the future as well, to base its cultural policy and practice on the equality of the nations and nationalities and their culture.

The free development of the creativity of all the nations and nationalities which live in Yugoslavia and realize their cultural emancipation, enriches our culture and makes it more varied. Togetherness in diversity is a vital term of reference of Yugoslav cultural identity and an important precondition for the development of the culture of all our nations and nationalities. It will be confirmed as our strong point in proportion to the extent to which we control the tendencies and phenomena of the isolation of culture within national and local frameworks and facilitate the linkage and interpenetration of our cultures and develop more fully the mutual exchange of cultural values and all other forms of cooperation. In the processes of building up a national consciousness, it is said in the resolution, a special place is taken up by the interpretation and valuing of cultural heritage, a field in which communists ought to be the champions and exponents of an objective scientific and Marxist valorization of this heritage.

The LCY, in its relation to the liberation of cultural creativity, as a process of the liberation of labor and man, has long since rejected narrow projections, pragmatic decrees and day-to-day political criteria. However, the struggle for a fuller development of cultural creativity has not been accompanied by a suitable critical valorization of what has been achieved, or an intensification of theoretical and critical insights into the essence of creative currents. To allow blind market forces to determine the conditions of operation in the field of culture, and to seek solutions exclusively in terms of administrative measures, would mean limiting the scope for expanding true cultural values and the development of creativity.

The LC, it continues, resolutely opposes the phenomena of antisocialist ideological and political activity under the mask of cultural, scientific and artistic creativity. "The struggle against these phenomena should not be reduced to administrative controls and intervention. In this the LC is not divesting itself of the right and duty to uncover the meaning of the political tendencies and appearances from antisocialist positions of those who try to use cultural creativity as a smokescreen for implanting such ideas and notions."

It is the duty of all LCY leaderships and organs, communist-creators, and all LC members, in their ideological activity in culture and interfering in aesthetic and specific questions of cultural and artistic creativity and not reducing it to the ideopolitical level, to devote greater attention to the development of ideological unity in the approach to creativity and, in particular, to the greater coordination and better linkage between their activities in this domain.

Appropriate attention in the resolution is also paid to the international cultural cooperation of Yugoslavia. It is stressed that our country and the LCY attaches great importance to cultural cooperation between countries and peoples because it contributes to their rapprochement and knowledge of each other. However, in our cooperation with the world, communists must more rapidly overcome weaknesses which have been present for a long time -- passivity, disorganization, submissiveness to alien standards and schemes, and lack of a critical attitude to various forms of indoctrination. These goals require the constant perfection of cadres for international cultural cooperation, it is stressed in the resolution on the tasks of the LCY in the development of culture.

Resolution on Education

LD281641 Belgrade TANJUG Domestic Service in Serbo-Croatian 1006 GMT 28 Jun 86

[Text] Belgrade, 28 Jun (TANJUG) -- The 13th LCY Congress proceeds from the view that education and upbringing are vital factors in the realization of our society's development strategy, its class socialist self-management content, the improvement and liberation of human labor, the values of socialist society, its civilization and culture, and the comprehensive development of the personality.

In view of this, the congress resolution on the LCY tasks in realizing the ideological bases of the socialist self-managing transformation of education and upbringing stresses the need for action to overcome weaknesses more rapidly and to implement consistently the ideological bases of the transformation of the process of education and upbringing. This activity should focus on the more rapid development of science and technology. Dynamic scientific and technological progress is constantly accompanying changes in the economic, social, and qualification structure of the employed, and human work is increasingly being intellectualized. The need arises therefore, for educating and constantly perfecting the general profile of cadres with a developed specialist and general culture. Special attention should be devoted to the education of these cadres. On these bases a more consistent implementation of the social decisions on the development of a more flexible and modern form and method of vocational education is needed, one which will be appropriate for the needs of associated labor and personal capacities, or rather, on a strategy of reliance on one's own forces.

This means, the resolution stresses, that the existing solutions for the reform of upbringing and education must be improved in a critical manner. The LC requires that measures to implement the transformation of education and upbringing be backed up by professional and scientific knowledge, and that voluntarism and localist, and technocratic pressures should be eradicated.

Workers in associated labor must assume responsibility for education and general cadre reproduction in their organizations, and thereby responsibility for their own future and social security, and that of their children as well. Without this, the transformation of education and upbringing cannot progress on the set ideological bases.

In the period ahead, attention must be focused upon improving the quality of agreement-making and contracting between equal subjects and the free exchange of labor, not only on the extent, quality, and price of services but also on the conditions for realizing these. The LC underlines that systemic measures and sociopolitical measures within the free exchange of labor must be implemented to halt the further fall of and gradually to raise the part played by, education and upbringing in the national income.

The problem of impermissibly low incomes for education workers, particularly those in primary and secondary vocational education, must be resolved most rapidly by adequate economic policy measures. All social forces must likewise be involved in improving pupil and student standards. Communists advocate, the resolution states, that the standard of pupils and students should depend as directly as possible upon the results attained in learning and studying.

Special obligations await the LC in strengthening the scientific Marxist foundations of the entire process of upbringing and education and in promoting the ideoeducative and cultural function of the school and faculty. Communists must engage more intensively and in a more organized way in matters of ideoeducative work in the ranks of the young, and must train the young to better understand, master, and further develop the values and achievements of the socialist self-managing society. At the same time they will befit themselves to successfully resist those who try to impose an ideology that is at odds with the program guidelines of the LCY and society. Of particular importance is unifed ideoeducational activity by all social protagonists in forming the views of young people and others, befitting them to understand our past, present, and future and critically exposing the glorification of myths, nationalistic illusions, and unitarist or separatist ideas and conduct.

In the sphere of upbringing and education, too, the LC will fight against every form of isolationism within the framework of the nation, republic, or province, as well as against all forms of unitarism and majoritarianism. Communists insist on implementing the content of the joint program nuclei that have already been adopted for the preschool, primary, and the joint bases of secondary vocational education, and upon further improving and adopting joint program nuclei for secondary vocational education and upbringing. Interfaculty cooperation should be implemented to continue and expand the coordination of teaching plans and programs of homogenous studies.

The LC will work to enhance the social prestige of the teaching profession and will seek from it, as well as from pupils and students, greater responsibility for the effectiveness of overall upbringing and educational work.

Resolution on Human Freedoms

LD281802 Belgrade TANJUG Domestic Service in Serbo-Croatian 1215 GMT 28 Jun 86

["13th LCY Congress -- Resolution on the LCY Tasks Aimed at Realization of Human Freedom, Rights, and Responsibilities" -- TANJUG headline]

[Text] Belgrade, 28 Jun (TANJUG) -- The degree of the realization of the rights and freedoms of citizens is one of the fundamental criteria for assessing the overall results achieved in socialist development. For the LCY, this is not only a program goal and inspiration, but also the basis of practical activity.

This is one of the main stands of the resolution on the realization of the freedoms, rights, and responsibilities of a man and a citizen in the socialist self-managing system.

The document draws attention to the principle whereby there cannot be socialism without human freedom, or true freedom in the modern world without a struggle for the realization of socialist society. The fate of socialism must depend on its ability to overcome all forms of the alienation of personality and create a basis for social solidarity which negates the class division of society, the exploitation of man, and all forms of domination over him.

The meaning, social character, and true dimensions of human rights freedoms, the document points out, are determined above all by the position of man in labor and productive relations, while socialist self-management is progress to the extent to which it contributes to the emanicipation of labor and the realization of human freedom. Human rights and freedoms in self-management cannot be and are not the product of the system, the resolution goes on, but its foundation, its historical meaning, and the purpose of all development toward the realization of the social and national interests of working people and citizens, and the full equality of nations and nationalities.

The LCY can realize its role in this process only through constant struggle for the implementation of the principle whereby human rights and freedoms are limited to human responsibility to respect the freedom and right of a fellow human being, which also implies a continual struggle against all violations of these principles and against those who violate them.

Proceeding from the fact that human freedom will always need an organized and guided social action, the LCY will realize its vanguard role by drawing attention to the working class and all working people of the means, forms and ways of achieving freedom, because their emancipation can only be of their own making.

Experience gained so far in the development of socialism confirms that the historical orientation for the development of socialism, though not radically changing the socioeconomic position of man, does not automatically ensure a higher quality of human rights and freedoms. Experience also shows that there is no possibility for realizing and promoting human rights and freedoms without the active role of man in decisionmaking on all the fundamental social issues, in other words, without a self-managing freedom to decide about the conditions, means, and fruits of his own labor, and likewise the conditions in which he is living and working.

Proceeding from the notion that the realm of the most important freedoms and rights (to self-manage, work with social resources, distribute his own income, etc) is realized in socioeconomic realtions, the resolution stresses that the LCY must insist consistently and continually on realization, protection, and social reaffirmation of these freedoms and rights.

Every bureaucratic-etatist and arbitrary management of means and results of labor and the usurpation and expropriation of the rights of the working man and citizen represents a barrier to the realization of the historic aims and must be condemned most severely by the political action of the LCY and eliminated by law.

The LCY constantly must develop the responsibility of its members, organizations, and organs for the realization of the right to self-management in all its aspects and any usurpation of these rights must be considered a most severe political and moral violation in society. For LC members, such a violation must bring with it the most severe moral, political responsiblity.

The insufficiently energetic, systematic, and overall activity of the LC in the development of self-managing rights and duties has affected, it says, the expression of the weaknesses of other organs directly responsible for the realization of human freedoms and rights and the insufficiently energetic removal of negative phenomena.

Confirming the special significance of the full freedom of expression of nationality and the multinational community of Yugoslavia, the resolution stresses that any form of discrimination on the basis of nationality, any form of national intolerance and pressure, and any form of and attempt at endangering our federal system -- which is particularly expressed in the pressures of the Albanian irredentists in Kosovo -- is contrary to the freedom and rights of the individual and the citizen.

The condition for realizing all rights is the full performance of duties in accordance with the Constitution. Among the duties that are inseparable from the realization of any form of human rights and freedoms whatsoever, as the most sacred right and duty of SFRY citizens, is the defense of the fatherland, it says.

The resolution stresses that in organizing and realizing rights and freedoms, the equal position of men should not be brought into question, nor should the realization of rights and duties throughout the whole of the territory of the SFRY, in which the republics, provinces, and municipalities have special responsibility, be restricted. The LCY advocates the lasting and consistent implementation of the principles of the solidarity and responsibility of the republics and provinces for their own development and that of the community as a whole.

Because of the spread of manipulation and the abuse of freedoms and rights in this time of crisis, the LCY will be advocating the more rapid development of human, democratic, freedom-loving, and equality-based contents in the relations of interhuman solidarity in society with ideological means and widespread social action, which will reduce the scope for the above or rights and freedoms, and thus also the need for the use of force. In socialist society, it stresses, there can be no freedoms for the enemies of freedom.

It is stressed that nothing can justify the abuse of public office in the organs of power and in other organs and that in the LC, there cannot be who acquire riches by exploiting alien labor, by speculating, and abusing their position.

Urging all LC members, organizations, and organs to fight consistently for the realization of rights and duties, the resolution ends with the message that any undermining of the freedoms and rights of the individual is, at the same time, an attack on the programmatic goals of the LCY and is unconnected with the social role and tasks of the LC member and all his organizations.

Resolution on Role of Youth

LD181800 Belgrade TANJUG Domestic Service in Serbo-Croatian 0937 GMT 28 Jun 86

[Text] Belgrade, 28 Jun (TANJUG) -- The LC proceeds from the perception that the continuity and future of the socialist revolution crucially depends on the extent to which the young are the exponents and creators of their ideas and goals, and the extent to which they participate in the construction and realization of the historical interests of the working class. The young generation can become a revolutionary subject, stated the resolution "LC Tasks in the Implementation of the Social Role of the Young Generation," only if there is full scope for its own critical thinking about the world of socialism and our self-managing reality.

Communists must be in the forefront helping young people to wage a battle for their self-managing social consciousness and involvement, proceeding from the fact that the interests and problems of the young are the interests and problems of society as a whole.

Stating that the young generation, and especially one or two parts of it, is being adversely affected by the difficult socioeconomic situation, by social tensions and characterized by crisis in the sphere of politics, morals, and overall social consciousness, it is assessed in the resolution that the ambitions of young people go significantly beyond what is given and inherited. It depends on the LC and other factors of socialist consciousness whether, and to what extent it will realize its revolutionary being, because young people can do much, but they cannot change the world by themselves. Proceeding from this, the LC must expand the involvement of the young in socialist self-management and the involvement of larger numbers of young people in the LC leadership -- from basic organizations to the LCY Central Committee.

The section of the revolution on ideological trends among young people stressed that the progressiveness of the young generation cannot be assumed in advance, since, in the conditions of the current crisis, it can often end up as radicalism, which is not always progressive. The LC cannot reconcile itself to the fact that a section of the young are living in apathy, with a feeling of powerlessness and no hope; they must have initiative and must speed up those actions of the young in which they will affirm their values and make their own impact on the mainstream of society. We should not allow a section of the young, because of serious difficulties in self-management and in the sphere of morals and social life, to reject self-management itself and seek alternatives elsewhere under the influence of conservative forces and their ideologies. Since nationalism is the most dangerous expression of these forces the LC must act clearly in each situation and expose the social causes and consequences of nationalism.

The LC sees unemployment primarily as an economic, social, class and political problem which, despite great efforts and the results achieved has become increasingly exacerbated in the last few years.

Solving this problem is not only the responsibility of the environment in which it occurs but it is a priority task for society as a whole, the resolution stressed. It can be realized, above all, by dynamic economic development and the strengthening and expansion of the material basis of labor. All solutions that act as an obstacle to the more rapid productive employment of young people should be removed, and solutions should be forthcoming which stimulate self-managing integration and the free mobility of labor and social resources on the unified market.

The orientation towards greater employment can be attained only if each new job is taken by the most qualified cadres, those who are capable of expanding production and of increasing income and productivity. This requires that measures and criteria for accepting workers, including the necessity of taking on trainees, be respected throughout the basic organizations of associated labor. A decisive struggle must be initiated against the widespread appearance of the misuse of competitions for jobs, privatization and other deformations in employment.

After noting that solving the housing problems of the young and improving the position of young people in the village, are among the priority tasks of the LC, the resolution stated that education and upbringing is a crucial question which to a very great degree, predetermines one's entry into life, work and the overall prospects of the young. In order to implement reform goals, it went on, the most important thing is to project long-term cadre needs, because without this the educational system cannot know what specialists are required and students cannot know what jobs to aim for. The LC, with others in society, must quickly find solutions to harmonize the process of upbringing and education with the needs and requirements of associated labor, especially on the question of cadre planning. At the end of this section, it said that the position of students is of primary importance for the overall development of this position on a united ideological and socioeconomic bases. They must reflect and support the requirements of productive and social integration throughout the country and facilitate the free flow of knowledge and experience through reliance on common scientific and cultural achievement.

The basic contents of the Marxist view of nature and society, the resolution stressed, must be built into the overall education and upbringing process. There is a need to remove more rapidly the weaknesses that appear in this process and to liberate it from the dogmatic and, in essence, non-Marxist approach to the study of Marxism. In this connection the contents of the subject of basic Marxism and socialist self-management should be improved -- in other words, special attention should be devoted to the more successful work of youth political schools.

The lasting orientation of the LC is the rejuvenation of its ranks which, at the same time, means that criteria for accepting young people into the LC must be developed and applied more consistently. It is the duty and responsiblity of the municipal committees and the basic LC organizations the document said to develop permanent and direct cooperation and activity among young people. However, Communists must fight for the inclusion of young people in SAWP, the trade unions and other sociopolitical organizations, they must fight for the understanding that without their full voice there can be no democratic debate. The same approach must prevail in workers councils, delegations and assemblies.

This involvement of the young requires the consistent realization and development of the Yugoslav socialist youth federation which should reflect, in its entirety, all the different interests of the working, cultural, and living preoccupations of the young generation. The LCY will offer full support for the development of the Yugoslav socialist with federation as a united and mass, sociopolitical and educational organization in which, as the broadest democratic front of young people, the aspirations and the creativity of young people are expressed and channelled in a socialist self-managing direction, it said in the final section of the resolution.

REPORTAGE ON 28 JUN CONGRESS PLENARY SESSION

LD281935 Belgrade TANJUG Domestic Service in Serbo-Croatian 0652 GMT 28 Jun 86

["13th LCY Congress: Plenary Session and Reports From the Commissions" -- TANJUG headline]

[Excerpts] Belgrade, 28 Jun (TANJUG) -- The beginning of the third plenary session of the 13th LCY Congress was devoted to the 100th anniversary of the birth of Djuro Djakovic, the legendary fighter and leader of the Yugoslav party and movement.

The delegates to the 13th LCY Congress today elected the LCY's top bodies -- the Central Committee, the Commission for statutory issues and the Supervisory Commission. All the candidates received the necessary two-thirds majority of votes. The report on the elections was presented by Ali Sukrija, chairman of the Commission for the Election of the LCY Organs of the 13th LCY Congress.

The total of 1694 delegates of 98.77 percent of the 1715 present delegates took part in the voting. The commission has established that in the election of the Central Committee only one ballot paper was invalid while at the election for the Supervisory and Statutory Commission two ballot papers each were found to be invalid. Sukrija informed the delegates that 14 new names were added to the list of candidates for the Central Committee; 2 of these received 2 votes each and 12 1 vote each.

Ali Sikrija congratulated the newly elected members of the LCY top bodies and wished them great success in their work.

In the course of the third plenary session, which is being presided over by Radisa Gacic, the delegates heard the reports on the work of the six congress commissions.

The LC has a task to mobilize the working class and all working people in the economy and society into a determined action in order to bring about major changes needed for pulling out of the crisis. This is the key assessment of the report on the work of the Congress Commission for the Development of the Socioeconomic relations of Socialist self management and for the economic, Scientific and Technological Developments. The report was adopted by the delegates at the third plenary session of the congress. On behalf of the commission in whose work over 600 delegates took part (126 took part in the debate and another 106 delegates submitted their writtern contributions) the report was presented by Stefan Korosec.

The commission was unanimous -- the report says -- in calling for the consistent implementation of the long-term program of economic stabilization with full observance of the laws of commodity production and the world market criteria.

It is stated that the ideopolitical differences in our people's views about the main causes of the instability have, to a considerable extent, been clarified while the awareness of and confidence in our own resources, know-how, and working people's creative power and the need for introducing modern technology have been enhanced. However, the report warns, owing to high inflation and low efficiency in the economic activity there still exists a threat of new crisis situations and exacerbation of the difficulties.

As regards the high level of unemployment the report urges all those responsible for making decisions in society and the workers in jobs, in particular, to assume an active attitude to the problem. The report also warns of the fact that very often the market mechanisms and criteria are replaced by administrative voluntarism all of which reduces people's responsibility for the results and for the consequences of the decisions they passed.

The report goes on to stress that since our economy is going through a stage where it is being transformed from an extensive to the intensive type of economic activity, efficiency in conducting economic policy is all the more important. It is untenable that some of the economic measures which failed to produce expected results are not being changed.

The price policy, the credit-monetary and tax policies as well as other terms of the economic activity have not been coordinated -- the report stresses -- with the tasks and demands of the long-term program of economic stabilization. They also fail to reflect the market criteria. Any form of local, republican and provincial insularity must be eliminated in an uncompromising manner in order to speed up the integration of work organizations into large technical-technological systems. The sole alternative for further developing social activities is to provide conditions for an upsurge in the free and direct exchange of labor and to end the parafiscal way of financing work organizations.

The creative potential of self-management and its advantages, the report emphasizes, have to be reaffirmed through a more qualitative, dynamic and coordinated economic, scientific, cultural, social and political development. Know-how and its proper evaluation are a vital prerequisite for changing the quality of our development and for a timely response to the trends of the present-day scientific and technological revolution and the economic development in the world. An end must be put the practice of socializing inefficiency in business and losses and shifting the blame for one's own failure on society.

The commission urges communists to stop underestimating small businesses and to help create all the necessary conditions for the development of this sector both in overall economy and as a personal initiative.

The report also states that to increase exports is not solely a task resulting from the obligation to repay foreign debts but is also a condition of sound development, of increasing production and investment and thus of resolving the problem of unemployment. The report also gives support to the policy of the realistic exchange rate of the dinar.

The report goes on to note that in the course of the debate in the commission's work criticism was voiced of the LC organs and functionaries and calls made for establishing their specific responsibility for the realization of the adopted stance. The delegates insisted particularly on establishing the responsibility for failed investments. The need was stressed on several occasions for creating conditions for a more even development throughout the country. Delegates also insisted that greater attention be paid to human environment and called for a more critical stand against all the forms of environmental pollution.

A number of participants in the debate stressed the need for consulting the widest possible section of the public when deciding on the use of nuclear technology.

The debate dwelt extensively on the current problems encountered in the development of agriculture. Particular attention was devoted to the problems affecting individual private farmers. Several proposals were put forward for improving the situation in agriculture, particularly in the sphere of the policy of bank loans.

Denunciations were expressed of unacceptable differences in personal incomes which are not a result of work while particular criticism was directed at the process of disintegration in society which does not reflect the work performed. The delegates demanded an end to this practice and to the deviations at all levels.

In conclusion the report stresses that the delegates support the Federal Executive Council's determined action in halting the unfavorable trends and realizing the tasks and goals of the economic stabilization.

The consolidation of working-class revolutionary unity and a more consistent struggle of the SFRY -- the self-managing free community of equal nations and nationalities--is the only prospect of our survival and development. In this respect it is necessary to have a radical change in the overall activity of the LC to speed up the way out of the crisis by developing socialist self-management and the true power of the working class. This is the gist of the report on the work of the Commission for the Ideopolitical, Organizational and Cadre Activity of the LCY and for the Statute, which was submitted by Jakov Lazaroski. About 350 delegates and guests participated in the 3-day work of the commission; 88 took the floor, and 19 submitted written contributions.

They carried out a critical analysis and assessment of the realization of the leading ideopolitical role of the LC in society, especially as regards the implementation of the stabilization program and efforts to resolve the accumulated problems and shortcomings. Within this framework, the delegates pointed out that the LC bears a considerable part of responsibility for the situation in society.

The sharpest criticism was voiced over statism, nationalism, separatism, technocracy and all the tendencies of isolationaism, from the basic organizations of associated labor to the republics and provinces. Nothing desintegrates Yugoslavia more than isolationism which was assessed as not coming from workers, but from various technocrats and bureaucrats at all the levels.

In keeping with Tito's demands, communists are expected to be in the front line, responsible and consistent, and also to reaffirm their words by their deeds. Communists explicitly demanded the consolidation of the ideological and action unity of the LCY, as the basic factor of the successful implementation of the leading role of the LCY, the further development of self-management and the consolidation of the power of the working class, equality and the brotherhood and unity of our nations and nationalities.

To develop the unity of the LCY we must primarily proceed from the LCY Central Committee and its executive organs, which must be the true ideopolitical revolutionary factor in the integration of the working class and the nations and nationalities of Yugoslavia. According to the report, a newly-elected Central Committee must ensure the uniform activity of the entire LCY by its political stands, decisions and organized action.

Within this context the delegates spoke critically about the federalization of the LCY. It manifests itself in the bureaucratic interpretation of the independence of the republican and provincial LC's, the different interpretation and realization of the basic aims of the policy, opportunistic approach to the conclusions of the LCY organs, to the extent of their being by-passed, ignored and not being implemented.

The report warned of the danger of bureaucratic-centralist tendencies and consciousness which aspires to hard-line policy and monolithic attitude without democracy. Its advocates call in question not only the independence of the republican and provincial LC's, but also their raison d'etre, which must be resolutely opposed.

Stress was laid on a demand for the reaffirmation and consistent application of democratic centralism at all the levels of organization, from the basic organization to the LCY Central Committee. Departures from its essence and inconsistencies in its implementation make possible the penetration of various deformities, especially in connection with carrying out policy and tasks.

The ideological struggle is insufficiently organized and more defensive and campaign-like, calling for the need for an uncompromising ideoligical struggle and resolute opposition to nationalism. In this respect one must have a uniform approach to these phenomena in all the environments. The delegates were also unanimous in their demand for further vigorous action of the LC against Albanian nationalism and irredentism in Kosovo which must include a speedier and more resolute differentiation. A demand was also voiced for the consistent realization of the platform on Kosovo and the established progress of the LC and other socialist forces in Kosovo and further afield. This is the only way to ensure mutual trust and brotherhood and unity in Kosovo, and to stabilize political and social relations in the province. This would speed up the elimination of causes of the emigration of the Serbian and Montenegrins under duress and create conditions for their speedier return, the report of the commission stresses.

Thirty two amendments to the draft resolution and 96 amendments to the draft amendments and addenda to the statute were submitted in this commission.

The development and consistent implementation of the uniform strategy of the scientific and technological development of Yugoslavia, rational planning and the realization of scientific-technical cooperation with industrially developed and developing countries, radical changes in the socioeconomic position and the institutional conditions in this sphere, in direction of exploring its productive, creative and humanitarian character, are the fundamental and urgent tasks of the LCY in the next planning period.

This is the central stand in a report on the work of the commission for ideological questions in education, science and culture, in which out of the total of 257 delegates and a considerable number of guests, 117 took the floor, 6 submitted written contributions and 36 submitted amendments.

Submitting her report on the commission's work at the plenary session, Silvija Zugic-Rijavec stressed the broad discussion reflected unity in establishing the main guidelines for further development of education, upbringing, science and culture, as the basic factors of the material, cultural and general social development.

At the same time delegates spoke in favor of a more intensive development of Marxist-based scientific research on Yugoslav reality; the basing of social life in general and the process of decisionmaking on scientific analyses and achievements and for the wider application of the revolutionary practice of the LC scientific results and the theoretic Marxist thought.

The delegates unanimously agreed on the need for the greater involvement of the LC and all the socialist forces in the resolute, organized and consistent struggle for the realization of the basic LC principles on raising the quality of socialist self-managing transformation in education and upbringing. A demand was voiced for faster standardization of the conditions of education and upbringing in all Yugoslav environments and for the reaffirmation of the principles of solidarity and reciprocity at the country level.

One central questions focused on unity and fellowship in the system and policy of education and upbringing. It was noted that -- in the past -- the educational system, because of different degrees of dynamism in the realization of reform in socialist republics and autonomous provinces, created unnecessary differences and failed to implement social contracts in this sphere, hence additional efforts are needed on the part of the LC and all other organized forces to overcome such a situation.

It is indispensable to carry out a resolute struggle for greater unity in the system of upbringing and education in Yugoslavia, because this is the guarantee of the realization of Tito's idea on self-management and on the realization of brotherhood and unity. The LC must strongly oppose unjustified differences in educational programs, plans and textbooks.

Emphasis is also laid on the consequences of the indoctrination of pupils and students in Kosovo with foreign ideology and a strongly-worded demand was voiced for the speedier and more consistent implementation of the political platform on Kosovo and all the measures and tasks which resulted from it.

The delegates also demanded a speedier overcoming of the treatment of education as part of social production and the creation of conditions for increasing the participation of education in the national income. Special attention was drawn to the fact that the employment of young specialized cadres is a basic prerequisite for the realization of the reform of upbringing and education.

In the discussion on questions of culture the participants stressed this sphere should not be treated as a separate subject but as a component part of socialist productive relations. Without the cultural progress it is impossible to encourage self-managing processes as the class-liberation ones. The realization of LC program orientations in the sphere of cultural creativity, including its freedom, was seriously called in question because of the neglect of the material status of cultural activities.

It was also noted that one of the unavoidable tasks of the LC in the field of cultural and artistic creativity is to find new, more modern, subtle and effective methods of ideological activity. It is very important here to manifest a higher degree of militant behavior to oppose all antisocialist and anticommunist stands and views, nationalist and dogmatic in particular, and to overcome all forms of opportunism in the ideological struggle.

A few delegates warned of topical problems in physical training, sport and sport recreation. Negative assessment was made of the practice which allows us to spend more time in talking and writing about specific excesses and failures, while we pay less attention to fostering and developing the educational, training, health and defense values of physical training.

The 13th LCY Congress delegates unanimously adopted the report of the Commission for the Development of the Political System of Socialist Self-Management, submitted to today's session by Ivan Brigic.

The entire debate at the commission had been inspired by critical attitudes to the problems and weaknesses in the functioning of the political system and by the uniform demand to switch without delay to specific formulation and implementation of normative solutions that would strengthen the power of the working class and self-management. Demands and proposals by most of the membership and the public for efficient and comprehensive action aimed at changing the situation, behavior and institutional solutions that had not been confirmed in social practice were expressed. Essential assessments and proposals contained in the Critical Analysis as well as the results of the public debate that had received the necessary backing were given a fresh impetus. The delegates demanded that the implementation of these proposals be started as soon as possible.

The unanimous assessment was that the basic constitutional principles and fundamental orientations that express the revolutionary achievements of our socialist society cannot be changed. However, the delegates firmly demand that the discrepancy between those principles and the practice in the decision-making process and functioning of the institutions of the political system should be reduced.

The crucial question is how to put an end to statist tendencies and how to incorporate efficient barriers against such tendencies into the system. It was stressed that the LC and the institutions in which it operates are not beyond dealing with statism. A comprehensive program of measures is, therefore, needed to free society from statist constraints.

It not the pluralism of self-managing interests that is to blame for autarky, disintegration of the working class, fragmentation of social property and pushing the delegate system into the sidelines, but the fact that it is being curbed by state-property monopoly. Institutions and mechanisms of the political system must be, therefore, much more in the service of training all subjects in business activity in line with the law of the economy and the market, instead of being under state patronage.

The delegates pointed out the need for a more resolute struggle to reaffirm the work organization's constitutional role, to make composite organizations of associated labor fit for action, to achieve better business results and greater development and to achieve linking up and integration of broader forms on the basis of specific programs. A considerable number of critical assessments were heard about the fact that workers' roles in associted labor in pursuing the cadre policy was not sufficiently carried out in practice. The LC, it was stressed, must bear the responsibility for the implementation of the adopted principles of the cadre policy and for the prevention of phenomena of splinter-group activity, sectarianism, manipulations and other deformations in this sphere.

The most dangerous form of bureaucratic monopoly, the report says, is the monopoly of individual political centers, in particular of executive and administrative state organs as regards the representation of national interests as a whole. Such monopolies wreck and demolish the multinational community. On the other hand, there is also the demand to implement efficiently those state functions that are directed towards protecting and advancing self-managing social relations, that express the state's working class essence.

The disintegration of the Yugoslav community, cases of separatist isolationism as well as unitarist endeavors are subjected to severe criticism. What is crucial for the implementation of the federation's constitutional concept, is the influence of the working class and associated labor, based on self-management, in implementing common interests. Economic as well as normative preconditions have to be created to achieve the decisive influence of associated labor in the assembly system and prevent fragmentation and autarchy in particular in large systems.

Emphasis was laid on implementing the constitutional position of the SR of Serbia as a composite sociopolitical community and of the relations in it because this represents a fundamental element of realizing the constitutional concept of Yugoslav federalism. Stances about creating relations on which unity and togetherness in the SR of Serbia are based were endorsed. The demand was voiced that they be consistently implemented.

It is the delegates' unanimous view that normalizing the deeply disrupted international relations in the Socialist Autonomous Province of Kosovo is one of the LCY's most important tasks, the solution of which allows no delay. The main task of the LCY and of the Serbian LC, and above all of the Kosovo LC, is to create conditions that would halt the exodous of Serbs and Montenegrins and prevent the irredenta's goals about ethnically pure Kosovo from being realized. The program of measures and activities adopted by the LCY Central Committee Presidium and the SFRY Presidency should be strictly implemented.

There was critical assessment of the phenomena of undermining constitutionality and legality.

The debate at the sessions of the Commission for International Cooperation of the LCY and Foreign Policy of the SFRY manifested full unity and resolve to continue to confirm, through all international LCY and SFRY activity and deeds, the continuity of our strategic orientations in international relations and foreign policy, which we established and successfully implemented together with Tito for decades.

The debate also stressed that in the future, Yugoslavia's international position and prestige in the world would depend mostly on the extent to which we successfully resolve outstanding problems of our internal, self-managing economic and social development.

In submitting the report on the work of the commission to the plenary session, Dr Stanislav Stojanovic stated that the debate confirmed Yugoslavia's lasting orientation toward the policy of nonalignment as an expression of its internal socioeconomic and political identity and irreplaceable strategy of safeguarding and defending our independence. New incentives for the Nonaligned Movement are expected to come from the summit in Harare, which would direct its activity even more toward actions and make it even more effective.

The commission noted with great concern that the confrontation between superpowers and blocs and the continued arms race, in particular nuclear, represent a dangerous threat to world peace. In this context, the need to strengthen the role and efficiency of the UN as the broadest democratic forum for mutual negotiations was stressed.

The delegates sounded a warning about many unforeseeable dangers that also arise from peaceful uses of nuclear energy as has been confirmed by recent accidents in nuclear power plants.

In this context, backing was given to the fundamental orientations of social movements advocating preservation of world peace and protection of human environment.

The need was stressed to eliminate crisis hotbeds in individual parts of the world that are gravely weighing down international relations and seriously threatening world peace. Concern was voiced about the worsening situation in the Mediterranean among other things. Resolute and urgent international sanctions were demanded against the racist regime in South Africa.

The delegates condemned all aspects of international terrorism and demanded that resolute measures be taken to eliminate its causes.

Great attention was paid in the debate to the crisis in international economic relations. Particular reference was made to the problems of overindebtedness of a large number of developing countries. The delegates endorsed the view that the only real way out of the present crisis in world economic, trade and financial relations was to change them fundamentally and to create a new international economic order. In this context, they stressed the need to take concrete, urgent measures to swiftly expand our economic cooperation with developing countries within the framework of our economic relations with the world.

One of the main subjects of the debate was also Yugoslavia's cooperation with neighboring countries and the promotion of bilateral and multilateral cooperation in the Balkans. The delegates explicitly emphasized Yugoslavia's lasting orientation to develop comprehensive cooperation with all neighboring countries on well-known foundations. Friendly cooperation with neighbors, based on the concept of the policy of open borders, is one of the most important priorities in our foreign policy, it was stated in the debate. The conviction was also voiced that national minorities could and must be an important constructive factor in bringing peoples and states closer together and in developing good-neighborly cooperation.

The delegates pointed to the positive experiences in cooperation with individual neighboring countries, but also to the existing controversial and unresolved issues in our relations with some of our neighbors. This refers in particular to denying the existence of the Macedonian national minority in neighboring countries and the identity of the Macedonian nation in general, as well as to periodic manifestations of even territorial aspirations toward Yugoslavia.

The commission in particular analyzed the existing problems of socialism and the workers' movement and pointed out that the seriousness and nature of the problems that socialist forces face today, imposes an even greater need for their closer, mutual and equitable cooperation, for which the LCY would work in the future.

Corresponding attention was also paid to the democratization and socialization of our foreign policy. It was assessed that significant results had been achieved in this respect. But, it was also pointed out that fuller mutual information, intensified responsibility and greater coordination of activity by all participants in our international cooperation to implement consistently jointly established uniform foreign policies of the SFRY, are needed.

It is the assessment of the 13th LCY Congress that since the 12th Congress a significant breakthrough has been achieved in the practice of all-people's defense.

Even in unfavorable socioeconomic conditions, we have ensure the continuity of successful defense preparations, complemented and perfected the defense and protection system and increased the ability of society for defense from armed aggression and other forms of external and internal threats. This was stressed by Simeon Buncic in presenting to the plenary session the report of the Commission for the Issues of All-People's Defense and Social Self-Protection, in the work of which 180 delegates took part. Fifty-one delegates spoke in the debate.

The speakers stressed that the concept of all-people's defense and social self-protection, as founded by Tito, represented our lasting orientation and the only possible reply to all challenges and threats to the independence and security of the SFRY under the present circumstances. Efforts undertaken to complement and perfect the doctrine and system of defense and self-protection in line with the changes were fully endorsed.

The 13th LCY Congress pointed out that the dangers of the security of Yugoslavia are on the increase because of the worsening of the international situation as well as because of complex, critical internal circumstances.

The crisis in international relations has become a permanent feature and, therefore, the issue of war and peace is today increasingly raised as an issue of relations between crisis and war. The special war is assuming global dimensions and is being waged with growing intensity against the SFRY, along with more explicit reliance on the internal enemy.

The interests of defense and security of society demand swifter and more efficient resolution of very exacerbated and accumulated economic, ideopolitical and social problems. Our intensified internal difficulties have been conducive to the activation of hostile forces and their increasingly more organized and aggressive activity.

The 13th LCY Congress warned of the great dangers arising from intensified nationalistic and statist bureaucratic tendencies and, on this basis, the increasingly present processes and phenomena of autarchy, isolationism and favouritism for individual interests at the expense of the general social interest. Yugoslavia, as the common homeland of all our nations and nationalities, and working people and citizens, and of every one of its part in particular, can develop, protect and defend itself only by common efforts and in conditions of unity of the LCY, of leaderships and all organized socialist forces of the country. Experiences derived from the counterrevolutionary events in Kosovo demonstrate in the best possible way the extent to which nationalism acts destructively on the identity of our multinational community and thus also on the vitality and efficiency of the defense.

The debate pointed out the need to further strengthen the unity of all forces of the all-people's defense and social self-protection on the uniform area of Yugoslavia, the unity of the concept and of the doctrine on the deployment of Armed Forces, the unity of leadership and command and unity of the material and technical equipping of the Armed Forces and of all-people's resistance.

Appreciation was expressed to the Yugoslav People's Army and to the Armed Forces as a whole for having preserved, despite the critical situation in society, ideopolitical unity and moral firmness, and contributed to the stability of the entire society.

It is the commission's unanimous view that the Yugoslav People's Army, as the striking section of the Armed Forces, must in the future be united, morally firm and organized, armed, equipped, trained and mobile in such a way as to be able to successfully meet the first and most powerful strike of the aggressor, make possible, with territorial defense and along with the involvement of other forces of defense and security, the transition of society to the state of war and carry on the battle with the main forces of the aggressor until final victory. Attacks on the Yugoslav People's Army and the entire all-people's defense were most severely denounced. The demand was voiced for the LC to wage more consistently the struggle against such phenomena and their exponents, the report of the commission for all-people's defense and social self-protection stressed.

When the reports on the work of the six commissions were adopted, the congress went on to endorse the report of the Commission for Proposals and Petitions, which was explained by Pal Benak. He told the delegates that the 13th LCY Congress had received 1,112 petitions, appeals, complaints, proposals, and letters.

Such a high number of petitions, never recorded at any previous congress, is an expression, Benak said, of the working peoples' and citizens' trust in the LCY, and its readiness to be resolutely committed to eliminating unconstitutional and illegal actions, as well as all other phenomena opposed to self-management. But, this is also at the same time an indicator that in many environments there is stagnation in developing self-managing socioeconomic relations. This is manifested mostly in the violation and usurpation of self-managing and other rights of the working people and citizens, and in particular, of the lack of efficiency of many organs and organizations.

Benak said that during its seven sessions, the commission discussed 909 petitions, 212 of which referred to statutory issues and 697 to personal problems of the working people and citizens and to the state of society. Among them are 34 collective petitions with 315 signatures, 45 petitions containing proposals to resolve various issues of broader social significance, and 47 anonymous letters. Of the 212 complaints relating to statutory issues, 167 refer to decisions on expulsion from the LC; 25 to ideopolitical measures taken against individuals, warnings and last warnings; 17 to demands for recognition of controversial years of service in the LC; and 3 to the decision to be struck from the records of LC membership.

Following a detailed discussion of the reasons listed in the complaints and the attached documents, the commission proposed to the 13th Congress to accept the complaint put forward by the Zagreb-Medvescak munitipal committee presidium of the Croatian LC and to have the ideopolitical measure of last warning pronounced on Dusan Cekic from Zagreb commuted into the ideopolitical measure of expulsion from the LC.

It was proposed to the congress that 77 complaints be passed on to the Commission for Statutory Questions of the LCY and other LC organs and basic organizations for verification, and that 120 be rejected due to lack of substantiation by fresh evidence.

The most frequent reasons and causes for resoration to the LC in this way in insufficient political sensitivity, inefficiency, and bureaucratic attitude of a considerable number of responsible social factors in resolving vital issues for workers and citizens.

Many petitions refer to various kinds of violations of constitutionality and legality such as enrichment without working for it, bribery, corruption, and unjustified social differences, as well as nationalism and chauvinism, with consequences which have been manifested in the most drastic way in the Socialist Autonomous Province of Kosovo and which are reflected particularly in the constant exodus of Serbs and Montenegrins from that area.

Letters from many complainants are characteristic; weighed down by material troubles such as price rises, low personal incomes, and minimum pensions, they appeal to the delegates of the 13th Congress to devote particular attention to these issues in their deliberations. People without jobs expect the congress to introduce more order and legality in this sphere, and they insist that concrete political measures and actions be taken to restore respect for the rights of those who have waited longer, who need work more, and who are more skilled.

Pal Benak said that the commission's assessment was that seven petitions called for the direct intervention of LCY top-ranking organs. Among them is the letter from Jovanka Broz. They are to be passed on to the LCY Central Committee.

The fourth plenary session of the 13th LCY Congress, chaired by Milanko Renovica, adopted nine resolutions:

- on the LC tasks in developing socioeconomic relations and the political system;

- on the LC tasks in the economic and scientific-technological development;

- on the LC tasks in ideopolitical and action training of the LC;

- on the LC tasks in the struggle for peace and equitable education and upbringing;

- on the LC tasks in the development of culture;

- on the LC tasks in implementing the LCY platform on Kosovo;

- on the LC tasks in implementing freedom, rights, and responsibility of man and citizen; and,
- on the LC tasks in realizing the social role of the young generation.

Milan Kucan explained the proposed regulations

What stems from the debate is the general realization and clear demand, he said, that there can be no further development of socialist self-management if the foundations causing the statist relations or production, above all, in the expanded and social reproduction, to be self-perpetuating, are not eliminated from the economic and political system.

Kucan stressed the debate demonstrated great interest and concern for the fate, unity and development of the Yugoslav socialist self-managing, multinational, federal community from which also stems the responsibility of every part of our community for everything taking place in it, or in any part of it, or what should take place through our future ideo-political action.

Kucan believes that for the LC action to take place immediately after the congress, it will be of great significance that we create conditions to implement the crucial strategic tasks both of the LC and of society -- tasks we have laid down in the congress resolutions. Since the number of these tasks is high a clear selection is called for.

First we should resolve issues which will extricate us as soon and as reliably as possible from the existing social difficulties and economic crisis and at the same time unfold prospects for more socialism, for a socialism richer in its material and spiritual aspects, economically more efficient and of more democratic and humane contents and opportunities.

Kucan also believes it is a matter of great significance to mobilize the entire party membership and to commit and rally all social potentials and all society's progressive forces to implement the congress tasks.

Kucan informed the delegates that while the commission was at work it received 163 amendments proposing changes and supplements to the texts of the congress resolutions, their improvement or further elaboration of stances and tasks contained in these documents. The commission discussed every proposal, comment, suggestion or demand, including those which were a matter of principle or fairly general. Most of these amendments had been fully or partly adopted. The commission rejected amendments which did not fit the concept and structure of the resolutions or which, by their contents and proposals, deviated from the basic orientations. In this context, proposals contrary to the role of the LC and the function of the congress were also rejected.

At the end of his speech, Kucan stressed that in these decisive moments and periods of our society, the actions and efficiency of subjective forces, and above all, of the LC is crucial; that is, their ability to grasp, on the basis of a critical examination of the situation of society, the origins of what is new and progressive and give the most progressive replies to resolve the accumulated economic and social contradictions, along the path of development of socialist self-management and strengthening of the federal nature of the Yugoslav community and of brotherhood and unity of our peoples. This is the meaning of implementing the long-term economic stabilization program and of the entire activity in applying the knowledge contained in the critical analysis and gained from the public debate on it. This is the fundamental task of the 13th LCY Congress and therein lies the significance of its conclusions, Kucan said.

The congress then adopted the proposed amendments and supplements to the LCY statute. There were 145 amendments. In explaining the proposals, Jure Bilic, chairman of the commission, said the aim of the new statutory premises was to settle all fundamental issues of the LC internal relations in a uniform manner, this also having been the demand of the all-party debate. Bilic said not a single forum organ could turn a deaf ear to the demands put forward in the public debate in connection with the 13th session of the LCY Central Committee, an exceptionally significant and far-reaching event in the life of the LCY. Criticisms and demands voiced in that debate represented the starting point in the work on amending and supplementing the LCY statute.

Dealing with individual premises of the new statute, Bilic said that the general principles emphasized the components of the LCY unity as being the vanguard of the Yugoslav working class, which expressed and struggled for the genuine interests of all the nations and nationalities of our country.

The statute contains the orientation about the integral settling of relations in the Serbian LC; that is, about the LC's of the provinces within the indivisible LCY and the Serbian LC.

The statute defines the obligation and responsibility of organizations and organs of the Serbian LC and of the provincial LC's for the initiatives launched by basic organizations as well as for stances and conclusions adopted by organs and forums of the LCY and of the Serbian LC. In the debate, according to Bilic, a considerable number of comments were made about determining the independence of the republics in the single LCY. However, the commission is of the view that the independence of the republican and provincial LC's is both a historical and topical political category of equal proportion that demonstrates the specific and special nature of LCY relations, that is, that unity could not be built and implemented without adequate independence. Independence is both a manifestation and a condition of unity. The existing degree of independence of the republican and provincial LC's in the single LCY is a result of long historical experience and of the need in the development of our communist movement, beginning with the mid-thirties and in particular since Josip Broz Tito became general secretary.

Speaking about the essence of democratic centralism, Jure Bilic noted changes introduced in the statute would contribute to developing a consciousness about a greater democratic spirit and unity, and at the same time it would also influence the way decisions are implemented in line with these fundamental party principles.

In the debate preceding the congress as well as at the congress, topical issues concerning cadre policy in both the LC and society were pointed out. The proposal was made to bind the LCY Central Committee through the statute to settle those issues with a special ruling on the basis of a preceding public debate. In opting for such a proposal, Bilic explained we proceeded from the knowledge that the crisis in society also has its cadre component.

As regards the organization of the leaderships of the republics, provinces and the LCY, Bilic pointed out that various proposals and alternatives were put forward. He indicated in particular the novelty by which the LCY Central Committee has the right to take the initiative for convening an extraordinary congress of the republican LC's, extraordinary conference of the provincial LC's and of the LCY organization in the Yugoslav People's Army when deviations from the LCY policy and program occur.

When Jure Bilic ended his speech, three amendments were put forward to the proposed changes and supplements to the LCY statute. Danica Milosavljevic believed that the formulation about the republican and provincial LC's being "united" in the LCY should be deleted from the statute. Djuro Bilbija proposed that the obligation should be laid down in the statute that, in elections for all LC organs, there should be several candidates and that the present practice of standard candidates being elected should be discontinued. Milos Perovic insisted on a standard party membership fee for the entire LCY. Not one of these three amendments was passed by the congress.

At the end of the 4 days of work, Milanko Renovica, who chaired the session, thanked, on behalf of the congress, all organs and organization as well as the citizens of Belgrade -- the Hero City -- who had provided the conditions for work and who had extended their hospitality to all delegates and guests. He also thanked those who had committed themselves to organizational, technical and other business and who had contributed to the successful work of the important gathering of Yugoslav Communists. Thanks were also expressed to the Sava center work collective and to numerous foreign and Yugoslav journalists who had provided extensive and timely reports on the work of the 13th congress. The 13th LCY congress ended with the singing of the song "Comrade Tito, we swear to you...."

PARTY PLENUM APPROVES DRAFT DEVELOPMENT PLAN

AU061841 Tirana ZERI I POPULLIT in Albanian 1 Jul 86 p 1

[Editorial: "A Bold and Magnificent Program of Tasks for the Communists and All the Working People"]

[Text] As reported, the 15th AWP Central Committee Plenum held its proceedings recently to broadly discuss the AWP Central Committee Politburo report "On the Fulfillment of the Seventh 5-Year Plan and on the Draft Plan for the Socioeconomic Development of the People's Socialist Republic of Albania During the Eighth 5-Year Period (1986-90)." The plenum unanimously approved the draft directives of the Ninth AWP Congress for the Eighth 5-Year Plan and decided these documents of great importance should be passed on for a broad popular discussion.

Concluding plenum proceedings, Comrade Ramiz Alia said "The draft directives we approve today synthesize the fundamental targets of the progress of the productive forces and the socio-cultural sector, the perfecting of production relations, the elevation of the people's well-being, and further consolidation of our social order and the country's defense. They guarantee all-around continuity on the socialist road, on the basis of the party's line and Comrade Enver's teachings." Their approval crowned a broad and profound effort to study and forecast possibilities of the country's further progress. This reflects the strength of the party's ideas and the clarity of its thinking, the judgment and lofty political awareness of the masses, and their readiness and confidence in undertaking and fulfilling great and bold tasks.

The facts that, relying entirely on our own efforts, the enlarged reproduction capacity was effected during the past 5-year period and that economic independence and stability was strongly affirmed in the face of all situations are great victories. The people's well-being was further raised. The social product increased 18 percent over the sixth 5-year period and national income 16 percent. The social industrialization process was deepened and industrial production increased 26 percent. Our socialist agriculture made strides on the road to intensification, raising agricultural yields.

Hundreds of production and sociocultural projects were built during the past 5-year period. The first two turbines of the "Enver Hoxha" Hydroelectric Power Plant at Koman were installed ahead of schedule, the Milot-Shkoder-Han i Hoti and the Fier-Vlore railroads were completed. Hundreds of kilometers of high-voltage lines were constructed. A number of projects were commissioned in various fields. The number of pupils and students at all levels of the educational system reached approximately 750,000 and the population reached the 3-million mark.

Our victories during the seventh 5-year period -- as was stated at the plenum -- are even more magnificent because they were achieved during a bitter class struggle against internal and external enemies. This showed once again the superiority and vitality of our socialist order, the correctness of the party's Marxist-Leninist line and of Comrade Enver's immortal teachings, and the strength of our steel-like unity.

The achievements of the past 5-Year period in all socioeconomic areas in the course of the implementation of the fundamental tasks set out by the Eighth AWP Congress make a sound foundation for the draft directives of the new 5-year period. The plenum said these draft directives.

incorporate the party's long-term strategy for the complete construction of the socialist society, Comrade Enver Hoxha's farsighted economic thinking, and the conclusions and tasks drawn by the party for the country's development. The current 5-year period is a bold and magnificent program.

In the context of developing and deepening socialist industrialization, the degree of use of the country's natural wealth will be extended. Industrial production is expected to rise 29-31 percent in 1990, compared with 1985. In accordance with draft directives approved by the plenum, several important projects will be constructed, most to be commissioned during the current 5-year period. The core of new productive investments will be represented by the Banja hydropower complex, the Milot-Rreshen-Klos railroad, the Bulqize viaduct (traverbank) the new urea and superphosphate plants, the completion of the nickel-cobalt and lubricating oils plants, dozens of reconstructions, and the construction of irrigation projects for an additional 60,000 hectares. New factories and production lines, roads, schools, and medical and cultural institutions will also be constructed throughout the country. The well-being of the people in rural and urban areas will be improved and social equalities will be reinforced. Considerable investments will be made in the light and food industry to raise the well-being of the population.

Targets set for agriculture, whose overall production is expected to increase 34-36 percent for the 5-year period, are intended to raise the role of this branch in the country's independent development by increasingly better meeting the needs of the people, industry, and exports, and by better harmonizing the intensive and extensive way of development. Increased volumes of transportation, structural improvements, and other measures envisaged in the draft directives are also intended to ensure the agricultural sector will be in a position to better support the development of the entire economy.

The plenum stressed that to ensure improved use of all reserves and possibilities available to our economy and to advance the targets of the draft directives, it is necessary to analyze the achievements of the past 5-year period, particularly this year's achievements, in a critical manner and with modesty.

During the past 5-6 months, it was stated in the plenum, we observe our economy has more forcefully manifested its fundamental features, its dynamism, and its balanced development. Plans are being fulfilled harmoniously and better than ever before. The plenum stressed that primarily reflects the earnestness of communists and working people, of all the party and of the state and economic organs, in their attitude about responsibilities and tasks. This is a result of a profound political understanding and active reflection about criticism made and the tasks set by the 13th and 14th AWP Central Committee Plenums, which stimulated progress and put in operation the considerable reserves of our society.

The fact that the overall production plan has been overfulfilled in most branches of industry and in the districts during the first 5 months of this year is a success. The plenum congratulated the commendable work and effort of iron and steel, copper, ferro-chrome, and engineering workers and the working people in the gas industry, who have placed themselves in the vanguard. Achievements in the agricultural and other sectors are also encouraging. The economy has assured a relatively high rate of expanded reproduction.

Dynamism observed in production and other fields reflects the rising fervor and initiative of the masses, a reflection of the predominating spirit of mass actions.

This is clearly evidenced by the crowning success of various actions to ready the irrigation network, and by the widespread movement inspired by the party and rooted in the patriotism of the cooperativeist peasantry in creating small herds of livestock. This has by now become a massive phenomenon. The peasantry is convinced that in a not-too-distant future its milk needs will be met by these herds. This initiative, stated at the plenum, can and must be further promoted by the peasantry itself, and can and must be stimulated by lowering prices and in other ways.

The plenum stated the dynamism observed in the economy largely reflects the rising spirit of the initiative and action of the masses. The spark ignited by the Milot-Rreshen-Klos railroad project is extending rapidly everywhere. The obvious successes in industry are due to the merit of workers and specialists, ministries, and districts, among which Tirana, Elbasan, Librazhd, Shkoder, Durres, Kruje, and Permet districts must be highlighted. Several irrigation projects extending over an area of 6,000 hectares have been completed ahead of schedule in Shkoder, Fier, Gjirokaster, Vlore, Tirana, and other districts. Tobacco industry investments effected within a 3 months would normally take one year. Weather is being made the most of in various districts in regard to sowing secondary grain crops. These and other actions show what can be achieved when voluntary work of the cooperativists and urban workers is combined with sound organization, and with full use of the investment and construction capacitites in the districts and the cooperatives.

But, the plenum also drew attention to the fact that we must not become complacent as a result of these successes and that we must not fail to also see the shortcomings which still represent a considerable potential that must be used as quickly as possible. The discussion that will take place must serve, among other things, to avoid a tendency to a declining production rate for some articles. With a more correct understanding of export problems, better organization, and a concentration of manpower and other assets, it would be possible to increase exports of chrome and copper, making adequate preparations for the coming year. The same can be said about party organization and the working people in the oil and gas sectors, where greater persistence is required to fully employ the powerful material and technical base, as well as the growing scientific possibilities.

The plenum stressed that the situation and the targets must be reviewed with a critical eye and the utmost earnestness by communists and working people in the agricultural, and particularly in the livestock-raising sectors. It is necessary to end carelessness and underrating of measures to raise the number of cattle, to secure adequate fodder, as well as with regard to the slaughter of cattle, state standards, and so forth.

It was stated at the plenum theat despite criticism of the communication sector, improvements have been too slow. The communications sector is not meeting demands for large-scale transportation and demand for strict discipline and coordinated work. Considerable improvement is needed in vehicle maintenance and use, and in the introduction of new loading and unloading methods in ports and stations. More responsible efforts and concrete results are needed by enterprises exceeding costs and to increase efficiency in general. These cases point out shortcomings in organization, liberalism in application of financial assets, and formalism in planning and checking of costs. The plenum drew the attention of the financial and banking organs to avoid an attitude of being mere spectators in planning and of merely registering data with regard to costs. The plenum stated that the rise and efficiency of the fervor of the masses, and the fulfillment and overfulfillment of the considerable tasks confronting us will depend on the way these problems are sorted out.

The discussion of the draft directives -- the plenum stated -- is not a mere procedural matter, but a great political, economic, and scientific action. In this process of a broad debate, the principle of self-reliance must be understood and implemented in all its breadth and depth, not merely as a slogan, but concretely and in every cell of the economy. In particular, we must properly understand and implement Comrade Enver's constant instruction to consume only as much as we produce, to spend only as much as we earn, to import only as much as we export, and in fact to work to increase and consolidate our reserves.

The development of large-scale production -- as was stated at the plenum -- the increase in exports, and the reduction of costs are of decisive importance in securing the planned level of accumulation. Difficulties and obstacles must be met with fruitful planning and organization, studies and comprehensive measures, mobilization at work, and with sacrifices here needed. The party instructs that in our style of work the norm must not be that of merely registering and noting difficulties and obstacles, but to overcome them through quick reactions and adequate compensatory measures. In addition -- as was stressed at the plenum -- it is the party's duty to deeply implant among the communists, workers, and cooperativists an awareness of the class struggle, of the pressure of the imperialist and revisionist encirclement, and of the difficulties arising from this struggle and this pressure. The workers led by the communists will eliminate these and other difficulties through their militant work.

What is important -- the plenum stated -- is that the discussion should bear the imprint of the creative and revolutionary thinking of the masses. "This discussion," Comrade Ramiz Alia stressed at the plenum, "will be fruitful if the plan indicators are passed through the sieve of active and bold thinking of the workers and cooperativists, the specialists and scholars; if this great action is not considered to be useless tiresome toil or merely a matter of tradition. Not mere conformism with fixed tasks, but a lively debate, not a mechanical separation: "We workers implement, others draft the plans," but an organic link between implementation, study, and planning for the present and for the future; not the number of discussions and proposals merely to fill up the statistics, but valuable ideas and feasible solutions opening up horizons, revolutionizing the people, raising their awareness and sense of responsibility -- these are the demands that must run through the massive discussion on the draft directives."

The cadres in the central departments and in the districts have a responsible duty in this action -- the plenum stressed. They are primarily required to understand the objectives, problems, and tasks raised. On this basis and with a high sense of responsibility they must study, analyze, specify, and coordinate the indicators by drawing out economic thinking in all sectors and by listening to the ideas and proposals of the masses concerning the activation and utilization of internal reserves in all fields.

In particular, the leading and controlling role of the party basic organizations should show new force and new qualities in this great political action that will be guided by them, and it is also their duty to set the mass organizations in motion.

Another 4 months separate us from the ninth AWP Congress and the 45th anniversary of the AWP. Comrade Ramiz Alia stated: "Let us mobilize all our strength, let us devote our joint physicalo and intellectual efforts to the plans and the tasks to go to that great event in the life of the party with the greatest possible victories."

The communists and all our magnificent people will respond to this call, as always, with timeless work, initiative, and a revolutionary spirit to further promote the economy, to strengthen defense, and to increase the prosperity of our socialist country.

Bekteshi Delivers Report

AU020908 Tirana ATA in English 0735 GMT 2 Jul 86

[From the report presented in the name of the Council of Ministers by Comrade Besnik Bekteshi, vice-chairman of the Council of Ministers -- ATA Headline]

[Text] Tirana, July 2 (ATA) -- It is the jubilee year of the 45th anniversary of the founding of the party and its 9th Congress, the first year of the 8th Five Year Plan which constitutes a new stage on the road of the continuous development of our socialist society, Comrade Besnik Bekteshi said among others. A sound revolutionary atmosphere prevails everywhere in our country.

Our working masses swept over in the most mass drive "Standard bearers of implementing the teachings of Comrade Enver Hoxha" are working with enthusiasm, optimism and spirit of action to realise the great tasks set by the party in all the fields of the productive and social activity. As Comrade Ramiz Alia said in the grand youth rally "everywhere there is an unshakeable conviction in the inexhaustible possibilities our country has for a fast rate progress. The spirit of drive and self-action of the working people is enhanced not only regarding innovations and technological progress, but also regarding more fruitful organisations".

The party and Comrade Enver Hoxha, he said further on, have constantly shown a special care of strengthening and democratizing the power of councils. Comrade Enver Hoxha has stressed that "with the power we shall solve everything, here lies our strength".

The elections of April 27 this year to the people's councils and courts were another brilliant victory of the correct Marxist-Leninist line of our party and an expression of the love of our people for the people's power. They manifested the determination of our people to march ahead on the road of the socialist construction according to the teachings of the party and our glorious and unforgettable leader Comrade Enver Hoxha and were an expression of unbreakable unity round the party, its Central Committee with Comrade Ramiz Alia at the head. The new elections improve considerably the content of the people's councils, their presidencies, permanent commissions and executive committees. In the people's councils of all levels there were elected 38,379 advisers, 74 per cent of whom are workers and cooperativists and 61 per cent acquired higher and secondary education.

According to the Constitution, he stressed, the people's councils, as representative organs of the people, direct and control all the social life in the respective territorial administrative unit.

By running the economy and culture, the people's councils and their executive committees realise the economic-organisational, cultural and educational function which is the main function of the socialist state. In opposition with the revisionists theories and practices, which deny the role of the socialist state for the development of the economy and open way to spontaneity and free execution of the laws of the market, our party and state exploit conscientiously the economic laws and strengthen the role of the power organs for running economy according to a unique and general state plan. The decisions of the 13th and 14th plenums of the Central Committee of the party, the visits of Comrade Ramiz Alia in some districts of the country and the speech he made at the rally organised on occasion of the handing over the baton of youth undertakings have implanted a new revolutionary spirit in the people's councils and their executive committees. This period is characterized by fast rates and a large scale realisation of the tasks in every branch and sector of the economy, culture, science and defence.

The data on the realisation of the plan for the first half of this year are positive in general, the speaker said further on. In main branches and sectors of the economy the tasks were realised and overfulfilled or are being realised.

The plan of industrial production was realised 102 per cent having an increase of 3.1 per cent as against the same period last year. Many working collectives, many districts and branches of industry realised the tasks in all fields.

The working people of agriculture, working with a high sense of responsibility completed in better conditions and faster than last year the spring sowing and in general have made a good work to ensure the fodder for livestock and to provide the market with as many products as possible.

During this period, the second turbine of the "Enver Hoxha" Hydro Power Station of Koman was commissioned, the capacity of the chrome mine of Kalimash increased, some factories of food stuff industry were commissioned and over 1400 dwelling flats were set up.

Likewise goods turnover and the plan of the services to the people were overfulfilled.

Improvements are registered in regard with the increase of effectiveness and accumulation. The incomes of the state budget are realised according to the planned tasks.

In order to realise the tasks of the plan and advance its indices, he stresed, the organs of the power and economy have supported better the revolutionary drives of the working collectives and have effectively used the method of action at work.

As it was stressed in the 15th plenum of the Central Committee of the party, the realisation of the planned tasks of this year at all costs by all the branches and sectors of the economy, the districts and economies in the base has been and remains the main and the only way for the development of our society, relying on our own forces, to overcome any difficulty and pressure that come from the savage imperialist-revisionist encirclement and the general crisis of capitalism, to consolidate the independence and defence potential of the homeland.

It is a fact that in the recent years the executive committees of the people's councils of the districts have increased their active force in general regarding the realisation of the tasks. They have consolidated the links with the base, have analysed and solved the most important problems for the district as well as those that have emerged in the process of the realisation of the plan, have generalised the advanced experience and have organised better the control and asistance for the economic organs, especially the people's councils of the villages and united villages.

The people's councils of the base, he said further on, are the foundations of the people's power. The stronger, the more active and realizable they are, the stronger will be all the structure of our state mechanism. To this end the party and Comrade Enver Hoxha have worked especially to raise on a higher scale the role of the people's councils of the base, so that they, as genuine representatives of the people, exercise their competences to the full. The overwhelming majority of the advisers, in close tie with the people and social activists take part in these councils. They follow the problems more closely and are on the fore front of the struggle for the realisation of the planned tasks. It is a significant fact that 31,015 advisers out of 38,379 ones are in the village.

Along with the efforts for the realisation of the planned tasks of this year, now the people's councils of all levels are faced with the important tasks of compiling the draft plan of 1987 so that the working masses, with their innovative thinking, have their say powerfully, so that to compile a real, mobilising and revolutionary plan that responds better the needs of the development and possibilities of the economy. [sentence as received].

The 15th plenum of the Central Committee of the party, which held its proceedings successfully some days ago, he said, analysed the realisation of the last 5-year plan and jumped in the conclusion that the 7th five year plan (1981-1985) will go down in the history of the economic and social development of the country as the first plan whose realisation has been carried out relying completely on our own forces, without any credit and aid from abroad. Our country made steps forward on the road of progress and safeguarding of the victories achieved in the construction of socialism, having on its base the correct line and the far-sighted Marxist-Leninist policy of our party.

In struggle with the difficulties and great damages caused by the bad weather conditions and other natural calamities, as well as with the difficulties of the imperialist-revisionist pressure, encirclement and blockade, of the economic-currency crisis of the bourgeois-revisionist countries, there came to the force powerfully the political and ideological maturity, the steel unity and socialist solidarity of our people, their determination to march always ahead and put into life the directives of the party and teachings of our great unforgettable leader Comrade Enver Hoxha.

The new five year plan opens up new greater vistas for our people. Our industry, and first of all, energy industry, that of mineral extraction and processing, mechanical and chemical industries will take a new impetus for the rapid growth of the production of the means of production, as well as the industry of mass consumer goods, relying basically on the local raw materials. A special importance will be attached in the new plan to the intensive and extensive development of our socialist agriculture and other branches of the economy and culture. The broad discussion of the draft directives of the 8th five year plan by the working masses of the city and countryside is a direct expression of the popular character of our power and of our proletarian democracy.

In conclusion, Comrade Besnik Bekteshi said: The organs of the power in the districts and in the base, and the broad working masses inspired by the correct line of the party will exert all their energies for the frontal realisation of the tasks of this year's plan, so that to go to the 45th anniversary of the founding of the party and its 9th congress with as many achievements as possible.

Successful Conclusion

AU031149 Tirana ATA in English 0730 GMT 3 Jul 86

[Text] Tirana, July 3 (ATA) -- The second sitting of the 9th session of the 10th legislature of the People's Assembly opened yesterday at 9:00 hrs. Those present welcomed with enthusiasm Comrade Ramiz Alia, first secretary of the Central Committee of the party and president of the Presidium of the People's Assembly and the other party and state leaders. The contributions to the report of the Council of Ministers the people's councils and their executive committees began at this sitting. They also continued at the third sitting, which opened at 17:00.

When the contributions were over, the assembly unanimously approved the decision "on the further growth of the effectiveness of running and control of the people's councils and their executive committees for the frontal realisation of the economic and financial tasks." This decision points out among others that the people's councils and their executive committees, under the leadership of the party, have raised always higher the level of their leading and controlling work for the frontal realisation of the tasks of the plan and are applying on a large scale the method of understanding in order to accelerate the rates in the fulfillment of the tasks, relying on the numerous initiatives of the masses.

Regarding the last item of the agenda, the secretary of the Presidium of the People's Assembly Sihat Tozaj took the floor. On behalf of the Presidium he presented the report on the decree issued by the Presidium of the People's Assembly. The deputies unanimously approved it. The chairman of the Presidency of the People's Assembly, Comrade Pali Miska made the closing speech. He said among the other things: The issues on the agenda were all discussed. The 9th session of the 10th legislature of the People's Assembly held its proceedings with full success in an atmosphere of the revolutionary mobilisation enthusiasm that the communique on the 15th plenum of the CC of the party has aroused among our entire people.

The report and the contributions of the deputies in this assembly were pervaded by the spirit of the materials of the 13th and 14th plenums of the CC of the party as well as the instructions of Comrade Ramiz Alia. They clearly showed that thanks to the implementation of the correct line and policy of the party and the light-giving teachings of the glorious and unforgettable leader Comrade Enver Hoxha, the activity of the organs of the power has been constantly enlivened and revolutionized. They have improved their work and are tackling better with the economic problems, they have raised the level of their leading and controlling work. This is also confirmed by the results achieved in the realisation of the economic-financial tasks over the first half of the year. The very important decisions of the 15th plenum of the CC of the party are a marked event in the life of our people. They have further raised the joy, impetus and mobilisation of the masses at work for the realisation and overfulfillment of the tasks. The participation of the working collectives in the broad popular discussion on the draft directives of the 9th Congress of the PLA on the 8th Five Year plan will reflect the opinion of the masses in drafting the new plan.

At this the Ninth session of the 10th legislature of the people's assembly wound up its proceedings successfully.

[Tirana Domstic Service in Albanian at 1800 GMT on 2 July, in reporting the proceedings of the 10th legislature of the People's Assembly, adds that the assembly also passed a "bill on the people's police," stating that the bill was presented by Hekuran Isai, AWP Central Committee Politburo member and minister of internal affairs, in the name of the Council of Ministers]

TIMBER COOPERATION AGREEMENTS SIGNED WITH USSR

Protocol on Joint Lumbering

AU022014 Sofia BTA in English 1755 GMT 2 Jul 86

["Bulgaro-Soviet Cooperation in the Timber Lumbering" -- BTA headline]

[Text] Sofia, July 2 (BTA) -- Mr. Aleksi Ivanov, minister of agriculture and forestry of Bulgaria, and Mr. Mikhail Busygin, minister of timber, cellulose and paper and wood processing industry, signed a protocol to the agreement between the governments of the two countries for cooperation in the timber lumbering on the territory of the USSR for the needs of the economies of the two countries. The intergovernmental document was signed in 1982.

The ministers also signed a protocol between the two ministries for specifying the conditions for distributing the timber obtained in the joint lumbering in the 1986-1990 period.

At the previously held talks Mr. Aleksi Ivanov and Mr. Mikhail Busygin expressed satisfaction over the development of cooperation in this field.

Joint lumbering dates 18 years back. A large mechanized lumbering in complex was built in the Udorsk region which produces millions of cubic metres of valuable timber for the needs of the two countries. Today, Mr. Andrey Lukanov, deputy chairman of the Minsterial Council, received Mr. Mikhail Busygin, minister of the timber, cellulose and paper and the wood processing industry, with whom they exchanged opinions on issues to the further broadening of cooperation.

Pulp, Paper Agreement

AU041706 Sofia BTA in English 1335 GMT 4 Jul 86

[Text] Sofia, July 4 (BTA) -- Bulgaria's cellulose and paper industry is entirely built in the years of people's rule with the technical aid and assistance of the Soviet Union. The large-scale capacities now operating in this country include the cellulose and paper combined works in the town of Razlog (south-west Bulgaria), the Dimitur Blagoev featherweight paper mill in the town of Belovo (southern Bulgaria), the corrugated cardboard works in the city of Pazardzhik (southern Bulgaria) and others.

A new step forward in the specialisation and cooperation in this field: This is how Mr Georgi Pankov, first deputy chairman of the Economic Council, and Mr Mikhail Busygin, the U.S.S.R. minister of timber, cellulose and paper and wood processing, assessed the programme for economic and techno-scientific cooperation and specialisation of production in the cellulose and paper industry up to the year 2000, which they signed here today.

The document lays emphasis on intensification and on boosing the efficiency of production on the basis of improving the structure of the international socialist division of labour. Bulgaria will specialize in the manufacturing of tissue packing paper, and the Soviet Union will specialise in making newsprint and condenser tissue paper. Techno-scientific cooperatin will focus on the development of technologies for the production of special types of paper and of featherweight writing paper.

VENEZUELAN FOREIGN MINISTER ARRIVES IN PRAGUE

LD061751 Prague CTK in English 1633 GMT 6 Jul 86

[Excerpt] Prague, July 6 (CTK) - Venezuelan Foreign Minister Simon Alberto Consalvi arrived with his wife today for an official visit to Czechoslovakia at the invitation of his counterpart Bohuslav Chnoupek.

He was met at Ruzyne Airport by Bohuslav Chnoupek and his wife. Present was also Venezuelan Ambassador to Czechoslovakia Jose de Jesus Osio.

In an interview after the arrival, the two ministers voiced their conviction that the visit will give an impulse to the further development of mutual relations in spheres of mutual interest.

They stressed that both sides are inspired by the will to actively contribute to the effort to find ways of preservation of peace in the world, strengthening of security and cooperation in the current complex international situation.

Meets With Strougal

LD071406 Prague Domestic Service in Czech and Slovak 1300 GMT 7 Jul 86

[Text] Federal Prime Minister Lubomir Strougal received in Prague today Simon Alberto Consalvi, minister of foreign affairs of the Republic of Venezuela, who is on an official visit to Czechoslovakia. During their conversation, Lubomir Strougal emphasized principles governing Czechoslovak foreign policy, which stems consistently from peaceful coexistence between countries with different social systems and which strives for disarmament, friendship, and peaceful cooperation between nations. When assessing the achieved level of relations between Czechoslovakia and Venezuela, both officials noted that it was beneficial for both sides to seek ways of intensifying cooperation in politics, economy, and culture. In this regard, they pointed in particular at possibilities for more intensive cooperation, expansion in the exchange of goods, and mutually advantageous manufacturing cooperation.

Talks With Chnoupek

LD071653 Prague CTK in English 1445 GMT 7 Jul 86

[Text] Prague July 7 (CTK) -- The Czechoslovak and Venezuelan Governments' interest in a dynamic development of bilateral relations was voiced by the foreign ministers of the two countries, Bohuslav Chnoupek and Simon Alberto Consalvi respectively, today.

During their talks, the ministers stated that the political dialogue between representatives of the governments and parliaments of the two countries has become more intensive recently.

They stressed that the achieved level and extent of relations has not been corresponding to the current possibilities and needs, and pointed out the existing reserves.

The ministers said there are new prospects of raising the volume of trade and expanding economic contracts, and that there were no obstacles to taking up higher forms of economic cooperation. They also noted progress in the field of cultural exchange, conducted under at 1983 agreement.

While discussing international issues, Foreign Minister Bohuslav Chnoupek of Czechoslovakia and his Venezuelan Counterpart Simon Alberto consalvi said the present strained situation requires peaceful solutions, and called for replacing the trends of confrontation by the line aimed at detente, improving the international climate, limiting armament and at disarmament.

The ministers stressed the need for new political thinking which must consider the changed conditions in the world and in particular the fact confirmed at the Geneva meeting between Mikhail Gorbachev and Ronald Reagan that there can be no winners in a nuclear war or in the arms race.

Minister Chnoupek pointed out Czechoslovakia's active support for all important steps taken by the USSR recently in the field of disarmament, including the proposal for a total liquidation of nuclear weapons by 2000 and the moratorium on nuclear testing. He informed his colleague about the appeal of the Warsaw Treaty states to NATO countries and other European states for a substantial reduction of armies and the tactical air force, as well as nuclear weapons with a range of up to 1,000 km in the zone from the Atlantic to the Urals.

Minister Consalvi spoke of the efforts of the Contadora group states in seeking a peaceful solution to the tense situation around Nicaragua.

He stressed the conditions of a political settlement of the situation in the region, put forward by Venezuela, on behalf of Contadora, recently in the U.N. Security Council - not to use the territory of one country against another, not to be a member of any pact and not to allow external interference in internal affairs. The Venezuelan minister also explained the problem of foreign debts of the Latin American countries and spoke of the economic and political pressure by banks in the advanced capitalist states, to which these countries are exposed.

Choupek Hosts Dinner

LD072116 PRAGUE CTK in English 1947 GMT 7 Jul 86

[Text] Prague July 7 (CTK) -- Czechoslovak Foreign Minister Bohuslav Chnoupek gave here today a dinner in honor of his Venezuelan counterpart Simon Alberto Consalvi.

Earlier today, Chairman of the Czechoslovak Society for International Relations Bohuslav Kucera presented the Venezuelan minister a gold medal of the society for merits in promoting friendship and cooperation with Czechoslovcakia.

He thanked the Venezuelan representative for his important personal contribution to the extension of Czechoslovak-Venezuelan relations which have been significantly developed in all spheres of mutual relations during his term of office.

Bohuslav Kucera voiced the conviction that the visit of Simon Alberto Consali to Czechoslovakia will help further intensify Czechoslovak-Venezuelan cooperation.

At the dinner given by Czechoslovak Foreign Minister Bohuslav Chnoupek for his Venezuelan counterpart, Minister Chnoupek stressed that Czechoslovakia together with its allies want to achieve lasting peaceful coexistence of states with different social systems, to build the foundations of a comprehensive system of international security.

He stressed that the elimination of the hotbeds of tension in the world would help consolidate peace and international security. In this context he appreciated the efforts of the Contadora group states, including Venezuela, for a settlement of the Central American crisis through negotiations. Peace in the region can be ensured only if the inalienable rights of the individual Central American countries are fully respected.

Minister Chnoupek said he was convinced that the Venezuelan minister's visit will be a positive contribution towards further expansion of relations between the two countries, and towards efforts to ensure world peace and promote international cooperation.

Venezuelan Foreign Minister Simon Alberto Consalvi said his country adheres to the principle of respect for human rights, it respects international cooperation and solidarity and is determined to promote friendly relations with all peace-loving countries. In this context he spoke in favour of nuclear disarmament and undelined Venezuela's activity in the United Nations, aimed at establishing a firm international order based on the principles of equality.

Minister Consalvi said Venezuela as a member of the Contadora group seeks the implementation of democratic self-determination in Central American countries to the benefit of solving conflicts which are a serious threat to peace. He stressed his country's resolve to continue developing relations with Czechoslovakia.

HRUSKOVIC AT OPENING OF V2 POWER PLANT

LD072054 Prague Domestic Service in Czech and Slovak 1630 GMT 7 Jul 86

[Report by editor Viliam Racek]

[Text] A working activ was held in Jaslovske Bohunice today to mark the start up of the second unit of the V2 nuclear power station and the completion of the construction of the nuclear power production complex. Editor Viliam Racek reports:

The best workers are now being awarded as a sign of recognition of hard work at the construction of nuclear power production complex in Jaslovske Bohunice by all investors, designers, builders, technicians, and Soviet specialists. Miloslav Hruskovic, candidate member of the Presidium of the CPCZ Central Committee and secretary of the CPSL Central Committee, head of the party and government delegation, praised in his speech their contribution to the construction of this important project. He said that four units of the nuclear power stations in Jaslovske Bohunice became the school of building nuclear power production in Czechoslovakia.

Often, however, it required great strength, self-denial, and patience. Demands grew with the growing job. For example, the built-up area is almost twice as large in the V2 nuclear power station, the volume of steel construction is 3.8 times larger, and the area of stainless [word indistinct] is four times bigger than in V1 nuclear power stations to ensure its higher safety and reliability.

This large expenditure and people's energy should be utilized carefully. Comrade Hruskovic therefore emphasized the continuous importance of making economic use of fuel and power. Then he presented the enterprise nuclear power stations Bohunice, Jiri Prochazka from Skoda Plzen enterprise, and Anton [name indistinct] chairman of the building site committee of the CPCZ with Orders of Labor. Other workers were given 22 state and other awards.

STOPH ON GOVERNMENT PROGRAM TO PEOPLE'S CHAMBER

AU030601 East Berlin NEUES DEUTSCHLAND in German 18 Jun 86 pp 4-5

["Government Declaration by Willi Stoph, chairman of the GDR Council of Ministers, addressed to the People's Chamber on 17 June 1986"]

[Text] Distinguished deputies; at yesterday's constituent session you approved the proposal of the SED Central Committee and the SED People's Chamber faction submitted by Comrade Erich Honecker, elected me as chairman of the Council of Ministers and entrusted me with the formation of the GDR Government. I would like to cordially thank you for this trust.

Rest asured: True to the GDR Constitution I will devote all my strength to implementing the pioneering decisions of the 11th SED Congress, which has initiated a new stage in shaping the developed socialist society in our country, for the benefit of the people, for strengthening socialism, and for preserving peace.

In fulfillment of my commission, in accordance with the resolution of the SED Central Committee, and in agreement with the Central Democratic Block of the parties and mass organizations I propose that the following people be elected members of the Council of Ministers:

As first deputy chairmen of the Council of Ministers: Werner Krolikowski, Alfred Neumann;

As deputy chairmen of the Council of Ministers: Mandred Flegel, Hans-Joachim Heusinger, Guenther Kleiber, Wolfgang Rauchfuss, Hans Reichelt, Gerhard Schuerer, Rudolf Schulze, Horst Soelle, Herbert Weiz;

As members of the Council of Ministers: Otto Arndt, Gerhard Beil, Wolfgang Beireuther, Manfred Bochmann, Hans-Joachim Boehme, Gerhard Briksa, Werner Buschmann, Friedrich Dickel, Oskar Fischer, Rudi Georgi, Wolfgang Gress, Karl Greunheid, Walter Halbritter, Ernst Hoefner, Hans-Joachim Hoffmann, Margot Honecker, Wolfgang Junker, Horst Kaminsky, Rolf Kersten, Heinz Kessler, Heinz Klopfer, Erhard Krack, Bruno Lietz, Ludwig Mecklinger, Felix Meier, Erich Mielke, Wolfgang Mitzinger, Hans Sattler, Kurt Singhuber, Albert Stief, Gerhard Tautenhahn, Udo-Dieter Wange, Guenther Wyschofsky.

The majority of these people have already been members of the Council of Ministers for many years and have performed successful work. The proposed composition of the Council of Ministers reflects our determination to steadily continue the tested cooperation of all friendly parties, which is sustained by growing trust.

Distinguished deputies; the result of the elections to the People's Chamber is a convincing vote by the people for the election appeal of the National Council of the National Front, in which it was stated that what t[illegible] 11th SED Congress decided concerns us all.

This unanimous avowal of the citizens is at the same time a commission and obligation for the government to do everything:

-- to generally strengthen our socialist GDR by continuing the proven course of the main task in its unity of economic and social policy for the benefit of the people on the basis of the dynamic growth of performances in the national economy;

-- and to consolidate the fraternal alliance with the USSR and all states of the socialist community, to strengthen socialism, and to increase the potential of our strength to solve the present and future social tasks by means of effective cooperation.

The Council of Ministers regards the election result as a commission to cooperate actively and constructively with all forces and states in the world which are ready to come to an understanding to preserve peace -- the most important task of the present -- with the aim of halting the arms race and moving toward disarmament. We counter the policy of confrontation, which emanates from the most aggressive circles of imperialism, with our policy of peaceful coexistence. As recent history clearly proves, it corresponds in the best way to the interests of comprehensive cooperation between peoples and states and to the solving of tasks and problems which span the world, for the benefit of all those involved.

Close Alliance With the USSR and All Fraternal States

Last but not least the unanimous vote of the people encourages us to continue to practice interntional solidarity with all those who are struggling against neocolonialism, imperialist threats, and interference, and are working for democracy and social progress, for human dignity, and justice.

These basic tasks of socialist state policy will also determine the activities of the government during the new legislative period. We possess a concrete work program for this with the decisions of the 11th SED Congress.

These pioneering guidelines, the GDR Constitution, the laws, and the resolutions of the People's Chamber and the State Council are a binding basis for the joint activity of the Council of Ministers and all organs of the socialist state power.

Distinguished deputies; in today's world where there is nothing more important than safeguarding peace, the GDR's foreign policy is aimed at guaranteeing favorable external conditions for the further shaping of the devleloped socialist society in our country. The GDR will develop the fraternal alliance with the USSR and all socialist countries further, loyally fulfill its commitments in the Warsaw Pact in the future as well, and make an effective contribution in CEMA to deepening socialist economic integration.

In line with the humanistic nature of our social system, the socialist German state consistently directs its international activities at banishing the danger of war through effective steps of arms limitation and disarmament and at overcoming confrontation with cooperation between the states. In close alliance with the Soviet Union and the other fraternal states it is fulfilling its historic mission to strengthen socialism and preserve peace.

As Comrade Erich Honecker, general secretary of the SED Central Committee, stated at the 11th SED Congress, the USSR's approach to world issues, which is rich in initiatives, has opened up a new stage in our peace policy.

The complete liberation of the world from all nuclear weapons and other destructive weapons by the year 2000, the prevention of the militarization of space, and the step-by-step reduction of conventional weapons on a global and regional scale -- this is the peace program of socialism necessary to stop the danger of war, to change the international situation for the better, and to lastingly consolidate peace.

All Our Strength for the Budapest Appeal

The GDR supports with all its strength the Budapest appeal of the Warsaw Pact states to the NATO states and to all European countries for the reduction of armed forces and conventional armaments in Europe. It will work actively for the implementation of the socialist peace policy by continuing the business-like, result-oriented dialogue with all politicians and forces who bear responsibility in their countries.

An agreement on the ban of nuclear explosions is urgently needed. It would be the first step towards freeing the world from nuclear weapons. Like the overwhelming majority of the states of the international community, the GDR also expects the United States to join the moratorium on nuclear explosions which has been repeatedly extended by the USSR.

The GDR, which was forced to take countermeasures together with its allies after the start of the deployment of U.S. first-strike weapons in Western Europe, urgently supports an agreement on the complete elimination of the nuclear medium-range missiles of the United States and the USSR in the European area. With goodwill this should also be possible for the other side, especially as the USSR has proposed a compromise in Geneva. It comes close to previous Western views and, as has repeatedly been stated, would also include the longer-range strategic-tactical missiles deployed in the GDR and the CSSR as countermeasures.

Effective Steps for Arms Limitation and Disarmament

The GDR remains prepared to make all its territory available for a corridor in Central Europe free of battlefield nuclear weapons along the border line between the two alliances, the Warsaw Pact and NATO, according to the principle of equality and equal security. There is, unfortunately, still no constructive response from the FRG to our offer of negotiations.

Together with the CSSR, the GDR has repeatedly taken regional initiatives to create a chemical-weapons-free zone in Central Europe. The Bonn government, however, has approved the NATO plans to start the production of new, dangerous chemical mass destruction weapons in the United States.

In full agreement with the peace policy of the USSR and the other Warsaw Pact states, the GDR advocates rapid and effective steps in arms limitation and disarmament in the field of conventional weapons, the destructive power of which is more and more closely approaching that of mass destruction weapons. For years it has been working actively and constructively in the Vienna negotiations on the mutual reduction of armed forces and armaments in Central Europe for positive results. A first result in Vienna would be a useful contribution toward comprehensive conventional disarmament from the Atlantic to the Urals.

With the objective of removing political and military confrontation, the GDR supports at the Stockholm conference's serious and productive negotiations in order to conclude its first stage with a substantial final document. The time for this is ripe.

From the forthcoming CSCE follow-up meeting in Vienna we expect tangible steps for reducing the level of military confrontation, for expanding cooperation in the various fields between the states in Europe, and new stimuli for overcoming international tensions. In this spirit the GDR is prepared to actively help in its success.

In our striving for peace and international understanding we do not overlook the fact that leading circles of the United States and NATO are pressing for military superiority and social revanche.

Through a perilous, life-endangering policy against the will of their own peoples and of mankind they have exacerbated the situation. By including a number of allies, they insist on the "star wars" program and are fanning tensions in various parts of the world.

In the spirit of the joint statement of Erich Honecker and Helmut Kohl of 12 March 1985 we -- and not only we -- would consider it sensible if the FRG Government were to reconsider its policy, also regarding participation in the SDI program, in the interest of the preservation of peace. As is known, the governments of other West European NATO countries have voiced their reservations regarding this risky course of the United States which threatens human civilization.

The improvement of the climate of confidence-building and constructive cooperation must not be hampered by adhering to outdated positions.

Relations between the GDR and FRG can be shaped and developed only on the basis of international law. We are not to blame for the fact that matters which have been an obstacle to this have still not been cleared away. What is needed are relations on the basis of equality and total independence in the interest of the safeguarding of peace, the elimination of tensions, and arms limitation and disarmement. We -- just as many responsible, realistically thinking forces in Western Europe -- shall never accept attempts to play down the dangers of the arms rce. It is becoming plain to an increasing number of people that this is to divert from the negative effects of the imperialist policy of arms build-up and confrontation, and, in addition, also from the social ills of the capitalist system.

To Approach International Problems in a New Way

There is the constantly increasing awareness that today it is more urgent than ever to discard old, rigid ways of thinking and to adopt a new approach to tackle the international problems. The trend of the steadily increasing danger of war must be stopped and everything must be done to stabilize peace and to ensure the survival of mankind. This is the socialist peace policy, as proclaimed again at the latest session of the Warsaw Pact states before world public opinion.

The GDR will continue to strive to shape still more comprehensively her relations with the liberated states on an equal basis and for the benefit of all involved. She calls for the removal of the centers of conflict and tension by means of negotiations that lead to just and lasting solutions. We are standing by the side of the people and the Government of Nicaragua which is fending off crude, illegal interference. Our full sympathy goes to the victims of state terrorist attacks in the Mediterranean region and in southern Africa. We are standing in solidarity by the peoples and governments that oppose the imperialist policy of pressure and aggression.

Within the framework of the United Nations and its organizations, the GDR, in close cooperation with the other socialist states, with the countries of Asia, Africa, and Latin America, through constructive proposals will continue to make her contribution to peace, disarmament, and equal cooperation. Our socialist peace state knows itself to be at one with the efforts of the international community of peoples in the 1986 UN International Year of Peace.

Economic Strategy Up to the Year 2000

Distinguished deputies; our domestic policy is being determined by purposefully continuing the path of shaping the advanced socialist society in the GDR as outlined in the SED program and according to the resolutions of the 11th SED Congress. This requires that all aspects of social life be always taken into account in the activities of the Council of Ministers and its organs.

The steadily closer interlacing of economy, science, education, and culture, as well as national defense is setting new yardsticks for the complex and forward-looking management at all levels of the state and the economy.

The consistent implementation of the economic strategy up to the year 2000 is of the greatest importance for our further successful progress. The tasks that have to be solved in this connection will be the focal points in the Council of Minister's activities. Above all this requires the still more effective linking of the advantages of socialism to the achievements of the scientific-technological revolution, to attain top achievements in science and production, to create permanent bases for intensively expanded reproduction, and to thus safeguard further dynamic economic growth.

The heart of the economic strategy is the unity of economic and social policy. We are emphasizing this since the objective of our efforts at over-all modernization of production and the raising of its efficiency is always linked to the task of increasing national prosperity, making work easier, safeguarding security and protection in the socialist society at all times and for all citizens, and to gradually improving the standard of living parallel with rising production output.

Speedy Application of Microelectronics

The activity of the Council of Ministers and its organs will concentrate on fulfilling everywhere the qualitatively new demands of the economic strategy. Above all this includes the promotion, development, and broad and speedy introduction of key technologies in all areas of the national economy and to achieve top positions in specific areas to a still greater extent.

Through accelerated application of microelectronics, the establishment of flexible automated manufacturing stages, as well as the application of CAD/CAM solutions, considerable increases in labor productivity and efficiency are to be achieved. This must be linked to a speedy product renewal, higher refinement of raw materials, energy sources, and other materials, and a decisive reduction of production input and costs.

The implementation of the economic strategy requires improving the quality of the conceptual work of the Council of Ministers and its organs. In the planning of the national economy and all fields, a lead must be created guaranteeing timely adjustment and future development. This mostly applies to the main directions of economy and science, to the over-all modernization of the technical basis, the enforcement of the highest quality standards in line with the advanced international standards, and to the raising of labor productivity.

Man Is and Remains the Main Productive Force

A development of the branches and regions coordinated in the long run is as much to be safeguarded as is the basic and advanced training of the working people, which is oriented toward meeting future requirements. In this we shall always be guided by the proven recognition that the individual with his knowledge and skills is and remains the main productive force. All these issues concerning working and living conditions, from shaping the work place, via the employee supply system to commuter traffic, are to be discussed and clarified jointly with the working people.

A priority task of the Council of Ministers that is to be voted on today consists of ensuring the overall fulfillment of the 1986 National Economic Plan and its purposeful overfulfillment.

Under the slogan, "High performances for the benefit of the people and for peace -- everything for the implementation of the decisions of the 11th SED Congress," the working people have developed an important initiative for the overfulfillment of the 1986 National Economic Plan. The pledges are directed at increasing performances beyond the plan. This concerns not only general growth rates per se, but products that correspond to the demand in quantity and quality, that is, a larger distributable end product for supplying the population and the national economy and for export.

Proceeding from this premise the Council of Ministers and its organs will work to create the necessary conditions for fulfilling the targets, for more intensively utilizing comparative performance appraisals, and for generalizing the best results.

If everywhere -- from the smallest work collective to the largest combine -- there is a truly creative atmosphere, the available assets and every hour of working time can be used even more productively. This makes it possible to gain many additional millions of Marks for the national economy which benefit the working people in our socialist society.

With effective and forward-looking management activity the ministries, the other central state organs, and the bezirk and kreis councils have to support even more effectively the overall, continuous fulfillment of the plan.

The 1986-90 5-Year Plan and the 1987 National Economic Plan are being worked out in close connection with the execution of the 1986 National Economic Plan. The directive passed by the 11th SED Congress constitutes the binding foundation for this. It reflects the determination to continue the dynamic economic growth and to further develop the socialist national economy at a high level.

Industry has to make the largest contribution to this. Electrical engineering and electronics as well as machine-building must produce, on a considerable scale, top modern component parts and equipment for the introduction of key technologies in all fields of the national economy. It is necessary to adjust the product ranges of these fields to the requirements of the technical policy characterized by the economic strategy and of export. The production of modern, high-quality technical consumer goods is to be more rapidly increased in line with the demand of the population and for export.

The chemical industry, coal and energy sector, metallurgy, and the glass and ceramics industry have to ensure a stable supply of raw materials and energy sources to the national economy at all times. A higher level of refinement decisively contributes to improving product quality. New raw materials and other materials are being developed and produced. Further reserves have to be tapped to reduce production input.

Varied and Good Ranges of Consumer Goods

The recycling of secondary raw materials and industrial waste products is gaining increasing importance for the strengthening of our national economy's material and raw material basis.

Light industry, bezirk-administered industry, and the other branches of consumer goods production with their products have to ensure the improvement according to plan of the supply to the population, have to bring about varied and high-quality product ranges, and have to raise their contribution to exports. This also applies to all combines manufacturing producer goods -- without exception.

In the construction sector, industrial construction is to be consistently directed at preparing and carrying out the planned building measures punctually and in the required quality by means of comprehensive intensification, for the strengthening of the material-technical basis of the national economy. The housing program is being carried out in the unity of new construction, reconstruction, modernization, and maintenance with high sociopolitical effectiveness.

A better linking of the tasks of the Science and Technology State Plan with investment planning -- starting in the central institution and spreading to the individual enterprises -- is of great importance for the qualitatively new steps to implement the economic strategy. It is necessary to shorten transition periods everywhere and to produce new products quickly, in high quality, and at the lowest-possible costs. This also includes the acceleration of the qualitative development and improvement of all combines' inhouse production of rationalization equipment.

Berlin's Attractiveness and Appeal Are Increasing

As is laid down in the directives of the 11th SED Congress, the political, social, and economic achievements of socialism are to be expressed in a concentrated manner in our capital Berlin. Its attractiveness and appeal as a city of peace are to be further increased. This includes the worthy preparation of the ceremonies to mark the 750th anniversary of Berlin's existence.

At present a broad public discussion about the directive of the 11th SED Congress is being carried out. It is aimed at exceeding the targets set for the 1986-90 period in order to solve national economic tasks within shorter periods -- based on the good experiences gained during the preparation for the 11th SED Congress -- and, in particular, to increase the export power more rapidly.

The Council of Ministers makes sure that its members, the heads of other central state organs, and the chairmen of the bezirk and kreis councils, together with the combines, are working out the necessary measures for this and are creating the preconditions for their reliable implementation. The experiences of the best workers and enterprises as well as examplary model solutions of production rationalization and modernization are to be generalized more speedily.

The government will thoroughly analyze the suggestions, which were put forth in the discussion of the 11th SED Congress directive and which are an expression of our vivid socialist democracy and the true codetermination of the working people in state and economy, and will submit the draft law on the 5-year plan to the People's Chamber for discussion and approval.

Dear deputies; the tested class alliance between workers and cooperative peasants remains the lasting basis of our agricultural policy. The work of the government and its organs is directed toward further developing agriculture as an efficient sector of the national economy through comprehensive intensification. The tasks that have to be solved for this are to be firmly incorporated into the plans -- just as the supply of agriculture with the necessary production means.

We support the initiatives developed by the cooperative peasants and agricultural workers after the 11th SED Congress to achieve high production performances by fully utilizing the considerable basic assets while economically using material and energy. Also in agriculture, best results and new processes and technologies of the plant and animal production must be generalized even more swiftly and high and stable yields must be achieved in the fields and stables by scientific work in all LPG's.

The Council of Ministers will devote great attention to the development of cooperation in agriculture. The cooperation councils are to be promoted so that they can better and better meet their economic management work. This also represents an important contribution to strengthening the socialist democracy in the rural areas.

The individual production in the personal plots of the cooperative peasants and other small-scale producers, in particular in the Union of Small Gardeners, Settlers, and Small Livestock Breeders, continues to be at the center of our attention.

Also in the transportation sector the implementation of the directive of the 11th SED Congress calls for further measures to achieve a comprehensive intensification and modernization. They are to be directed above all toward qualitatively improving the commuter, pupil, and traveller traffic, applying more rational transportation technologies in the goods transportation sector, and shifting the goods transportation even more from the roads to the rails and inland navigation. The electrification of the main railway routes is being purposefully continued. The maintenance of the roads requires the increased introduction of new material-saving technologies utilizing domestic raw materials. In this field, too, local initiatives can help to avoid major repair works by repairing minor damage in time.

In the post and telecommunications sector the main thing is to increase the services for the people and the economy, above all through short forwarding times for all postal items and the improvement of the customers' services at the post offices.

To Well Prepare the Young Generation for Life and Work

Dear deputies, one of the basic tasks of the Council of Ministers and its organs is to shape the educational system in such a way that the younger generation is well-prepared for life and work in the developed socialist society. The pace and efficiency for mastering the scientific-technological progress, the increase of the educational and cultural level, the development of the readiness for high performance and of the socialist way of behavior depend on the quality of educational work. This applies both to the improvement of general and communist education in the schools and the improvement of the conditions for an effective polytechnical education.

Through vocational training the future skilled workers are to be prepared in time an thoroughly for mastering future requirements of science and technology. At the universities and technical schools the acquisition of technical knowledge, closely linked with practice, and the political and ideological education of the students is to be improved. Particular attention is to be devoted to the promotion of the independent scientific work of the students in the research cooperation between the universities and combines. That is to be essentially expanded.

The advanced education of the university and technical school cadres working in practice is to be consistently directed toward the necessary lead in education for sectors that are decisive for the national economy. In connection with the introduction of key technologies, working people are to be prepared in time for the qualitatively new work contents and the concrete demands resulting from mastering this modern technology.

Solution of the Housing Question as a Social Problem

As planned by the directive on the 5-year plan for the development of the GDR national economy in the 1986-90 period, material and cultural living conditions are to be improved according to the plan, based on high performances in production and increasing efficiency. By solving the housing question as a social problem by the year 1990, an important aim in the SED's social policy is achieved.

The government will work toward increasing the net income of the population and the turnover in the retail trade by 4 percent per year, as before. The high level of supplies to the population which has been attained is to be guaranteed in future, too, and to be expanded further.

The provision of basic consumer goods will be reliably ensured and the production of high-quality -- mainly newly developed -- industrial consumer goods will be accelerated. The scale and quality of services and the standard of trading activity will be purposefully developed. We are relying here on all those who are active in these areas, which are so important for the well-being of the people, and on the dedicated cooperation of the craftsmen and tradesmen, who have a safe future in our republic.

The policy of stable consumer prices for basic consumer goods, and for rents, fares, and services, will be continued by us as an important component of our social policy.

In the future, too, we will devote great attention to encouraging families, especially working mothers, and caring for children and shift workers. Our constant care will continue to go to veterans of work, who have made a decisive contribution with their performances making our republic what it is today.

The protection of the natural environment is of particular importance. It is inseparably linked to the economic and social policy and is thus a concern of the whole society, which demands appropriate attention from every state and economic official. Order and cleanliness in the enterprises as well as in the residential and recreational areas are decisively determined by the personal behavior of the individual and the active cooperation of all citizens.

The Council of Ministers will also see to it in the future that the measures which have been initiated for keeping the air and waters clean and for protecting the soil and forests will be implemented in the interests of the further improvement of the working and living conditions of the population. They will also see to it that international commitments are fulfilled.

Health Care for the Citizens Is of Particular Importance

In our republic public health care for the population continues to have a special place. In the forefront is the safeguarding of the high quality and efficiency of basic outpatient and in-patient medical care for all citizens. Preventive measures, the care of mother and child, and health care of workers in the enterprises will be further developed. Care for the elderly and handicapped citizens is to be increased in cooperation with the social forces and enterprises in the regions.

Opportunities for working people's recreation, particularly the young and children, will be further improved. In this connection the percentage of vacations for families with many children, for shift-workers, for working people doing hard physical work, and for handicapped citizens is to be increased.

Developing Rich Intellectual-Cultural Life Everywhere

The responsible organs of the Council of Ministers and the local councils are called upon to work -- in close cooperation with the FDGB, the FDJ, and the Cultural League -- toward the development of a rich intellectual-cultural life in all towns and villages and in the work collectives.

Work is expected of artists and cultural workers which will lastingly influence the thoughts, feelings, and conduct of the people, and strengthen zest, optimism, creativity, and the willingness to work. The care, preservation, and dissemination of the humanist, especially the antifascist and socialist, cultural heritage for our intellectual-cultural life will continue to play an important role.

In order to reliably safeguard the socialist achievements and peaceful development in our country, the Council of Ministers will, also in the future, adopt all necessary measures to protect the worker-peasant power, to safeguard the defense capability of our republic commensurate with requirements, and to guarantee public order and security at all times.

Distinguished deputies; the further consolidation of the unity and cohesion of the socialist community and the development of the socialist economic integration with the USSR and the other CEMA states remain a main concern of the Council of Ministers.

On the basis of long-term programs up to the year 2000 cooperation with the CEMA countries is more and more characterized by the demands of intensification. The measures for the coordinated development of important economic branches which we agreed on with the USSR and which reach far into the future are leading to an even closer interlacing of our national economy. This results in higher demands on the effective shaping of cooperation, on the scientific-technological standard and the quality of products and on the conscientious observance of agreements.

Utilization of Science and Technology for the Benefit of the People

The consistent implementation of the comprehensive program of scientific-technological progress of the CEMA countries up to the year 2000, which aims at achieving international top positions, is an essential basis for the decisive increase in social labor productivity and the overall strengthening of the scientific-technological and economic potential of socialism. The cooperative division of labor according to plan with the USSR and the other CEMA countries for the development and application of key technologies in the national economy exemplifies the advantage of socialism to fully utilize scientific-technological progress for the benefit of the people.

The Council of Ministers directs its organs and the combines to speedily transfer the results of research cooperation to production as well as to react in time and in a flexbile way to the changes in demand resulting from scientific-technological progress. Particular importance goes to the direct cooperation of the combines and research institutions with their partners in the CEMA countries on the basis of economic contracts outlining the respective tasks in detail.

International Specialization and Cooperation

Over the next 5 years, too, the GDR will conduct about two thirds of its foreign trade with the USSR and the other socialist countries. Focal points are the observance of the agreements concluded with the plan coordination and the long-term trade agreements, in particular to further increase trade and the active participation in new integration measures with high economic benefit.

Internatinal specialization and cooperation particularly in machine-building and in electrical engineering and electronics, is to be utilized in order to ensure the coordinated development and transfer into production of new products, machinery, equipment, and systems of appliances with a high scientific-technological standard and degree of refinement.

With the production and export of modern high-performance equipment for extracting and transporting fuels and raw materials as well as for the modernization and reequipping of important branches of the national economy in the USSR -- especially the food and consumer goods industry -- the GDR will increasingly adapt itself to the economic requirements of its most important trading partner. In order to cover our long-term demand for raw materials and fuels, the GDR, on the basis of relevant agreements, will continue to participate in the construction of investment projects in the USSR.

Proceeding from the principles of peaceful coexistence, we are shaping trade with the capitalist industrialized countries on the basis of equality and mutual advantage. In this we assume that this trade will develop free from any political and economic discrimination, boycott, and embargo measures.

11th SED Congress Also Poses Higher Demands on State Work

Distinguished deputies; the continuous strengthening of the socialist state power is and will remain the essential precondition for our further progress and for safeguarding peace. In this spirit the Council of Ministers, as an organ of the People's Chamber, will conscientiously fulfill its constitutional commission as a government of work and peace for the benefit of the people. It will continue to aim its activity at ensuring the reliable functioning and a high readiness for work of the state apparatus.

With the further development of a work style that is close to the people, it is necessary to further consolidate the trust of the working people in the policy of the SED and the socialist state and to promote their initiatives for the overall strengthening of the GDR. It is the duty of all state organs to observe the rights of the citizens, their proposals, and critical comments, and to protect their legitimate interests.

With the qualitatively new stage in the further shaping of the developed socialist society introduced by the 11th SED Congress, higher demands on state work come into existence. Priority tasks in the further activity of the Council of Ministers are improving the complicated management of decisive national economic processes, carrying out coordinating functions in a more and more efficient way, increasing the long-term aspects of its work, organizing an even more effective control over tasks that have been set down, and providing for a speedy and comprehensive generalization of the best experiences.

Proceeding from the increased responsibility of the combines and the experience gained in management and planning of the national economy, conclusions have to be drawn for management activities of the ministries, the State Planning Commission, and other central organs. They are to be aimed at providing strategic guidelines and clear economic yardsticks for the combines, ensuring the national economic conditions for their work from the point of view of balanced development according to plan, and at tapping reserves by means of comparative performance appraisals.

Communal Policy Close to the Citizens Is Indispensable

The social changes that have been carried out since the 8th SED Congress have had an impact on state leadership and make it necessary to review the 1972 law about the Council of Ministers. At the appropriate time we will submit a relevant draft to the People's Chamber for discussion and decision.

The further development of the socialist state apparatus is decisively characterized by more and more effective cooperation between the central state organs themselves and with the local state organs in order to solve the political, economic, social, and intellectual-cultural tasks as well as the defense tasks for which they are responsible. The local state organs have to more consistently utilize the possibilities, rights, and duties created with the law on the local elected assemblies in order to contribute in a more tangible way to the development of performance and efficiency in the national economy and to the improvement of working and living conditions of the population.

A communal policy close to the citizens is an indispensible element of socialist state policy and is of high importance. It decisively influences the welfare and social protection of the citizens and promotes performance readiness and the initiative of the working people. Therefore, it is necessary to improve the quality of and strengthen the activities of those management branches of the local councils which bear particular responsibility for implementing our sociopolitical objectives. This mainly applies to housing policy and housing management.

The further development of towns, villages, and communities is an essential concern of our state. Therefore, we accord utmost importance to the responsible activity of the mayors, whose work deserves great appreciation. They are the ones who daily care for the affairs of the citizens and continually organize new economic activities together with the social forces.

In the coming years computer technology must be used to a greater extent for management and planning. The introduction of a computer-aided system for increasing the reliability of the correlated balancing of the plans is of special importance for the balanced development of the national economy according to plan. In the interest of higher efficiency and for the benefit of the citizens, the administrative work is to be rationalized and modernized.

Continuation of the Tested Alliance Policy

Dear deputies; it is in line with the nature of our socialist democracy that the Council of Ministers and its organs rely in their entire work on the broad participation of the citizens and their elected representatives. The rich experiences and knowledge of the deputies to the People's Chamber and the local people's representations as well as the proposals and recommendations of the People's Chamber committees are of inestimable benefit.

Continuing the tested alliance policy the importance of which was again stressed by the 11th SED Congress, the Council of Ministers will constructively cooperate now and in the future with all parties and mass organizations united in the democratic bloc, particularly with the FDGB and the FDJ. Proceeding from the fact that socialism needs and has room for everyone, the organs of the Council of Ministers and the local councils are oriented toward actively promoting the initiatives of the National Front everywhere.

There are higher demands on the public work of the state organs, which must represent an efficient contribution to explaining to the citizens the overall national and local tasks, familiarizing them with important resolutions and the best experiences and answering their questions.

The strict observance of legality as well as the implementation of order, discipline, and security on all levels are and will remain essential characteristics of socialist leadership. There are still considerable national economic losses often linked with human suffering caused by disturbances, fires, and accidents.

Avoiding such events to a very large extent frees significant reserves that can be developed when the managers fully meet their responsibilities but also when every individual citizen participates. The Council of Ministers will ensure that the legal awareness and the legal knowledge of the state functionaries and citizens will be strengthened. This includes legal rules that are clear and understandable to everyone.

Great Responsibility of the Leaders and Staff Members of the State Apparatus

Our society has conferred great responsibility upon the leaders and staff members of the state apparatus. The government expects every single one to meet this confidence and make a creative contribution to implementing the 11th SED Congress resolutions. This requires an increased development of characteristics in state functionaries for the service of the people.

This includes unreserved loyalty and devotion to worker-peasant power as well as constant work to strengthen the fraternal alliance with the Soviet Union and consolidate world socialism.

This includes firmness of principle, serving as an example; modesty, sensitivity, and attention to the working people's affairs; careful consideration of their suggestions, petitions, and criticism; as well as the will to jointly organize the solution of the tasks with them and to generalize the most advanced experiences.

This also includes readiness to perform under all conditions, scientifically founded and truthful analysis, far-reaching evaluation of the development, as well as making decisions in time or working out corresponding proposals.

This includes the understanding for everything new as well as the readiness for constant political, technical, and cultural advanced education.

This also includes the courage to openly address difficulties and problems, openly tell the citizens what can be solved with the existing forces and means, and what cannot and why.

Comrade Erich Honecker stated in the Central Committee report to the 11th SED Congress: "Close affinity with the working people, honesty, consistency, and justice in dealing with the people, a scientific way of working, strict observance of the laws, and high state discipline should today be part of the vocational ethos of a functionary of our worker-peasant state." Where work is done in this way, there is no room for routine and bureaucrcy, only ample room for creative actions.

Based on the Inexhaustible Strength of the Working People

State leadership in socialism is based on the inexhaustible strength of the working people, on the participation of the older and younger citizen, the women and men, the people from all classes and levels. It is aimed at the well-being of the people and serves the people, the free development of his abilities and talents. It serves the preservation of peace.

The Council of Ministers presented to you feels committed to all that, dear deputies. I ask you to elect it in the proposed composition and to approve the government declaration. Let me express the certainty that you, the deputies of the supreme state power organ of the GDR, will assist the newly-elected government in fulfilling the set tasks with all your experience, in word and deed.

FURTHER ON 15TH ECONOMIC SESSION IN TOKYO

Proceedings Reported

LD071220 East Berlin Voice of GDR Domestic Service in German 1000 GMT 7 Jul 86

[Text] In Tokyo, the 15th joint meeting of the GDR-JAPAN and Japan-GDR Economic Committees took place today. Chairman of the Japan-GDR Economic Committee Dr Saito said that relations between both states are flawless and clear. Besides Japanese exports to the GDR, Japanese firms have taken over technological know-how and licences from the GDR which are of great benefit. GDR Foreign Trade Minister Dr Gerhard Beil emphasized that the GDR's main targets planned for the period up to 1990, particularly in the fields of chemicals, metallurgy, and heavy engineering, offer new major opportunities to expand trade and economic relations and scientific-technological cooperation.

In a greetings address, Guenter Mittag, deputy chairman of the GDR State Council, paid tribute to the successful work of the economic committees. They have contributed significantly to the further development of trade and economic relations on a high level. On the intiative of the economic committees, great projects have been agreed upon and realized through which many Japanese firms have gained a good reputation in the GDR as reliable trade partners with a strong performance. The joint establishment of projects, Guenter Mittag emphasized, have always been for reciprocal benefit and have significantly contributed to strengthening trust, mutual respect, and esteem.

Joint Working Program Signed

LD071958 East Berlin ADN International Service in German 1704 GMT 7 Jul 86

[Excerpt] Tokyo, 7 July (ADN) -- Dr Gerhard Beil gave detailed information on the main aims of the national economic development of the GDR up to 1990. From this he deduced that economic and trade relations should be expanded for bilateral benefit, especially in the areas of the chemical industry, metallurgy, and mechanical engineering.

The GDR's exports to Japan rose by 11 percent last year, as compared to 1984, Dr Beil noted. Good progress and great opportunities for the expansion of coopertion also existed in the scientific-technological sphere.

During the plenary session and in the consultations of the subcommittees, measures to continue the proven cooperation between foreign trade enterprises and combines of the GDR and Japanese companies on the basis of long-term agreements were discussed and established. A joint working program for 1986 and 1987 was signed.

HUNGARY'S MARJAI VISITS, MEETS WITH STOPH

LD071435 East Berlin ADN International Service in German 1339 GMT 7 Jul 86

[Text] Berlin, 7 Jul (ADN) -- GDR-Hungary relations are developing successfully at all levels of social life. This was noted by the GDR Council of Ministers Chairman Willi Stoph and Hungarian Council of Ministers Deputy Premier Jozsef Marjai in Berlin on Monday. Jozsef Marjai is heading a Hungarian delegation to the 24th GDR-Hungarian joint economic committee conference.

Both sides took the view that the Long-Term Program for the Development of GDR-Hungarian Economic and Scientific-Technological Cooperation Up to the Year 2000, signed in October 1985, forms the basis for the intensive development of the two countries' economic relations. Particular importance is accorded in this context to increasing the effectiveness of cooperation through the agreement of joint measures for the development of key technologies.

CSSR'S POTAC ARRIVES, MEETS WITH HORST SOELLE

LD072157 Prague CTK in English 1937 GMT 7 Jul 86

[Text] Berlin, July 7 (CTK correspondent) -- Czechoslovak deputy premier and chairman of the State Planning Commission Svatopluk Potac, who starts his working visit to the German Democratic Republic, met here today with GDR Deputy Premier Horst Soelle.

They discussed a draft joint plan of measures aimed at the implementation of the program of development of economic and scientific-technological cooperation between Czechoslovakia and the German Democratic Republic up to the year 2000.

The consistent implementation of these measures will be a decisive prerequisite for the start of a qualitatively new stage of fruitful cooperation between the two states.

The deputy premiers discussed the control of joint tasks in the sphere of microelectronics, colour TV sets, petrochemistry and complete automation of production.

HONECKER GREETS JARUZELSKI ON REELECTION

AU071320 East Berlin NEUES DEUTSCHLAND in German 4 Jul 86 p 1

[Text] Dear Comrade Wojciech Jaruzelski!

On the occasion of your reelection as first secretary of the PZPR Central Committee I convey to you most cordial greetings and congratulations on behalf of the SED Central Committee and my own behalf.

The GDR Communists and working people praise you as an outstanding representative of the Polish workers class and its state, as a staunch fighter for the cause of socialism, who has made and is making a significant personal contribution to expanding the close relations of friendship between our parties, states, and peoples.

We wish you, dear Comrade Jaruzelski, the PZPR Central Committee, and all communists much success in implementing the significant resolutions of the 10th PZPR Congress to the benefit of the socialist development of People's Poland and the increase of its international authority, health, and creative vigor.

With communist greetings, SED Central Committee, Erich Honecker, general secretary

CSSR'S JAKES MEETS HAVASI; CONCLUDES VISIT

LD072158 Prague CTK in English 1915 GMT 7 Jul 86

[Text] Budapest, July 7 (CTK correspondent) -- Czechoslovak Communist Party Presidium member and Central Committee Secretary Milos Jakes met here today for talks with Hungarian Socialist Workers' Party Politburo member and Central Committee Secretary Ferenc Havasi.

Their talks focused on the questions concerning the implementation of the resources of the congresses of the two fraternal parties and topical tasks of economic construction in Czechoslovakia and Hungary.

The two representatives stated with satisfaction that Czechoslovak-Hungarian relations have been developing positively in all spheres. They exchanged views on economic and scientific-technological cooperation of the two countries, stressing that the two sides are interested in all-round extension of economic relations as well as in the implementation of mutually advantageous forms of cooperation.

During his visit to Budapest, Milos Jakes went to the Hungarian works producing optical instruments.

In the evening, he ended his friendly working visit to Hungary, at the invitation of the Hungarian Socialist Workers' Party Central Committee, and left for home.

PARTY PAPER COMMENTS ON 10TH PZPR CONGRESS

AU071405 Budapest NEPSZABADSAG in Hungarian 4 Jul 86 p 2

[Warsaw correspondents Jozsef Nairo and Eva Tetenyi article: "The 10th PZPR Congress - On the Road of Socialist Renewel"]

[Excerpts] The 9th extraodinary PZPR Congress held its proceedings in a dramatic situation within the same walls 5 years ago.

Summing up its final resources and relying on its healthy forces, the party worked out the program for the elimination of the serious social and economic crisis and the political guidelines for socialist renewal.

The guideline worked out at that time has proved able to stand the test of time: the 10th PZPR Congress could take place in a radically changed social-economic and political situation.

A fundamental role in all this is played by the fact that, ever since the 9th Congress, the party has gradually been eliminating the deep confidence-crisis affecting the ranks of the PZPR. At that time, the delegates to the 9th Congress spoke bitterly. Now, they reported with pride about the party's consolidation, the strengthening of its ideological unity and unity of action, and about the renewed increase in its organizational strength. Today, the PZPR again fulfills its leading role, the essence of which has been so aptly formulated by the only slogan visible in the congress hall: "The Party Serves The People By Leading Them."

There is no doubt about it: the PZPR has stood a very serious test and it has proven to be able to draw the adequate conclusions from the series of conflicts. The renewed trade union movement, which is growing in prestige, is visible proof of the renewed confidence of the working class and of its public activity. Another decisive component of the elimination of the confidence crisis is the strengthening of the workers-peasants alliance in the period between the two congresses. [passage omitted]

The 10th PZPR Congress -- as the first secretary of the Central Committee has put it -- opens up a qualitatively new phase of a policy oriented toward general consensus. The dialogue and constructive cooperation with the Polish Catholic Church, which represents many millions of believers, together with the consistent implementation of the constitutional principle separating the state from the church continue to be the elements of this policy.

Understandably, in addition to the political and social achievements and tasks, particular stress was put at the congress on the economy. There was hardly a speaker who did not tackle in one form or other issues like efficiency, energy saving, and better work organization. [passage omitted]

Consistent implementation of the economic reform is the condition for a breakthrough in efficiency and the setting of the country on the road of intensive development. And this is the only guarantee for the implementation of structural changes and technical and technological modernizations in the industry so that the country can become a state with a modern industrial basis by the end of the century. There is no visible easy success on this road as the goal to achieve the level prior to the crisis by the end of the current plan period must be achieved under difficult economic circumstances. [passage omitted]

The long-term program adopted by the 10th PZPR Congress and submitted to society outlines the possibilities for the developmente of Poland and the continuation of socialist renewal. This program is suitable for the collaboration of the forces of the Polish society irrespective of ideological differences. And this is also the guarantee for its implementation.

PZPR SECRETARIAT HOLDS FIRST MEETING 4 JUL

LD042142 Warsaw PAP in English 2100 GMT 4 Jul 86

MOKRZYSZCZAK VIEWS STATUTE AT CLOSED SESSION

AU071334 Warsaw TRYBUNA LUDU in Polish 2 July 86 p 6

[Speech by Wlodzimierz Mokrzyszczak, PZPR Central Committee secretary, at a closed session of the PZPR 10th Congress in Warsaw on 30 June]

[Text] Comrade Delegates! The 10th Congress Commission for PZPR Statute Affairs submits draft amendments to the party statute and to the rules governing the election of party delegates, party authorities, and control organs of the PZPR. These draft amendments are the result of intensive work carried out by the Congress Commission Working Party set up by the 13th PZPR Central Committee Plenum, and by a broad and competent circle of members of the central party authorities, the Central Committee Internal Commission, the party aktiv, and delegates to the 10th Congress.

One can say with complete conviction and justification that the proposed amendments to the party statute -- the fundamental document regulating our ideological, political, and organizational life -- stem from the experience of the entire party. These proposals take account of the suggestions, observations, and opinions voiced by party members, and party organizations and echelons. The proposals utilize material accumulated during the course of preparing the draft regulations governing elections within the party, which, in line with the resolution adopted at the Ninth Congress, were adopted by the National Delegate Conference. The proposed amendments make use of the ideas and suggestions formulated during the course of the precongress campaign, during individual interviews with party members and candidate members, and during discussion at precongress meetings and conferences. The proposals also stem from study of the theoretical achievements and practical activities of fraternal parties in socialist countries.

The statute adopted at the Ninth Congress has proved its worth in practice. The party acts in accordance witdh the statute by undertaking concrete and creative initiatives and by its activity. By doing so the party recovered its strength, its efficiency of operation, and its ability to lead and to direct, and it strengthened its ranks.

The proposed amendments aim to strengthen the many innovative mechanisms for PZPR functioning and operation inspired by the Ninth Congress.

In line with the decisions adopted at the 16th, 11th, and 19th PZPR Central Committee Plenums, it is proposed that the party statute give greater emphasis to the party's workers' class character and the role of the workers' class as vanguard and leader in the construction of socialisim. It is proposed that the statute stress that in determining programs and objectives of social and economic development the party is guided by the interestsd of the workers, which are combined with those of the peasants and the intelligentsia. The statute should indicate that it is the party's task to develop the socialist awareness of workers, peasants, and intellectuals, to raise the level of their political and ideological knowledge, and to ensure that workers and peasants are appropriately represented in party ranks and governing bodies, in representative organs, and in self-managemnet organizations.

For the purpose of strengthening the party's bonds with society and to increase society's influence on our policies, it is proposed that worker consultative committees be formed and attached to party committees -- the committees should be made up of the best nonparty workers and peasants -- and that obligatory open basic party cell meetings be held at least once a year. The Leninist character of our party will also be strengthened by making it possible for new candidate members to be admitted into the ranks of the party at such open meetings.

The proposed changes offer a more precise definition of the tasks and role of party members in the system of socialist democracy -- people's councils, self-management bodies, and territorial self-government. This is because it is the party's duty to continually raise the standing of such bodies, to ensure that fuller use is made of existing rights and powers, and that such bodies exercise a greater influence on the work of the state and economic administrations, and on activity in the private sector.

Of considerable social and political importance are those proposed changes designed to strengthen the principles of party cadre policy formulated by the 13th PZPR Central Committee Plenum. These proposals give wider powers as well as duties to basic party cells and committees, especially with regard to assessing and recommending candidates for managerial posts. The proposals oblige the bodies in question to conduct regular personnel performance appraisals, and to be particularly incisive in examining and responding to mismanagement, waste, and lack of discipline on the part of people entrusted with state and public property.

In view of the positive experience obtained during the recent precongress campaign, it is proposed -- as a permanent form of party work -- that regular interviews by conducted with party members and candidate members for the purposes of ascertaining opinions and activating, explaining, and disciplining. Such interviews would take place twice during the course of a cell's term of office, before the national delegate conference and the congress.

It is proposed that a statutory rank be given to a new form of work for the Central Committee, the briefing and consultative meetings held for members of the central party authorities. These meetings serve the purpose of mutual briefing, clarification, and enrich our knowledge and experience. It is proposed that this form of work be extended to all tiers of activity to facilitate comprehensive discussion and consultation on various issues connected with subjects discused at committee plenary meetings, and with party activity.

A whole package of proposals is designed to strengthen the ideological and organizational cohesion in party ranks, and to increase party organization and echelon responsibility for our ranks; for the quality, social composition, and size of party ranks. These proposals will result in the introduction of new mechanisms, which will obligate party committees to approve basic party cell resolutions on admissions, expulsions, and the application of disciplinary measures. These proposals will give more precise form to rules concerning the party internal judicature.

In response to suggestions, it is proposed that the statute contain provisions enabling basic party cells and committees to accord distinction to party members who stand out at their place of work and residence on account of commitment and activity in implementing party resolutions and discharging party tasks.

The proposals also meet the expectations of party members who are retired, pensioned, or disabled and want to continue to participate in the life of the party in line with their powers and capabilities.

It is proposed that basic cells be given the right to release such members from the obligation of performing certain organizational duties in response to requests.

Bearing in mind the need to continually improve the internal life of the party, it is proposed that the Central Committee be given a statutory right to search for and introduce, during the course of its term of office, various experimental structural innovations in the party. It is envisaged that this would particularly concern the functioning of party cells in multi-factory enterprises and industrial combines, town residential areas, rural areas, and occuptional environments. Such solutions would, once they had been examined and their effect on party work assessed, be subject to approval by the party congress.

Comrades, another group of proposed amendments is intended to give more precise form to certain provisions and regulations contained in the statute. The purpose of these amendments is to increase the efficiency and effectiveness of political and organizational activity engaged in by party organizations, committees, and control organs.

The proposals concern improving an area of great importance for the party, that of accountability and program formulation. A need for changes in this area was stressed very strongly at the 20th PZPR Central Committee Plenum. Party organizations and committees frequently drew attention to this, noting an excessive number of resolutions, inconsistent work, and the bureaucratization of work. We propose defining more precisely the programmatic and legislative competence of conferences and committees, and their executive organs. We propose making the length of term of office for party authorities at all levels 5 years, and reducing the number of plenary meetings to enable committees to focus their attention on the implementation of resolutions, the performance of inspirational and control functions, and on work with basic cells and party members. These steps would serve to strengthen the bond between party governing bodies and workplace communities and work forces.

The further consolidation of the position and role of the primary party organizations in party life should be effected by measures that define more closely these organizations' duties and rights and by statutory enactments that map out tasks for shop party organizations and for party groups. The fact that it is necessary to extend the party's political-organizational influence and to rationally develop and deploy party ranks has produced the proposal that the present rule that at least five party members are required to set up the primary party organization should be changed to reduce this requirement to three party members.

Taking into account the demands of young people that young party members should be able to participate in party life on a larger scale, it has been proposed that the primary party organizations should have the right to reduce the period of party candidatures and the waiting period before party members are able to stand for election as congress delegates, as members of party authorities and control bodies, and as party political workers.

It has also been proposed that party committees should elect first secretaries from among their own members during the party congress and the accountability conferences and should discuss the candidates with the delegates before hand. In this way the election of first secretaries on these occasions will be the same as on any other occasion during the term between the congresses.

The Ninth PZPR Congress amended the party statute to the effect that elected functionaries may discharge their functions in the party executive bodies without break for only two consecutive office terms. We propose to retain this rule and to preserve the principle that the mandate of a delegate is valid throughout the term of the given party authorities.

Comrades, the draft amendments to the statute contain new political-organizational solutions with regard to control activities in the party. During the precongress consultations the comrade delegates generally approved of the proposal that single control-revision commission should be set up at every level of party activities. The control-revision commission would continue to be set up by the congress and the accountability conferences and would report to these bodies. Its tasks would include all the present commitments of the revision commission and the party control commission. It would discharge control, adjudicating, and revision duties in close cooperation with party committees and their problem commissions.

These proposals seek to raise the status of the control bodies in the party, to ensure a better coordination of adjudicating and revision activities with the work of the party committees, and to simplify the party's organizational structures.

During the consultations you have also agreed to the proposal that it should be possible to include the commission's chairman in the executive body of the committee of the same status and to preserve the general principle that the function of the committee member must not be combined with the function of the member of the control-revision commission of the same status.

The 10th Congress statute commission submits these proposals in the conviction that they will ensure the continuity and rich achievements of the activities that the control bodies have registered since the Ninth Congress in consolidating the ideopolitical and organizational unity of the party, in increasing discipline, and in raising the effectiveness of the implementation of the resolutions.

Esteemed comrades, the proposed amendments are a result of our efforts to look for new and more effective methods of party performance so that the effectiveness of party activities can be raised.

The draft amendments to the statute that we have recommended to you retain the continuity of the ideological and political-organizational principles and solutions adopted by the Ninth Congress, consolidate, improve, and develop the achievements of this congress, and preserve the structure, the sequence of the chapters, and the items of the statute and the election rules. The draft amendments also leave "The Rules for Electing Delegates, Authorities, and Bodies of Control in the PZPR" as an integral party of the party statute. The proposals submitted to you are meant to supplement, improve, and define more closely the statutory enactments.

The draft amendments to the statute and election rules take into account the views that the comrade delegates expressed during the discussion of the materials devised by the Congress Commission team and addressed to you by the 16th Central Committee Plenum. The discussion of these materials adopted all these views and generally stressed that they are identical with the proposals and demands put forward within the party and party activities and with the need to improve our party work.

Comrades delegates, the 10th Congress Statute Commission held a preliminary discussion of the proposed amendments at its first meeting. The commission members gathered the observations of the delegates from the individual voivodships, were on information duty during the breaks in the congress sessions, continued to collect new observations from the congress delegates, and gave explanations.

At its second meeting the commission examined and discussed the observations submitted by the congress delegates, clarified various doubtful points, and took a stand on the proposed amendments to the statute and the election rules.

The commission takes the view that it is desirable and necessary to approve of the draft amendments as presented to the congress delegates and expresses the conviction that the solutions adopted by these amendments will be of good service to the party.

I have been authorized by the commission to ask the 10th PZPR Congress to adopt the draft amendments to the PZPR statute and the rules for electing delegates, authorities, and bodies of control in the PZPR.

MOKRZYSZCAK DISCUSSES CONTROL, AUDIT COMMISSION

LD061728 Warsaw Domestic Service in Polish 1005 GMT 6 Jul 86

[Interview with Wlodzimierz Mokrzyszczak, member of the PZPR Central Committee Politburo and chairman of the party's Control and Audit Commission, with unidentified interviewer — date and place not specified; recorded].

[Text] [Announcer] The 10th PZPR Congress ended on Thursday with, among other things, information about the composition of the party leadership in which there has been change, not only of personnel but of a substantive nature. Wlodzimierz Mokrzyszczak because chairman of the Control and Auditing Commission and a member of the Politburo. There are three changes here: The first is that the chairman of the party controlling body now enters the executive body; the second is that the Auditing Commission is now joined to the Control Commission; and third, there is a kind of raising of the status of the commission concerned with control. In this connection, here is the first question: What are the reasons for this unification?

[Mokrzyszczak] Before I answer the question, I must precisely define the course. The party Control and Audit Commission, just as with both the Central Control Commission and the Central Party Control Commission before, is chosen by the congress, is answerable to the congress, and presents a report of its activity and I was chosen to be chairman of this Central Control and Auditing Commission. Only later was I chosen by the Central Committee as a Politburo member.

This is important because it is not a matter of automatic selection. The Central Committee does not designate the chairman, but the chairman -- democratically selected at the Central Commission -- has the right, in accordance with the statute, to put forward his candidature to the party executive bodies, in our central case, to the Politburo; in the case of the voivodships, to the executive.

[Interviewer] But here we have several unifications -- we have the joining together of two commissions.

[Mokrzyszczak] Of course. The proposals were presented already before the congress. All the delegates had an opportunity to aquaint themselves with the proposals, which they did. Observations were also sent to us and additional explanations were also requested. This continued during the proceeding of the Statute Commission at the congress itself but, as you remember, after all these explanations and discussions in depth, an improved and completed statute was unanimously approved.

How did the idea of joining the two commissions arise? Well, above all, it is important to gain greater efficiency. All the congress delegates, or almost all them, spoke of our need for greater efficiency and acknowledged the entire work of the Central Committee and also that of the government and the Sejm of the last convocation.

But there are resolutions concerning this efficiency. The report by Comrade Jaruzelski had broad relevance and this is, above all, [word indistinct]. And so, this means the internal simplification of this idea, because how it worked was that the Central Commission executed its controls, registered them, worked on material, introduced it at meetings of the Politburo, from which something would result. And again, after the Politburo, it had to be presented -- of course, in extreme situations -- to the Central Party Control Commission. So there was this organizational procession, a lengthy way of controlling, checking, establishing the guilty parties if they exist, and drawing the appropriate conclusions.

[Interviewer] In general, if one looked at the Central Party Control Commission, the first impression was that this was a commission for throwing out of the party those people who did something wrong, who acted contrary to the statute, and so on. The Audit Commission, in turn, was at first sight the checking of the profitability of subscriptions. That is how it looked superficially. In essence, the Audit Commission concerned itself with many other matters but now, I think that the linking of these two commissions inclines us toward recalling what this joint body is to concern itself with now. It is really only with organizational and membership affairs? Or, for example, will you have the right to analyze, let us say, matters concerning the party's ideological unity.

[Mokrzyszczak] In reality, it only looked like this superficially because those elements for punishing party members, including in this the highest punishments, were manifested externally. Less was said or information given about this [as heard], although there was always discussion of this at plenary meetings of the Central Party Control Commission. It was presented by the former chairman, Jerzy Urbanski, and the educational function was strongly emphasized as was the reconciliation of party members who had been punished. Great work was done in this commission, specifically in this area. A considerable section of the party membership was simply being (?slandered). They reached pronouncement teams [zespowy orzekajace] but, as a result of a very detailed study of the matter, they were cleared of these reproaches. But the commissions also, in this case the party Control Commission, adhered to and will continue to adhere to ... that is, our united one ... the adherence by party members to statutory duties, including ideological, program and organizational duties. [sentence as heard] As far as this is concerned, nothing changes. It must simply be conducted very reliably and honestly.

Well, since there were opinions at the congress about the fact that, here and there, there were examples of the suppression of criticism, examples even of arrogance, lack of economic management, abuses -- well, we will be strongly condemning this in relation to party members. However, in the control sphere, we should organize work now, after the congress, in such a way as to look at the harmony between the resolutions of all other conferences which will be held during the autumn campaign -- and the congress resolutions.

[Interviewer] [Words indistinct] question which I wanted to put to you, that, in a certain sense, this new Control and Audit Commission should rather, perhaps, fulfill to a greater extent the role of something like a constitutional tribunal, that means, to examine the harmony between the resolutions of various echelons, workplace committees, and even basic organizations and the statute and the program covered by the resolutions of the 10th Congress.

[Mokrzyszczak] We will be controlling the resolutions of the 10th Congress. Later, there will be the resolutions of the Central Committee, the Politburo, and we will be harmonizing them since this is also one of the guarantees of efficiency, of the introduction of [word indistinct].

MIODOWICZ PRESENTS VIEWS ON CONGRESS, UNIONS

Meeting With Union Leaders

LD042151 Warsaw PAP in English 1925 GMT 4 Jul 86

[Text] Warsaw, July 4 -- On today's first day after the Tenth Congress of the PUWP, national trade union group OPZZ leader Alfred Miodowicz, who was one of the delegates, met with senior activists of central trade union bodies and heads of Warsaw's largest factory trade unions. He briefed the unionists on the results of the congress and its significance for the labour movement in Poland.

"Activity of union members at the congress of the party in no way restricted free, independent flow of union thinking," Miodowicz said.

"The election of the OPZZ chairman into the PUWP CC Political Bureau reflected the party's appreciation for the reborn labour movement and reaffirmed the latter's class character -- pointed out in congress resolution calling for continuation of the hitherto, clear political line of the unions," he added.

"The election also has practical significance, as it uplifts the position of the OPZZ and consequently of the nationwide federations, allowing the unions to shape their relations with the state and economic administration from the position of an equal partner," Miodowicz said.

Head of the PUWP CC social and labour department Stanislaw Gabrielski stressed the party did not want a return to the pre-1980 model of relations with the unions.

"Drawing conclusions from the past, and thinking of the country's future, the Tenth Congress has confirmed that the party hopes for an independent, authentic labour movement that would become a motive power for reforms and changes in the process of socialist renewal," Gabrielski told the unionists.

Radio Interview

LD061819 Warsaw Domestic Service in Polish 1005 GMT 6 Jul 86

[Interview with Alfred Miodowicz, member of the PZPR Central Committee Politburo and chairman of the OPZZ, with unidentified interviewer; date and place not specified -- recorded]

[Text] [Interviewer] Taking part in this program is Alfred Miodowicz, chairman of the OPZZ. While we were still arranging the interview he was not yet a member of the Politburo but he has been a member since the last day of the congress. But I would nevertheless like us to speak about the topic we agreed on earlier, that is, about the preparations of the trade unions for the congress.

[Miodowicz] We agreed on this earlier but I hope that both in the way things are and also as regards the way I imagine the expectations of trade unionists from our congress -- some trade unionists speak about a second assembly -- nothing has chaged as regards the OPZZ, and nor should I change. But let me answer the question.

The second assembly -- and perhaps, and I stress perhaps, the congress of the trade unions -- will be held in the last 10 days of November in Warsaw. Our preparations are well advanced and this is why we can already speak of certain details.

[Interviewer] I think the most important matter is what you have already presented to trade unionists, that is a draft program of the trade unions.

[Miodowicz] That's right. Indeed, the program and the proposed amendments in the OPZZ statute are in the form of two drafts, preliminary drafts of course, the broad discussion which is of fundamental importance for the future of the Polish class-based trade union movement. We wish to continue what we started in Bytom. In other words, we wish to state clearly why class-based trade unions function. They exist to defend those who belong to that class. One thing is certain for us: All working people are included because it is very difficult to differentiate between those who are in the trade unions and working and those who are not in the trade unions and also working -- and some of them are very good workers. This is why we speak about all working people in general.

[Interviewer] I have my own particular way of putting things when I have to formulate something as regards working people, because here one always says the working class and working people in general. I replace this formulation with the formulation honest working people. And this is my question to the OPZZ chairman: A trade union whose task it is to defend the worker could not be a proper trade union if it did not exert an influence on this worker, or even sometimes remove a bad worker from its ranks.

[Miodowicz] We must look at what is practiced in work teams. I would like to relate this to my work of more than 30 years in a team in the iron and steel industry which was in charge of a big furnace. Thus, trade unions should behave like people in the team. The team is a sort of workers' collective, fulfilling an important task. If a team wants to exist and the people in the team wish to earn something then they must absolutely eliminate those individuals who act in a detrimental fashion, whose jobs have to be done by someone else, who have to be stood in for, or of whom the team cannot be certain -- certain in the sense of safety. This is why we should take the example of teams. Teams eliminate dishonest individuals from their ranks. Trade unions cannot, of course, put things in such an explicit manner because dishonesty is often connected with many conditions. For instance, what does a dishonest peasant-worker mean who has not turned up for work in a factory when something important is happening at his garden allotment, let us say, when he has something to harvest. As a worker, he most certainly is dishonest but he has grounds for this. In this connection we should go halfway to meet them, to some extent. But a drunkard, a work-shirker, a rogue, and a rascal are a different kettle of fish. People like this should not be in factories. And I think that trade unions acting in a sensible manner never defend people like this.

[Interviewer] We know that housing is your hobby, so to speak. If the OPZZ chairman becomes a member of the Politburo, then do you think you will have a greater chance of overcoming this stagnation in housing construction. Because, let's not beat about the bush, we are now building less than ever before.

[Miodowicz] I do not know if one can use a demagogic statement of fact in such a serious conversation. If one looks at the superficial activities we are now carrying out for the housing construction industry -- superficial because something is quoted, something is done, ministries are amalgamated, and then there is no minister in this amalgamated ministry -- then I arrive at a sad reflection: and I should note right from the start that I don't know if my reflection is irrational but it is tinged with a certain sadness and gloom in this matter.

The thing is that all those who are trying to do something to make sure that someone else gets a dwelling already have a dwelling of their own. And in this connection how is the one with enough supposed to understand the hungry one? And this is where the whole problem lies. Of course, it would be difficult to transfer those people with enough to huts, but otherwise, they cannot get a feel of this problem.

Now the congress, and the Politburo before this, in adopting the trade union concept of solutions, expressed itself very well and unambiguously in this matter. I am convinced that apart from work there must be a nest for the sake of social calm, for the sake of what we call social justice, and for the sake of what we define as being concern for the young generation.

Why a nest? Well, a bird will build a nest for itself, will put one together from twigs, let us say. If in our country people had the opportunity of building their own houses, in a certain spot -- because a bird has at least its own branch which it can call its own -- and in our country some people will do this -- and I even think that allocations should be handed out more generously in Poland -- and if greater freedom was given, then things would get moving.

But the only thing is that, here in Poland, everything must be arranged from the top. Perhaps a statute, and if not a statute then perhaps the Council of Ministers, could issue something. Or perhaps something could be done at grass roots level. And I am very pleased that something is being done at grass roots level. I would like to stress that much is being done in factory-sponsored construction. Much is happening in what we call civic initiative, sponsored construction. These are the initiatives. Unfortunately, it is only a drop in the ocean.

FOREIGN DELEGATION LEADERS MEET WITH WORKERS

Lenart Addresses Warsaw Workers

LD012142 Prague Domestic Service in Czech and Slovak 1700 GMT 1 Jul 86

[Text] The plenary discussion on the report by the party Central Committee resumed this afternoon at the 10th PZPR Congress.

At a meeting today [1 July] with representatives of workers of the Warsaw Ursus plant, a speech was given by the head of the CPCZ delegation to the congress, Jozef Lenart, member of the CPCZ Central Committee Presidium and first secretary of the CPSL Central Committee. He spoke highly of results achieved in the struggle with the counter-revolutionary forces and in consolidating the life of society in Poland. He expressed the conviction that the congress would be a new stimulus for a full resumption of the dynamism of economic development, for speeding up scientific and technical progress, and for the further consolidation and development of the state.

Jozef Lenart then spoke about the tasks set out by the 17th CPCZ Congress. In this context he pointed out that the objectives which Czechoslovak society has set for itself cannot be attained without cooperation with the countries of the socialist community. The head of the Czechoslovak party delegation referred to the recent session of the Political Consultative Committee in Budapest, which showed the Warsaw Pact is the principal factor for guaranteeing world peace. Czechoslovakia is convinced that the socialist countries, in close cooperation with all peace-loving, democratic and progressive forces in the world, will succeed in averting the danger of nuclear war and attaining a positive upturn in international relations, Jozef Lenart concluded.

Radovic Addresses Factory Workers

LD012222 Belgrade TANJUG Domestic Service in Serbo-Croatian 1355 GMT 1 Jul 86

[Text] Warsaw, 1 Jul (TANJUG) -- This morning the LCY delegation attending the 10th PZPR Congress visited the FSO car factory in Warsaw. The members of the delegation -- Miljan Radovic, member of the LCY Central Committee Presidium and president of the Central Committee of the Montenegro LC, Vjekoslav Juricic, member of the LCY Central Committee, and Ambassador Milivoje Maksic -- met the aktiv of the factory which employs about 14,000 workers.

During the meeting, on behalf of the LCY and the working class of Yugoslav nations and nationalities, Miljan Radovic wished the 10th Congress successful work, stressing that the LCY follows with attention the efforts of the Polish party and of all socialist and democratic forces in society to provide an answer to the current problems of the social and economic development of the country. "The drafts of the party documents which the 10th Congress must adopt, especially the draft PZPR program confirm the loyalty of Polish Communists to the policy of socialist renewal in the country, to the policy of negotiations, and also to the policy of the Ninth Congress which received broad support from the Polish public. We are aware of the complex nature of the conditions and of the seriousness of the task you are confronting, but we are also aware of the resolve of the progressive forces in your society led by the PZPR to resolve these tasks. By implementing this line the Polish Communists are also contributing to the diversity and to the wealth of the paths of socialist development in the world."

Highly praising the relations between the two countries and cooperation between the LCY and the PZPR, Radovic said that "our relations have been traditionally friendly and close, and the principles which we both observe have made it possible for these relations to be successful and to develop dynamically. Our side is ready to enrich further and comprehensibly develop this cooperation, convinced as we are that it is an expression of the wishes and aspirations of our peoples, and that to promote our relations constantly is in our mutual interest, and in the interests of peace, social progress, and socialism."

Speaking about the 13th LCY Congress which has just ended, Radovic said that most important meetings of Yugoslav Communists placed a strong emphasis especially on the issues concerning further socialist development. "This is normal because a critical reexamination of one's own practice, on the basis of the criteria and principles of our system is the condition for progress, for the further march forward of the Yugoslav socialist revolution. The further development of strategic orientations which we adopted under Tito -- independence, equality, and brotherhood and unity of our nations and nationalities, self-management, and the constant democratization of social relations -- are the criteria, goal, and the essence of our efforts to further develop our socialist community."

Speaking of international problems Radovic stressed that "it is obvious that the existing system of international political and economic relations, weighed down by bloc, ideological, political, and other divisions, is not in a position to ensure a more tranquil and safer life, to absorb the processes of emancipation and democratization, and to deal with the vital interests and aspirations of mankind for peace, stability, and social progress. This is testified to by the escalation of the arms race, local wars and military interventions, as well as pressure and interference in the internal affairs of sovereign countries."

Having noted the struggle for peace, for the relaxation of international tension and disarmament, and the struggle for new and equitable political and economic relations in the world are priorities for all countries and all progressive democratic and peace-loving forces in the world, Radovic stressed: "we are convinced that an irreplaceable role in solving these problems must be played by the Nonaligned Movement and policy whose authentic objectives and principles express the vital and lasting interests of all progressive forces in the world. The political and moral force of the movement is derived precisely from these principles and active peace-loving policy and this has made it possible for it to assert itself as an independent, autonomous, and global factor in international relations."

CPSU DELEGATION MEETS WITH POLISH ORGANIZATIONS

Warsaw Friendship House

LD011730 Warsaw Domestic Service in Polish 1410 GMT 1 Jul 86

[Text] A meeting between the Soviet delegation, which is attending the 10th PZPR Congress, and representatives from scientific and research institutions and enterprises is being held at the House of Polish-Soviet Friendship in Warsaw. These institutions and enterprises cooperate with the USSR. The meeting aims at acquainting the Soviet guests with experiences and courses of cooperation between Polish and Soviet organizations of similar profile. The cooperation concerns 102 enterprises and 47 development and research units. Representatives of party and government leadership, managers, first secretaries of factory committees, trade unions, and self-management chairmen are present here. Deputy Premier Zbigniew Szalajda cordially greeted the guests.

[Begin Szalajda recording] I cordially welcome Comrade Eduard Shevardnadze, CPSU Central Committee Politburo member and minister of foreign affairs. [applause] I cordially greet comrade Aleksandr Yakovlev, secretary of the CPSU Central Committee. [applause] I welcome USSR ambassador Comrade Brovikov and the remaining comades. [applause]

Esteemed and dear Soviet guests, esteemed comrades: Cooperation between Poland and the USSR has been the foundation of our country's economic development for 41 years. The base of this cooperation was shaped during the rebuilding of Poland after war destruction when the rebuilding was largely characterized by comprehensive Soviet help. In recent years, our cooperation has increased further. Traditional forms of cooperation are not enough. For over 2 years we have been developing direct cooperation between enterprises and research and scientific institutes. Today's meeting testifies to the importance that both of our countries attach to this form of cooperation. The cooperation should serve to better the knowledge of the potentials and capabilities of the partners; joint research teams and joint design offices should emerge. Appropriate conditions have been created for developing cooperation and they are still improving. However, there are still many things that need to be improved. [end recording]

At the end of the meeting Eduard Shevardnadze, USSR minister of foreign affairs, rose to speak. He said among other things:

[Begin Shevardnadze recording in Russian with superimposed Polish translation] The brotherhood of our parties and nations and your fruitful activity simply build bridges between nations and serve peace and humanity. I came to this conviction touring some of your enterprises known in the world market. Our coopertion has reached a stage that guarantees that the tragic lot of our states and our nations does not repeat itself.

On behalf of myself and all the matters of the USSR delegation, I wish you great success in building socialism. [end recording]

[Text] After the end of the 10th PZPR Congress, Wojciech Jaruzelski, first secretary of the PZPR Central Committee, together with members of the newly chosen Politburo and Secretariat of the PZPR Central Committee, met in the Palace of the Council of Ministers in Warsaw with the heads of delegations of fraternal communist and workers' parties, organizations, and national liberation movements taking part in the congress deliberations. Representatives of the state authorities and members of the leaderships of the allied political parties of our country participated in the meeting. The main subject of the meeting was the course and results of the deliberations of the highest forum of the PZPR.

Orzechowski, Shevardnadze Meet

LD031801 Warsaw PAP in English 1743 GMT 3 Jul 86

[Text] Warsaw, July 3 -- Poland's Foreign Minister Marian Orzechowski and senior Foreign Ministry officials had a meeting here today with Soviet Foreign Minister Eduard Shevardnadze, a CPSU Central Committee Political Bureau member, who is attending the PUWP Congress. The two exchanged views on some current international issues and problems relating to bilateral relations of interest to both sides. They said that under the complex international situation at present, the socialist community states are fully determined to wage continued struggle against the threat of war, in favour of democratizing the entire system of international relations and restructuring it fundamentally on principles of universal and equal security. This course in the foreign policy of fraternal states was again confirmed with determination in the PUWP CC report delivered at the 10th PUWP Congress by PUWP CC First Secretary Wojciech Jaruzelski and in the speech made in the same forum by CPSU CC General Secretary Mikhail Gorbachev.

The sides stated with satisfaction that concerted actions taken by the socialist community states in the international arena have been further stepped up. The meeting of the Consultative Political Committee of states-parties to the Warsaw Treaty in Budapest, at which the allied states came up with a proposal concerning conventional armed forces and arms reductions in Europe, was a crucial stage in going along the road of further strengthening the cooperation among the countries in question. The above proposal forms a vital supplement to the programme for total liquidation of nuclear arms and other mass annihilation weapons.

The ministers came out in favour of a positive conclusion of the first stage of Stockholm Conference on Security and Confidence-Building Measures and Disarmament in Europe. Adoption of mutual arrangements at the Vienna talks on armed forces and arms reductions in central Europe would favour detente on the continent, they said.

The sides voiced both countries' determination to take — in cooperation with the other brotherly states - active steps in favour of putting into life an agreed course in foreign policy aimed to remove the threat of a nuclear war and to strengthen world peace.

LCY Delegation Meetings

[Text] Warsaw, 2 Jul (ADN) -- Willi Stoph, member of the SED Central Committee Politburo and chairman of the GDR Council of Ministers, and Zbigniew Messner, member of the PZPR Central Committee Politburo and chairman of the PPR Council of Ministers, came together for a friendly meeting on Wednesday [2 July].

On behalf of Erich Honecker, general secretary of the SED Central Committee and chairman of the GDR Council of State Willi Stoph presented Zbigniew Messner with the order, "Star of International Friendship" in gold, in tribute to outstanding services for friendship and cooperation of the two fraternal parties and neighboring socialist states and for the maintenance of peace. Zbigniew Messner expressed his gratitude for the high award with cordial words.

In a talk afterward, there was agreement in stressing that the further expansion of the traditional relations of close friendship and cooperation between the GDR and the PPR will also be shaped beneficially in the future, for the solution of the tasks of both countries, the good of both peoples, and the strengthening of the power and influence of the socialist community. In view of the danger to peace, which are growing further and are created by the imperialist striving for military superiorty, this trusting cooperation was of great importance for the maintenance of peace and for security in Europe.

URBAN DENOUNCES PRIEST FOR 'DISHONESTY'

LD042111 Warsaw in English 1920 GMT 4 Jul 86

[Text] Warsaw, July 4 -- The Polish Government spokesman charged Father Jan Iminski with dishonesty and immorality after the latter broke a vow to make public his apology for slandering Jerzy Urban without comment. As reported earlier, Uminski was used by the minister for slandering him in a sermon delivered at St. Alexander's Church in Suwalki, north-eastern Poland, last April 6 in which he compared the government spokesman to the Nazi propaganda chief Goebbels and declared him worse still for throwing mud on his own people and trampling on the most sacred national rights. With a clear prospect for a sentence at the Suwalki court's closed session last month, Father Uminski revoked his allegations and vowed to read an agreed text of an apology to believers in St. Alexander's Church. When he read the text, which said the allegations were "objectively untrue" and that he "did not mean to slander anyone", he said he had apologized because he went by the religious principle of loving one's enemies and those who do wrong without being aware of the fact.

Father Uminski's commentary "created an impression that it was Uminski who was wronged," Urban told PAP, when due to breach of promise by Uminski, Urban considered himself relieved of his vow not comment in public on the apology. "Father Uminski's commentary was aimed to blur the sense of his apology," Minister Urban said. "Such politicising priests use religious notions as a wrapping for political instigation. In his statement of June 29 Uminski used religious substance to effect a breach of faith and to shield his dishonest action, deprived of rudimentary integrity," the minister charged. Minister Urban said his statement for PAP was meant to "show the morals of some of the few priests who (are busy) abusing religious functions for political utterances full of hatred and levelled against the socialist system." He described as an illustration of that kind of immorality Father Uminski's statement of June 29, in which he "reversed the sense of what he had voluntarily signed to avoid punishment and which he was supposed to read to the congregation."

When Minister Urban arrived in Suwalki court for the conciliatory session June 23, a crowd of believers, mostly elderly women, flooded the area in front of the court building and the insides but they were perfectly unaware of the actual substance of the suit. They only knew a priest was being tried, or oppressed and persecuted. They showered Uminski with flowers when he finally emerged from the courtroom. "That is another manifestation of abusing people's religious emotions to raise applause for postures and values incompatible with religious moralizing," Minister Urban said. "The man who was showered with flowers and was kissed on the hands was the one who glorified Goebbels in public by saying he was a defender of the German people," Urban added. "It was in good faith that I had consented to agreement in court and to dropping the charge, that is to relieving Father Uminski of punishment, as I thought it was enough if he made an apology and retracted his libel," Urban confessed. "It turned out I was naive, when I believed that he would effect the agreement honestly, without prevarication. I consider naivety in politics as misdemeanour."

PRC PREMIER MAKES 'FRIENDSHIP' VISIT TO ROMANIA

Zhao Ziyang Arrives

AU021531 Bucharest AGERPRES in English 1459 GMT 2 Jul 86

[Text] Bucharest AGERPRES 2/7/1986 -- Invited by Romanian Communist Party General Secretary Nicolae Ceausescu, president of Romania, and by Romanian Prime Minister Constantin Dascalescu, on July second Zhao Ziying, member of the Permanent Committee of the Political Bureau of the CC of the Communist Party of China, premier of the People's Republic of China, arrived in Bucharest to pay an official visit of friendship to Romania.

The Chinese premier is accompanied on his visit by Lu Dong, chairman of the State Economic Commission; Qian Qichen, deputy foreign minister; Wang Pinqing, deputy minister of economic relations and foreign trade; Bao Tong, deputy chairman of the state Committee for Restructuring of the Economic System; and other officials.

Off the plane, Premier Zhao Ziyang was cordially welcomed by Constantin Dascalescu. Attending were First Deputy Prime Minister Ion Dinca, chairman for Romania in the Romanian-Chinese Joint Governmental Commission on Economic and Technical Collaboration: Deputy Prime Minister Nicolae Constantin; ministers; and other officials. Romania's Beijing ambassador, Angelo Miculescu, and China's Bucharest ambassador, Yu Hongliang, as well as the members of the Chinese Embassy were present.

In honour of the Chinese premier military guards were lined at the airport. The state anthems of the People's Republic of China and of the Socialist Republic of Romania were played. Romania Young Pioneers and young Chinese offered flowers.

The Romanian visit of the Chinese premier is an event of greatest importance in the history of the traditional friendly relations and tight collaboration between Romania and the People's China. Meanwhile the new summit dialogue is an expression of the preoccupation with providing further expansion to the collaboration between the Socialist Republic of Romania and the People's Republic of China, between the Romanian Communist Party and the Communist Party of China, in the interest and for the benefit of the two peoples and countries, of the general cause of socialism and peace in the world.

Ziyang Makes Statement

AU021735 Bucharest AGERPRES in English 1519 GMT 2 Jul 86

["Statement by Premier Zhao Ziyang" -- AGERPRES headline]

[Text] Bucharest AGERPRES 2/7/1986 -- It is with great pleasure that I have come to Romania for an official good-will visit at the invitation of Comrade Nicolae Ceausescu, general-secretary of the Romanian Communist Party and president of the Socialist Republic of Romania, and Comrade Prime Minister Constantin Dascalescu. While setting foot on the soil of your beautiful country, I wish to express, on behalf of the Chinese Communist Party, the Chinese Government and people, our warm greetings to the Romanian Communist Party, the Romanian Government and people.

The relations between the two parties and countries have been very close. In recent years, highest-ranking party and government leaders of the two countries have met annually.

This has given a strong impetus to the steady growth of Sino-Romanian friendly relations and cooperation. My current visit to Romania is also for deepening Sino-Romanian mutual understanding and friendship and further promoting the all-round friendly relations and cooperation between the two countries.

During the visit, I shall have an in-depth exchange of views with Comrade Ceausescu, Comrade Dascalescu and other Romanian leaders on international issues of mutual concern and ways to further develop the bilateral relations. I shall also take this opportunity to get to know Romania's achievements and study its experience in socialist construction. I hope that my current visit will contribute to increased Sino-Romanian friendly relations and cooperation and to the maintenance of world peace.

Official Talks Start

AU041917 Bucharest SCINTEIA in Romanian 3 Jul 86 p 5

[Text] On July 2 official talks were held between Romanian Prime Minister Constantin Dascalescu and the premier of the People's China, Zhao Ziyang. The Romanian prime minister and the Chinese premier appreciated highly the results achieved in the multilateral development of collaboration between the two countries. They pointed out the decisive role the summit dialogue and the understandings and decisions agreed on during the interviews between Nicolae Ceausescu and the party and state leaders of the People's China play for the permanent expansion of collaboration between the two parties, countries, and peoples, for dynamizing Romanian-Chinese relations in the most varied planes. The sides highlighted the mutual wish to further deepen this collaboration in the interest of socialist construction in the two countries, of the general cause of socialism, understanding, and peace in the world.

During the talks the sides informed each other about their achievements in the implementation of economic and social development programs in the two countries and of the tasks set for the ensuing period.

Special attention has been paid to analyzing the stage attained in the materialization of the summit decisions regarding the strengthening of Romanian-Chinese relations, and to looking into the ways to and prospects of developing bilateral, colaboration, particularly of expanding the economic cooperation and widening mutual deliveries of goods.

The sides highlighted that the results achieved so far in Romanian-Chinese collaboration and the industrial potential of the two countries create conditions for bilateral economic relations to be amplified and diversified at a faster rate. The need was underscored for both sides to make steady efforts with a view to achieving, as of this year, a more powerful growth of economic exchanges, in keeping with the understandings covenanted during the official friendship visit President Nicolae Ceausescu and Mme Elena Ceausescu paid to the People's Republic of China in October 1985 to guarantee the fulfillment of the collaboration targets set for the current five-year period.

In this respect, concrete ways and means were brought to the fore to expand industrial cooperation and production specialization, especially for the long term, in coal, crude, and other raw materials extraction; machine building; power engineering equipment; and other areas of mutual interest.

Opinions were also exchanged on aspects of current international political life.

The talks, which were held in a warm, friendly atmosphere, were attended by Comrades Ion Dinca, first deputy prime minister of the government; Alexandru Necula, minister of electrical engineering; Traian Pop, deputy foreign minister; Paula Prioteasa, deputy minister at the Ministry of Foreign Trade and International Cooperation; and Lucianu Dragut, secretary of the State Council, as well as counsellors and experts.

On the Chinese side, the talks were attended by comrades Lu Dong, chairman of the State Economic Commission; Qian Gichen, deputy foreign minister; Wang Pinqing, deputy minister of economic relations and foreign trade; and Bao Tong, deputy chairman of the State Committee for Restructuring of the Economic System, as well as counsellors and experts.

Also in attendance were Angelo Miculescu, the ambassador of the SR of Romania in Beijing, and Yu Hongliang, the PRC ambassador in Bucharest.

[Text] Bucharest AGERPRES 5/7/1986 -- Nicolae Ceausescu, general secretary of the Romanian Communist Party, president of the Socialist Republic of Romania, met again and continued talks with Zhao Ziyang, member of the Standing Committee of the Political Bureau of the CC of the Chinese Communist Party, premier of the State Council of the People's Republic of China. The talks -- which continued in the same atmosphere of warm friendship, understanding and mutual esteem -- were attended by Constantin Dascalescu, member of the Executive Political Committee of the CC of the RCP, prime minister, Ion Dinca, member of the Executive Political Committee of the CC of the RCP, first deputy prime minister, Ilie Vaduva, minister of foreign affairs, Paula Prioteasa, deputy minister of foreign trade and international economic cooperation, Mihai Paraluta, deputy chairman of the State Planning Committee, Angelo Miculescu, Romania's ambassador in Beijing.

Attended were also Lu Dong, minister of state in charge of the State Economic Commission, Qian Qichen, deputy minister of foreign affiars, Want Pinqing, deputy minister of economic relations and foreign trade, Bao Tong, deputy chairman of the State Commission of Revamping the Economic System, Yu Hongliang, ambassador of the People's Republic of China in Bucharest.

During the new round of talks they examined the stage of the Romanian-Chinese relations as well as their paths of still more powerful development in future, in harmony with both peoples' aspirations and interests. It was assessed that the results scored in the bilateral collaboration, the experience amassed as well as the dynamic increase of the economic, scientific and technological potential of the two countries provided conditions for the growth, at ever higher rates of the economic exchanges.

Starting from the very good level of the political relations, from the possibilities at hand, from the priorities of the plans and program of socio-economic development of the Socialist Republic of Romania and the People's Republic of China, the mutual determination was expressed to ensure already this year an ever vigorous expansion of the cooperation and specialization in production, on long term, including the realization of big economic projects, to the end of fulfilling the tasks of collaboration stipulated for the current five-year period.

Emphasis was placed on the particularly important role incumbent of the Romanian-Chinese Government Commission on Economic and Technological Collaboration in the seeking out of new domains and forms of cooperation, between enterprises in the two countries included, in stepping up and diversifying the collaboration between Romania and China generally.

It was agreed that all the necessary measures be taken to translate into fact the guidelines and agreements covenanted at top level regarding a more marked development of collaboration and cooperation between the Socialist Republic of Romania and the People's Republic of China.

Nicolae Ceausescu and Zhao Ziyang pointed to the productive character of the talks they conducted in last few days and expressed their confidence that the understandings reached would contribute to an ever more powerful growth, in future, of Romanian-Chinese friendship and collaboration, to the benefit of both countries and peoples, of socialist construction in the two countries, of the cause of socialism and peace.

Toasts Made at Luncheon

AU051536 Bucharest AGERPRES in English 1446 GMT 5 Jul 86

[Text] Bucharest AGERPRES 5/7/1986 -- After a boat trip on Lake Snagov, Nicolae Ceausescu invited Zhao Ziyang for luncheon. Attending were the Romanian and Chinese officials who took part in the talks. During the luncheon, Nicolae Ceausescu and Zhao Ziyang proposed toasts.

In his speech, Nicolae Ceausescu expressed the party's and the Romanian people's satisfaction for the fine ties between the Romanian Communist Party and the Chinese Communist Party, between Romania and China. We assess your visit together with the other Chinese friends as being illustrative of those ties, yet also as an expression of our joint wish to confer new dimensions upon them in all fields. We have approached a wide range of questions, we have exchanged information on the activity of our parties and peoples in socialist construction, and I would like to express our wishes of ever greater success for socialist construction in China.

We have also tackled a wide range of international problems. We have noticed with satisfaction that our stands on the cardinal issues of the international life are identical or very close. What is essential is our common concern for disarmament and peace, for relations based on equality and mutual respect. In this area, too, we boast a fine and long experience, which gives us confidence that in future as well, our parties and peoples shall actively cooperate in the major problems of the international life, in the fight for disarmament, peace and socialism.

Today we have discussed questions of bilateral collaboration, in the economic field, more particularly. We have reached fine conclusions. Together we have asserted that we must work for the attainment of the levels we established in Beijing one year ago, and try to go beyond.

I think that the talks and the understandings reached during your visit confer auspicious prospects upon the growth of our countries' collaboration in all areas, primarily in the economic realm. That is why, I believe that your visit goes down as a major moment in the interchange of delegations and top-level visits between our parties and countries, and that it will yield substantial positive results in all fields.

I would like to raise my glass and, on this occasion, too, I would like to ask you to convey our wishes to the party and state leadership of the People's Republic of China to Comrades Hu Yaobang, Deng Xiaoping, Li Xiannian. Here is to your good health, to good collaboration between our parties and peoples, to the good health of our Chinese friends here.

In his reply, Zhao Ziyan said: My satisfaction is extremely great. I would like to thank you, Comrade Nicolae Ceausescu, for your beautiful words and high assessments con-

In his reply, Zhao Ziyan said: My satisfaction is extremely great. I wouls like to thank you, Comrade Nicolae Ceausescu for your beautiful words and high assessments concerning the ties of friendship between our parties, countries and peoples, for your appreciation and for the programe of my visit to Romaina. I had two rounds of talks with Comrade Nicolai Ceausescu. I also had talks with Constantin Dascalescu, with other Romainian comrades. I think these discussions, the talks conducted are very useful, which had made me even more confident in the further constant and stable development on multiple planes of the relations of friendship and collaboration between our parties, countries and peoples.

Through the talks conducted, through the contacts and visits we had, we have got even more convinced that the Romanian people, under the leaderhsip of the Romanian Communist Party, at head with Comrade Nicolae Ceausescu, starting from the concrete conditions of Romania, elaborating the country's own development lines and directions, have scored tremendous successes in building socialism in Romania. From our experience we know only too well that what you have achieved has not been an easy thing -- and we greatly appreciate these achievements.

I wish the Romanian people, under the leadership of the party and government, of Comrade Nicolae Ceausescu go along this line of development and get new and ever greater successes.

I would like to propose a toast to the development of the relations of friendship and multilateral collaboration between our parties, countries and peoples, to the prosperity and thriving of the Socialist Republic of Romania, to the Romanian people's happiness. To the health of Comrade Nicolae Ceausescu whom I wish long life. To the health of Comrade Constantin Dascalescu, of all comrades here." [quotation marks as received]

The luncheon proceeded in an atmosphere of warm friendship, mutual understanding and regard, characteristic of the Romanian-Chinese summit dialogue, of the traditional relations between our parties, countries and peoples.

GDR'S KRENZ MEETS WITH CEAUSESCU FOR TALKS

AU021835 Bucharest AGERPRES in English 1744 GMT 2 Jul 86

[Text] Bucharest AGERPRES 2/7/1986 -- Wednesday, July 2, RCP General Secretary Nicolae Ceausescu received Egon Krenz, member of the Political Bureau, secretary of the CC of the SED, vice-chairman of the Council of State of the German Democratic Republic, who, invited by the CC of the RCP, visited Romania. The guest conveyed to Nicolae Ceausescu a cordial salute and best wishes on behalf of Erich Honecker, general secretary of the CC of the SED, chairman of the Council of State of the German Democratic Republic. Nicolae Ceausescu thanked and, in turn, addressed Erich Honecker a warm salute and best wishes.

During the interview, that proceeded in a warm comradely atmosphere, the sides highlighted the ascending course of the ties of friendship and collaboration established between the RCP and the SED, between Romania and the GDR, and pointed out the decisive role played by the summit interviews and talks for continuous strengthening and development of these relations. The sides also expressed the joint wish to expand in future the good relations extant in the political, economic, technical, scientific and other domains of activity, in the interest of both countries and peoples, of the socialist construction in Romania and the GDR, and of the general cause of socialism and peace in the world. The sides considered that the continuously growing economic potential of the two countries creates conditions favourable to an ever wider development of the mutualy advantageous collaboration, to an intensification of the cooperation in production, and to enhancing the volume and diversifying the trade.

In the context stress was laid on the importance of providing the best of conditions to the implementation of the targets in the long-term programme for the development of the economic, technical and scientific collaboration, of the specialization and cooperation in production between Romania and the GDR until the year 2000.

The sides also approached certain aspects of the international life. They stressed that under the current, particularly complex circumstances of the world political life action is needed to halt the arms race, to discontinue the nuclear-weapon tests and to pass on to disarmament, nuclear disarmament in the first place, to diminishing the military spending and the conventional arms, and to ensuring peace and security.

The sides pointed out the importance of stepping up efforts for solving all the states of tension and conflict, the interstate litigious problems exclusively by peaceful means, through negotiations, for a consolidation of the policy of detente, understanding, collaboration and peace in Europe and throughout the world. They underscored how important concluding in good results and concrete accords the Stockholm conference is for strengthening the interstate confidence, for the security and disarmament in the European Continent.

Ion Coman, member of the Executive Political Committee, secretary of the CC of the RCP, participated in the call. Herbert Plaschke, GDR ambassador in Bucharest, was present.

REPORTAGE ON ZHAO ZIYANG VISIT TO BELGRADE

Arrival in Belgrade

LD061025 Belgrade TANJUG Domestic Service in Serbo-Croatian 0803 GMT 6 Jul 86

[Text] Belgrade 6 Jul (TANJUG) -- Zhao Ziyang, premier of the PRC State Council, arrived this morning from Bucharest to Belgrade on a 5-day official friendly visit to Yugoslavia. At Belgrade Airport Zhao Ziyang was welcomed by FEC President Branko Mikulic. The Chinese premier was paid full military honors and, having greeted his hosts, inspected the Belgrade Garrison's guard of honor.

Mikulic and Zhao will today and the following days have talks on ways and possibilities to further promote fruitful cooperation between Yugoslavia and China. Mikulic and Zhao are expected to exchange views on the latest aspects of the internal developments of the two countries; and to devote special attention to bilateral economic cooperation, which has shown noticeable progress after a period of stagnation, but has not yet reached the satisfactory level.

During his stay in Belgrade the Chinese premier is also expected to meet other top-ranking Yugoslav party and state leaders and to examine, as he will also do with Mikulic, in addition to bilateral relations, crucial issues concerning the international scene. Yugoslav-Chinese talks will primarily focus on Yugoslav preparations for the eighth nonaligned summit in Harare, the East-West dialogue, the situation in Europe and the Mediterranean, as well as the situation in Asia. The talks will include international economic relations, as well as a wide spectrum of international issues to which the two friendly countries have similar or identical attitudes.

The Chinese delegation, led by Premier Zhao Ziyang, includes Lu Dong, minister of the State Economic Commission; Quian Quichen, deputy minister of foreign affairs; Wang Pinqing, deputy minister for foreign economic relations and trade; Bao Tong, vice minister of the State Commission for the Restructuring of Economic System; Xie Li, Chinese ambassador to the SFRY, and other officials.

Individual members of the delegation will have separate talks with their Yugoslav counterparts on the promotion of cooperation in specific fields.

The Chinese delegation will this afternoon visit the Avala Monument and lay a wreath at the Tomb of an Unknown Soldier, and afterwards at the Josip Broz Tito Memorial will also lay a wreath at the tomb of Yugoslav President Tito, who enjoyed great respect in China; and sign in the visitors' book.

The formal welcome ceremony at Belgrade airport was also attended by Dr Desimir Jevtic, Serbian Executive Council president; Dr Ibrahim Tabakovic, FEC member; Boris Muzevic, LCY Central Committee Presidium executive secretary; Aleksandar Bakocevic, Belgrade Assembly president; Budimir Loncar, deputy federal secretary for foreign affairs; Zoran Miskovic, FEC general secretary; and other officials. Zvone Dragan, ambassador of the SFRY in Beijing, and Xie Li, Chinese ambassador in Belgrade, were also present.

After the official talks starting this afternoon FEC President Branko Mikulic will tonight give formal dinner in honor of Premier Zhao Ziyang, during which the two premiers will exchange toasts.

Views Bilateral Relations

LD061031 Belgrade TANJUC in English 0921 GMT 6 Jul 86

[Text] Belgrade July 6 (TANJUG) -- Friendly relations and cooperation between China and Yugoslavia are based on the principles of independence, autonomy, mutual respect and non-interference into internal affairs, said Chinese Premier Zhao Ziyang on his arrival on an official visit to Yugoslavia today.

Assessing that relations and cooperation have a solid foundation and a broad perspective, Zhao pointed out that China attaches great importance to the development of friendly relations with Yugoslavia. [Word indistinct] invest further efforts for a long-term, stable and comprehensive development of bilateral relations and cooperation, said Zhao.

The Chinese premier also added that his exchange of views with Yugoslav officials will include international questions of interest to both sides and concrete measures aimed at further development of bilateral relations.

The objective of my visit is to get acquainted with Yugoslavia's experience in socialist development suited to its specific conditions, said Zhao.

'Very Cordial' Talks With Mikulic

LD070851 Belgrade TANJUG Domestic Service in Serbo-Croatian 1940 GMT 6 Jul 86

[Text] Belgrade, 6 Jul (TANJUG) --Yugoslavia and the People's Republic of China are implementing successful bilateral cooperation which should be improved further. This was the joint assessment expressed this afternoon during the talks between Branko Mikulic, Federal Executive Council president, and Zhao Ziyan, premier of the PRC State Council, with colleagues in attendance.

This first round of exchanging views, conducted in the Palace of the Federation in New Belgrade, was chiefly devoted to a consideration of various aspects of bilateral relations and cooperation. A dialogue was begun there on current international questions, which will be discussed further on Tuesday when the talks continue.

Today's meeting between Mikulic and Zhao ZiYang passed in a very cordial and friendly [prijateljski] atmosphere. Both sides expressed satisfaction that the visit has materialized because it, too, will make its positive contribution to the further development of relations and cooperation. The visit in this respect .. as both the Federal Executive Council president and the Chinese premier stressed -- further stimulates the improvement of links between Yugoslavia and the PRC.
